Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 59—Mortgage—‘Attestation,’ meaning of—Evidence—Appeal—Remand, order of, when to be made.

The requirement as to attestation contained in section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, is not complied with unless the attesting witnesses are able to swear both to the act of execution and the identity of the person performing the act. [p. 3, col. 2.]

Where, therefore, the only evidence was that the attesting witnesses were on one side of a parda and the executant of the deed, a parda-nashin lady, on the other, that her son took the deed behind the parda, returned with it bearing a signature purporting to be hers, and said it had been signed by her, and that the witnesses thereupon attested:

Held, that the terms of the Statute had not been complied with and that the mortgage was void. [p. 4, col. 1.]

It is an unusual course to remand for fresh evidence an appeal which has been argued, and which ought prima facie to be decided upon the materials which were before the Courts below. [p. 4, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Calcutta High Court (Mr. Justice Stephen and Mr. Justice D. Chatterjee), dated August 12, 1909, reported as 3 Ind. Cas. 311, reversing that of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Darbhanga, dated May 31, 1907.

FACTS.—The plaintiffs-respondents sued to recover Rs. 12,275 due on a registered mortgage-bond, dated 1893, executed by Musammāt Sharbat Koer as certificated guardian of Balmukund Das. The latter, who had since come of age, confessed judgment, but the suit was opposed by the present appellant, who had purchased the mortgaged properties in execution of a money decree and who contended inter alia that the suit was time-barred.

The Subordinate Judge found this issue in appellants' favour and dismissed the suit. His finding was based on the ground that the suit was brought more than six years after due date and the bond was not valid as creating a mortgage charge. The material part of his judgment is as follows.—

“The bond in suit is dated 23rd August 1893, and the time of repayment of the debt was stipulated to be within 6 months from the date of the bond. The time of 6 months so fixed ended on the 23rd February 1894, and from this date the period of limitation must have begun to run. To enforce the mortgage-charge created under the bond the limitation was 12 years from the due date, and to obtain a personal decree for a money-debt under the bond the limitation was 6 years from that date, and there can be no dispute about these propositions of law. The suit on the bond was instituted on the 23rd February 1906, that is to say, after a lapse of 6 years from the due date and within 12 years from it. It is evidently clear, therefore, that if the bond was not valid as creating a mortgage-charge, the entire suit of the plaintiffs would fail as being barred by limitation. The question, therefore, arises whether the bond in suit can operate as a mortgage-bond.

The defendant No. 4 contends, under section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, that the execution of the bond not having been duly attested as required by that section, it cannot operate as a mortgage bond. The executant of the bond was Sharbat Koer, the certificated guardian-mother of the defendant No. 1. Section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act provides that a mortgage can be effected only by a registered instrument signed by the mortgagor and attested by at least two witnesses. Attestation means the attestation by witnesses of the execution of the bond vide Abdul Karim v. Salimun (1).] The execution of a document means and includes the signing and sealing and delivery of it. The question is, therefore, whether the bond in suit was attested as required by the section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, as failing which the mortgage purporting to have been created by it could not be effected. The ruling reported as Tafeluddi Peada v. Mohar Ali Shaha (2) lays down 'that in order that a mortgage deed may be validly attested under section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, it must be attested by two witnesses each of whom has seen the deed executed, etc.' The plaintiffs have examined in this suit two attesting witnesses of the bond. These witnesses are Ajodhya Pershad and Jharkhandi Pershad, but both of them say in plain terms that they did not see Sharbat Koer sign the bond. Jharkhandi further says that none of the attesting witnesses of the bond saw Sharbat Koer sign the bond. The witness Ajodhya says that he did not see her (Sharbat Koer) sign the bond. From these statements it is transparently clear that the attesting witnesses did not see the bond being executed by Sharbat Koer, and this being so, no mortgage was, in view of the terms of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, effected by the bond.

The result is, therefore, that the plaintiffs have failed to prove the execution of the bond as required by section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, and, consequently, the bond cannot be taken to have effected a mortgage. Now that the bond is not a mortgage-bond and the plaintiffs are not entitled to sue upon it to enforce a mortgage-charge and now that the suit to enforce a money-debt is out of time having been brought after a lapse of 6 years from the due date, the whole suit on the bond is barred by limitation."

On appeal the High Court (Stephen and D. Chatterjee, JJ.*) reversed this decision and decreed the suit. They held that there was due attestation of the bond. "To hold otherwise," they said, "would be to upset what we believe is a frequent practice in cases of the execution of deeds by pardanashin ladies, and in many cases to make attestation of their signatures almost impossible."

Hence this appeal.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. C., (with him Mr. Dube) for the Appellant.—The bond here was not duly attested: no one saw the pardanashin lady Sharbat Koer sign. To have a valid mortgages in India two witnesses at least must see the executant sign: Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Rorthan (3).

[Mr. Dunne, K. C.—The effect of that judgment has been much whittled down in a later case.]

The subsequent case is Padarath Halwai v. Ram Nrain Upadhia (4).

There it was found that the witnesses had seen the actual hand of the lady signing and recognised her voice. The facts here are widely different. (He was stopped.)

this precise point was raised; it arose incidentally on a question of limitation; the debt was time barred unless covered by a mortgage. There is evidence that the lady executed and that witnesses were present; only they were on one side of the parda and she on the other.

[SIR W. PHILLIMORE.—If the document went in blank and came out signed, and no one else was there but the lady, and the son said he did not sign, it might be sufficient.]

I submit I am entitled to a remand on account of the change in the authorities.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—The second case may be supported by saying the witnesses who attested did see they saw the hand and heard the voice.]

I submit Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Rowthen (3) only lays down that an attesting witness must be present at the execution itself, as distinguished from one who receives an acknowledgment afterwards. Sight only comes in from English cases, where there are no pardanashins.

[SIR W. PHILLIMORE.—Haven't you got an affidavit?]

No.

[VISCOUNT HALDANE.—Ald we must take the facts as you have them. It is your own witness: he says what the son told him.]

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—On the evidence the case only be decided as it was decided by the Subordinate Judge.]

[SIR W. PHILLIMORE.—Your application is in the air.]

When the appeal was heard by the High Court in 1909 there had been a case which held it was not necessary you should see a pardanashin woman sign.

[SIR W. PHILLIMORE.—In the former case the point had not been discussed in the Court below.]

JUDGMENT.

VISCOUNT HALDANE.—This appeal arises out of a suit which was brought by one Ishri Pershad and others to enforce an instrument of mortgage, dated in 1893, against the present appellants and others. The whole question before their Lordships turns, in the first instance, upon the validity of the instrument of mortgage which is sought to be enforced. It is argued on behalf of the appellants that the mortgage was invalid because it was not executed in the manner rendered necessary by section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. Section 59 enacts that: "Where the principal money sum secured is Rs. 100 or upwards, a mortgage can be effected only by a registered instrument signed by the mortgagor, and attested by at least two witnesses." Now the question is: What is meant by the word "attested"? In the present case, all that is proved is that the mortgage was executed under circumstances which their Lordships will state very shortly. It was granted by a lady called Musammot Sharbat Koer, who was the guardian of her son Balmukund Das, and she executed the mortgage on his behalf. She was a pardanashin lady, and the account given by the respondents' own witnesses of what happened was this: She was behind the parda when the document was taken to her for signature; none of the witnesses saw her sign it; her son came from behind the parda and said that it had been signed by her. That was all. The question is whether the witnesses who appended their names under these circumstances attested the document in accordance with the provisions of section 59. Now at one time there seems to have been a good deal of difference of opinion as to what "attested" meant. It will be observed that the words are not "attested and acknowledged," as is the case in some Statutes, but "attested" only. At the time this appeal was decided by the High Court, this Board had not decided the case of Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Rowthan (3). In that case it was held, settling the law as to the interpretation of the words to which their Lordships have referred in section 59, that the section is not complied with if the witnesses have not been present at the execution of the instrument and have only attested on the subsequent acknowledgment of the signature. After that there was another case brought before this Board, which was relied on by the respondents as bringing the point in the present case, at any rate, much nearer. It was a case of Padarath Halwai v. Ram Narain Upadhia (4). The head-note is as follows:—

GANESHI LAL v. BABU LAL.

"A mortgage deed purported to be executed by two pardanashin ladies. It appeared from the evidence of the attesting witnesses that they saw the hand of each executant when she signed the deed, and that, although they could not see the faces of the executants, they heard them speak and recognised their voices."

That is a very different case from a case of attesting on mere subsequent acknowledgment. It is a case in which the witnesses actually saw the hand of each lady, and in which they recognised her voice, and it is plain that, in the case of witnesses who were acquainted with the individuality of the lady concerned, they might very well recognise the hand which guided the pen and the voice sufficiently to be able to swear to the identity of the person who was performing the act. But that is a very different case from the one before their Lordships upon the present occasion, where, not only was the actual attestation not witnessed by a hand put out from behind the curtain, but the voice was not heard, and what the witnesses went on was, in the main, the fact that the son came to them and said: "Here is the deed which my mother has executed." That, in their Lordships' opinion, is not enough to satisfy the terms of the Statute. The mortgage is, therefore, void, and the appeal must succeed.

It has been suggested that the appeal should be referred back to the Court below, on the view which their Lordships take of the law (and it is a view which may be said to have been a somewhat novel one at the time of the decision of the High Court in Calcutta, given in 1909, three years before the first decision of the Judicial Committee to which their Lordships have referred), for the purpose of framing an issue to see whether it could be brought within the later decision about pardanashin ladies. But it is obvious that the facts, as proved here, fall far short and very remote from what was under consideration in the case to which reference has been made, and their Lordships see no justification for taking the unusual course of referring back an appeal which has been argued, and which ought prima facie to be decided upon the materials which were before the Courts below.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be allowed, and that the respondents should pay to the appellants their costs here and in the Courts below.

Hindu Law—Partition—Property included by mistake—Discovery of mistake—Loss, apportionment of—Partition, whether can be re-opened.

Where parties arrive at a partition either by agreement, or by a decree, which is only a more solemn and binding form of agreement, there is an implied and mutual right of indemnity or contribution in respect of any paramount claim by a third person which throws the burden of a loss not contemplated in the partition proceedings unfairly upon one of the parties. If the original decision has been arrived at by a common mistake, which in the case of a decree has been adopted by the Court making the decree, the mistake can be set right pro tanto, i.e., the partition can be opened up in so far as is necessary to apportion the loss which arises out of the discovery of the mistake. JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—This is an appeal by a plaintiff whose suit for partition has been dismissed by the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dehra Dun and Mussoorie. One of the pleas taken in the written statement was that that Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit at all. So far as we can gather from the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, he seems to have found that he had no jurisdiction to try the whole suit but had jurisdiction to try part of it, and he has, therefore, proceeded to try what he regards as a preliminary question sufficient to determine that portion of the suit which he conceived himself to have jurisdiction to try. The conclusion we have come to is that the Court below either had jurisdiction to try the entire suit, or had no jurisdiction to try any part of it. Further, we are of opinion that the decision pronounced with regard to a portion of the plaintiff's claim proceeds upon erroneous principles of law and is calculated to make it impossible for the plaintiff in any event to litigate a possibly just claim any further. We must, therefore, set aside the decree of the Court below and remand the case to that Court under the provisions of Order XLI, rule 23 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In so doing, however, we must make it quite clear that we do not feel able on the materials before us finally to determine the question of jurisdiction. We leave that question still open and the Court below, after receiving this order of remand, should again take that point into consideration at once and pass appropriate orders, according as to whether it finds that it has or that it has not jurisdiction to try the suit.

The said suit arises out of the following state of facts. Ganeshi Lal the plaintiff and Babu Lal the principal defendant are brothers. They were admittedly up to the year 1910 members of a joint undivided Hindu family. In the year 1910 Babu Lal brought a suit for partition against Ganeshi Lal. The specification of the property sought to be partitioned given at the foot of the plaint sets forth a number of houses situated in the town of Pilkhna in the Meerut district, and the suit was accordingly filed in the Court of the Munsif of Ghaziabad, within whose territorial jurisdiction the said property was situated. In his defence Ganeshi Lal raised a question as to whether the plaint contained a complete specification of the property which ought to be brought under partition. He pleaded that Babu Lal and himself were the joint owners of a shop at Landhour, the Cantonment of Mussoorie, that this shop was an ancestral business carried on for the benefit of both parties, that it had not been doing well and that there were heavy liabilities attaching to the business. His written statement implies, if it does not actually state, that this shop or business at Landhour was in the possession and under the management of Ganeshi Lal, and it is suggested that Babu Lal's object in suing for the partition of the joint family property at Pilkhna, while omitting all mention of the Landhour business, was to saddle his brother Ganeshi Lal with all the liabilities of that business while taking for himself his full half share in the joint property, some of which it was contended had been purchased out of the profits of that business at a time when such profits were available. This pleading obviously raises questions of fact and of law which the Court conducting the partition would have had to determine before any decree could be passed; but as a matter of fact the case was settled by a compromise between the two brothers. The precise effect of that compromise as regards the business at Landhour is a matter of controversy in the present suit; but it is sufficient to note that its result was to partition the immoveable property at Pilkhna in a particular manner. One large house was divided between the brothers in equal shares, the eastern portion being assigned to Babu Lal and the western portion to Ganeshi Lal. Certain other houses were assigned, some to one brother and some to the other, and in respect of one house it was provided that it should continue in the joint possession of both parties. A decree was passed on the 21st of December 1910 in the terms of the compromise. In the year 1914, one Khairati Lal, a cousin of the parties, instituted a suit in which he claimed to recover possession of one-half share of the whole of the property which had been dealt with in the partition of December the 21st, 1910, alleging himself to be the owner of the same and asking that his moiety might be divided by metes and bounds from the rest and he be put into possession. This suit was contested by both the brothers, who denied that Khairati Lal had any right or title in respect of any share whatever in this property; but the suit was decreed in Khairati Lal's favour on the 3rd of February 1915. The result of this decree was that the western portion of the largest of the houses in question, that is to say, the portion which had been assigned to Ganeshi Lal at the partition of 1910, was awarded to Khairati Lal; and along with this one smaller building, described as a shop with a kuchcha house appertaining thereto, and another kuchcha built house were awarded to Khairati Lal out of the property allotted to Babu Lal in 1910. The plaintiff claims that, in consequence of the success of Khairati Lal's suit, he is entitled to re-open the question of the distribution of the joint family property, and more particularly of the immoveable property, effected at the partition of 1910.

We must take it that at that time Ganeshi Lal and Babu Lal honestly believed themselves to be the sole owners of the property in their possession which they then partitioned amongst themselves. There was, therefore, a bona fide mistake on the part of both parties to the partition, and that mistake has now become apparent and has produced inequitable results because of the success of Khairati Lal's suit. There is good authority for the proposition that under such circumstances the party to the partition who finds himself prejudiced as a consequence of the common mistake is entitled to have the question of the partition re-opened. A very clear case on this point is that of Maruti v. Rama (1). We agree with the principles laid down by the learned Judge who decided that case and we think that they apply to the case now before us. Ganeshi Lal, however, has chosen to complicate the question in two ways. He wishes to re-open, not merely the question of the division effected of the house property at Pilkhna by the partition of 1910, but also the question then raised by him as to the respective rights and liabilities of himself and his brother in connection with the business at Landhour. Believing apparently that he could do this more effectually by means of a suit instituted in the Court within whose territorial jurisdiction this Cantonment is situated, he has brought the present suit, not in the Court of the Munsif of Ghaziabad, but in that of the Subordinate Judge of Dehra Dun and Mussoorie. The question whether that Court has any jurisdiction to entertain this plaintiff depends simply on whether or not any immoveable property sought to be partitioned is situated within the territorial jurisdiction of that Court. The provisions of section 16, clause (b), of the Code of Civil Procedure are quite clear in their application to the present case and, inasmuch as the defendant Babu Lal does not live or carry on business within the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge of Dehra Dun and Mussoorie, no possible question arises as to the effect of any subsequent section of the same Code. Either the Court below had jurisdiction to entertain the whole of this suit or it had no jurisdiction to entertain it at all, and this depends on what the parties meant in that Court when they spoke of the "shop" situated at Landhour. The wording of the plaint suggests that they were speaking only of a "business," possibly carried on in a hired shop; but it has been pressed upon us on behalf of the plaintiff that this point is not made clear beyond dispute by the record as it now stands before us and that there is room for further enquiry in the Court below. The only other substantial point in the case turns on the wording of the compromise of 1910 and the decree passed in accordance therewith. We are not sure that we have all the materials before us for pronouncing a final opinion on this point and it is not advisable that we should endeavour to try this question on the merits before the question of jurisdiction has been finally determined. According to the defendant the effect of the compromise decree of 1910 was not merely to assign the business at Landhour with its assets and its liabilities, whatever these might be, entirely to the share of Ganeshi Lal; but it did this independently altogether of the partition of the joint property effected by the other portion of the compromise. Virtually the contention for the defendants is that the decision arrived at between the parties on their own compromise in December 1910 amounted to a decision that this Landhour business did not form part of the assets of the joint family but was entirely a matter for which Ganeshi Lal alone was responsible. This is a question which may yet have to be determined between the parties and it is possible that further evidence may be required before a decision can be pronounced. The point seems worth mentioning in order to make it clear that, in saying that Ganeshi Lal is, in our opinion, entitled to have a re-partition of the joint family property made in consequence of the success of Khairati Lal's suit, we are not pronouncing any opinion one way or the other as to whether the assets or the liabilities of the Landhour business should or should not be taken into account in connection with such re-partition. Our order, therefore, is that we remand this case to the Court below under Order XLI, rule 23, for re-trial subject to the remarks we have made. We leave all costs of this appeal to be costs in the cause.

WALSH, J.—I entirely agree. I only wish to add one word on the point arising on the merits, which was substantially argued before us. I agree with the decision in Maruti v. Rama (1), but I think that there is danger in stating as a general principle that proof of such matter entitles the party to re-partition. I do not think that it entitles him to open up the previous decision except in so far as is necessary to apportion the loss which arises out of the new fact. The right is based simply upon this principle, that where parties arrive at a partition either by agreement or by a decree (which after all is only a more solemn and binding form of agreement), there is an implied and mutual right of indemnity or contribution in respect of any paramount claim by a third person which throws the burden of a loss not contemplated in the partition proceedings unfairly upon one of the parties. If the original decision has been arrived at by a common mistake, which, of course, in the case of a decree is adopted by the Court making the decree, the mistake can be set right pro tanto.

JOGENDRA CHANDRA KUNDU—

DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 35 (1)—Execution—Application for actual possession, maintainability of, after dismissal of execution case granting formal possession—Partition suit.

A decree-holder in a partition suit, who has been given formal possession of the portion of the properties allotted to him in an execution case which was dismissed after the delivery of the formal possession, can maintain a fresh application in execution for actual possession of the property under sub-rule 1 of rule 35 of Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code, [p. 9, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Additional District Judge of Hoogly, dated the 22nd June 1917, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Hoogly, dated the 17th April 1916.

FACTS material to the report will appear from the following judgments of the Subordinate Judge and the Additional District Judge respectively:—

"In Partition Suit No. 109 of 1911 the decree-holder got a decree for possession of certain properties, which were allotted to his share. On 15th December 1914, the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree, and on 21st March 1915 he received formal possession of the properties and gave the usual acknowledgment. After that the execution case was dismissed on part satisfaction on 14th April 1915. After the disposal of the execution case the decree-holder made an application in that case to be put into actual possession of the properties. On that application the following order was passed by my predecessor-in-office on 20th April 1915:—

'As the execution case has been disposed of after delivery of possession no steps can be taken on decree-holder's application for delivery of possession in the manner as prayed for. Hence decree-holder's application is rejected.' The decree-holder has now made a fresh application to be put into actual possession of the properties under sub-rule 1 of rule 35 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, and his application has been registered as Execution Case No. 95 of 1915. On behalf of the judgment-debtors an application has been made under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code objecting to the decree-holder's application to be put into actual possession of the properties. It is contended on behalf of the judgment debtors that the decree holder, having obtained delivery of possession in the previous execution proceedings and given an acknowledgment to that effect, is precluded from making a fresh application for delivery of possession. It is also contended that the Court has no power to order delivery of actual possession to the decree-holder, that the present application is barred by reason of the decree-holder's previous application to be put into actual possession of the properties having been rejected on 20th April 1915, and that the decree-holder's only remedy is to bring a suit for recovery of khas possession of the properties. It is not denied that under the decree in the partition suit the decree holder is entitled to obtain actual possession of the properties under sub-rule 1 of rule 35 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code. Instead of actual possession formal possession was delivered to the decree-holder in the previous execution proceedings. The previous execution proceedings were, therefore, incomplete. The decree-holder is entitled to realise the full benefit of his decree, and there is nothing, in my opinion, to preclude him from obtaining actual possession under sub-rule 1 of rule 35 of Order XXI, to which he is entitled under the decree. The order of 20th April 1915 cannot be a bar to present application, as by that order it was only decided that after the disposal of the previous execution case no action could be taken in that case on the decree-holder's application to be put into actual possession of the properties. The judgment-debtor's objections are disallowed, and it is ordered that possession be delivered to the decree-holder under sub-rule 1 of rule 35 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code by removing the judgment-debtors if they refuse to vacate the properties. In Miscellaneous Case No. 74 of 1915 the decree-holder shall get his costs and Rs. 8 as Pleader's fee."

KHETHA MOHAN KUNDU v. JOGENDRA CHANDRA KUNDU.

"This is an appeal arising out of certain execution proceedings. There was a partition suit. The property was partitioned. The appellant applied for execution of the decree and was given formal possession of his portion and gave a receipt stating that he had been given possession by the affixing of a bamboo. The execution case was then dismissed on 14th April 1915. A few days later on 19th April 1915 the appellant applied to be put into actual possession of his portion. The Sub-Judge rejected the application on the ground that the execution case had been disposed of after delivery of possession and that accordingly no further steps would be taken. Later a fresh application was made for actual possession of the property under sub-rule 1 of rule 35 of Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code.

The Sub-Judge (the successor of the Sub-Judge who had passed the former order) granted the order prayed for. It is now argued on appeal that after the delivery of formal possession no further execution proceedings could be taken; that the only course then open to appellant was to bring a regular suit for possession. The Court having once delivered possession, it is said, exhausted its powers. So far as the Code goes, this would clearly appear not to be the case. It had only given possession by affixing a bamboo. Rule 35 confers the further power of ousting people. It is, however, argued that it has been established by judicial decisions that after formal possession has been delivered nothing more can be done in execution of a decree. Mohamed Elakee Buksh v. Kally Mohun Mookhopadhyaya (1), Lokessur Koer v. Purgun Roy (2), Shama Charan Chatterji v. Madhub Chandra Mookerji (3), Coventry v. Tulshi Prasad (4) and Hari Mohan Shaha v. Baburali (5) are cited. In none of these cases were the circumstances identical with those obtaining here. Again these are all decisions of the time before the present Code of Civil Procedure came into existence. Under the circumstances of this case it seems to me it would be a distinct hardship for the appellant to have to bring a separate suit to get separate possession of the portion of the property allotted to him by the partition decree.

ABDULLA V. NABIA.

The learned Pleader for the respondent refers to the new section 151 of the present Civil Procedure Code, and I think it is a case when that section may well be invoked should it indeed be necessary, which I doubt.

It is argued again on behalf of the appellant that the principle of res judicata applies in execution proceedings. Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (6) and Murlidhar Supal v. Nursingh Das (7) are referred to. These cases relate to entirely different circumstances. I do not think the Sub-Judge's order of 20th April 1915 raises the bar of res judicata here.

On the whole I see no adequate reason to disagree with the order of the learned Subordinate Judge which is appealed against.

The appeal is dismissed. Costs Pleader's fee Rs. 8."

Babu Bivan Kumar Mukherjee, for the Appellants.—As the execution case was dismissed after delivery of formal possession no fresh application for execution could be maintained. The decree-holder's remedy was to bring a regular suit for getting actual possession of the portion of the properties allotted to him. The execution proceedings were completed by the delivery of formal possession on a previous application for execution so that nothing remained for the execution Court to execute after the grant of delivery of formal possession. As between parties to the suit, formal or symbolical possession is equivalent to actual possession. Hence what the decree-holder got on his formal application for execution was actual possession, though that might be symbolical possession as against persons who are not parties to the suit. [See Mohamad Elshee Buksh v. Kally Mohun Mookhopadhy (1), Louessur Koer v. Purgun Roy (2), Shama Charan Chatterji v. Madhub Chandra Mookerji (3), Coventry v. Tulshi Prasad (4) and Hari Mohan Shaha v. Baburahi (5).]

[RICHARDSON, J.—The Calcutta case decided the question of limitation.]

Moreover, as the previous application for execution asked for actual possession, but the execution case was dismissed after delivery of formal possession the decision, of the Court in that execution case cannot be re-opened between the same parties in a subsequent stage of the same execution proceedings. That decision would operate as res judicata under the ruling of the Privy Council in Mungul Pershad Dichit v. Grija Kant Lahiri (6). See also Murlidhar Supal v. Nursingh Das (7), Raja Thakur Barham v. Ananta Ram Marwari (8), Ballabh Shankar v. Narain Singh (9), Nityananda Gantayet v. Gajapati Vasudeva Deru (10) and Lakshmanan Chetti v. Kuttayan Chetti (11).

Babus Manmatha Nath Mukerjee and Satindra Nath Mukerjee, for the Respondent, were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal must be dismissed. We are satisfied that the judgment of the Court below is correct. The respondent is entitled to the costs of this appeal. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

ABDULLA v. NABIA.

Dodhala, Tahsil Nawanshehr, Jullundur District—Adoption of sister's son, validity of—Special custom—Burden of proof—Acquiescence, what amounts to.

Among Gorewaha Rajputs of Mauza Dodhala in the Nawanshehr Tahsil of Jullundur District, adoption of a sister's son is not allowed by custom. [p. 10, col. 2.]

If a party pleads a custom opposed to the generally established custom prevailing in the community to which he belongs, the onus lies on him to prove that special custom and a solitary instance is insufficient to discharge that onus. [p. 10, col. 2.]

One M. adopted his sister's son some 16 years before his death. His entire property was mutated in the adoptee's name in 1886, who managed it, mortgaged a part of it and gifted away a plot. In 1885 a collateral of M. and the plaintiffs died and his estate was mutated not only in the names of the plaintiffs but in the name of the adoptee also. M. died in 1896 leaving the adoptee and a widow. The widow died in 1913 a few months after which the plaintiffs brought a suit for possession:

Held, that although it was true that the collaterals could have instituted a suit for declaration that the alleged adoption should not affect their reversionary rights, they were not bound to do so, as the succession did not open to them until the death of the widow and that, therefore, their allowing the adoptee to remain in possession of the property and to deal with part of it did not prejudice their right of succession and their acts did not amount to acquiescence in the adoption. [p. 10, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Jullundur, dated the 23rd May 1914, reversing that of the Subordinate, Judge, 1st Class, Jullundur, dated the 17th November 1913, dismissing the claim.

The Hon'ble Paudit Shen Narain, for the Appellant.

Mr. Bihari Lal and Sheikh Umar Bakhsh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to the ancestral estate of one Mude Khan, a Gorewaha Rajput of Mauza Dodhala, in the Nawanshehr Tahsil, of the Jullundur District, who died on 19th January 1896. His widow Musammatt Bholi survived him for many years and died in January 1913. Upon her death the plaintiffs, who are the collaterals of Mude Khan, brought the suit, out of which this appeal arises, for possession of the estate; and the questions for determination are whether the defendant Rahmat Khan, Mude Khan's sister's son, was validly adopted, and whether the collaterals have acquiesced in his adoption.

The factum of the adoption has been found in favour of the defendant, but on the question of validity the learned Divisional Judge has held that the defendant, on whom the onus rested, has failed to establish a custom authorizing a Gorewaha Rajput to adopt his sister's son. This finding has not been seriously contested by the learned Advocate for the appellant. It is beyond dispute that the general presumption is against the adoption of a sister's son, and this presumption has not been rebutted by the evidence upon the record. Only one instance, viz., of the adoption of one Ghulam Nabi by Sube Khan, has been cited in this connection, but it is clear that a solitary instance is insufficient to discharge the onus. We accordingly concur with the learned Divisional Judge in holding that the defendant has failed to prove the validity of his adoption. As regards the plea of acquiescence, the facts relied upon by the defendant are set out in extenso in the judgment of the learned Divisional Judge (vide page 8 of the printed paper-book); and after hearing the learned Counsel on both sides, we are not prepared to dissent from the conclusion reached by the learned Judge. The adoption took place about 15 or 16 years before the death of Mude Khan, and it appears that his entire estate was mutated in favour of Rahmat Khan in April 1886. The latter consequently managed the property, mortgaged part of it, and gifted a small plot to one Sardar Ali. The mortgage was subsequently redeemed by him, and the gift is still open to objection by the plaintiffs. It is true that the collaterals could have instituted a suit for a declaration that the alleged adoption should not affect their reversionary rights, but it is clear that they were not bound to do so. The succession did not open out to them until the death of Musammatt Bholi in 1913, and within a few months of that event they instituted the present suit for possession. In these circumstances we do not think that the fact that they allowed Rahmat Khan to remain in possession of the property and to deal with part of the estate can prejudice their right of succession. It appears that in 1885 one Badhe Khan, a collateral of Mude Khan and the plaintiffs, died, and that the deceased's estate was mutated not only in favour of the plaintiffs, but also in favour of Rahmat Khan. Now, it is manifest that the plaintiffs had no right to possess the share of the estate belonging to Mude Khan, and could not, therefore, prevent the latter from having the mutation with respect to that share effected in favour of Rahmat Khan. Rahmat Khan having once been recorded as a co-sharer with the plaintiffs of Budhe Khan's estate, the joint mortgage by all the co-sharers can be easily explained, and the same remark applies to the sale transaction effected by them subsequent to the mortgage. It is also contended that the plaintiffs joined Rahmat Khan in sinking a well; but that act may be attributable to the fact that Rahmat Khan was in possession of Mude Khan's land, and it is not an unreasonable explanation that his assistance was sought for in his capacity as the agent of Musammatt Bholi. The question of acquiescence is not free from doubt, but considering that the learned Divisional Judge has duly examined all the relevant facts, we do not think that there is any adequate reason for holding that his conclusion is incorrect.

Accordingly we confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 102—'Cognizable,' meaning of—Provincial Small Causes Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 35, effect of amendment of 1914 upon—Suit for value of trees, carried away—Trial as regular suit—Appeal, second, maintainability of—Amendment of Art. 35, before filing of second appeal, effect of—Interpretation of Statutes, principles of—Retrospective effect.

A suit to recover the value of trees cut and carried away was filed in the Small Cause Court and was afterwards transferred to the regular file as a question of title was involved in the suit. Against the decree of the trial Court there was an appeal to the District Court, and from the decree of the latter Court a second appeal was filed in the High Court. It was objected that, under section 102, Civil Procedure Code, no second appeal lay. It was contended in answer that as the second appeal was filed after the amendment of Article 35 of Schedule II of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act in 1914, the second appeal was maintainable.

Held, that, as the appeal was against a decree in a suit of the nature cognizable by Small Cause Courts, no second appeal lay. [p. 12, col. 1.]

The word 'cognizable' in section 102, Civil Procedure Code, is restricted to the nature of the proceeding prior to decree and not to its character at the time of the second appeal. [p. 12, col. 1.]

The principle of law that a right to prefer an appeal, being a vested right cannot be affected by legislation, is equally applicable to parties who have acquired a right to a judgment being regarded as final and conclusive. [p. 12, cols. 1 & 2.]

An enactment, which deliberately withdraws certain classes of cases from the jurisdiction of Small Cause Courts, cannot be said to declare the law and does not have a retrospective effect. [p. 12, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 189 of 1914, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Pattukottai, in Original Suit No. 713 of 1912.

Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Furushottama Aiyar, for Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection has been taken by Mr. Furushottama Aiyar to the maintainability of the second appeal, and we are of opinion that the objection should prevail.

The suit was for Rs. 50 and odd for cutting and carrying away trees. It was originally instituted in the Small Cause Side of the Tanjore Subordinate Judge's Court. As a question of title was involved in the determination of the claim, the plaint was returned for presentation to the District Munsif's Court at Pattukottai. The suit was tried by that Court and an appeal was heard therefrom by the District Judge. This second appeal is against the decree of the District Judge.

SUBHAMANIA AIYAR v. NAMASIVAYA ASARI.

The suit as originally filed was not exempted from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court. An amending Act was passed in 1914, by which a new clause (11) was added to Article 35 of the II Schedule of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act. Under this new clause, if the suit were to be filed now, there can be no question that the Small Cause Court will have no jurisdiction to try it. The point for determination is whether this amendment affects the operation of section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under that section no second appeal lies in any suit of the nature cognisable by Small Cause Courts, if the value of the subject-matter does not exceed Rs. 500. In the present case all the disqualifying conditions are present. Mr. Rajah Aiyar contended that the nature of the suit must be considered with reference to the date on which the second appeal is presented and not with reference to the date on which the suit was filed; and as the amending Act was passed in 1914, before the second appeal was filed, the character of the suit has changed so as to admit of a second appeal being presented. This ingenious argument ignores the consideration that the appeal is against the decree which has been passed in the suit of the nature cognisable by Small Cause Courts. The word 'cognisable' must be restricted to the nature of the proceeding prior to decree and not to its character at the time of the second appeal.

The next contention of the learned Vakil was that the right of preventing an appeal being filed is not a vested right. It was held in Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving (1) that the right to prefer an appeal being a vested right, it will not be affected by a new legislation. We think that the principles of that decision applies to the present case. The right claimed by one party to take up a matter to an appellate tribunal is no more sacred, than the right given to the other party to prevent the right of finality attaching to the decree obtained by him not being disturbed. We think that the statement of law by the Judicial Committee is equally applicable to parties who have acquired a right to a judgment being regarded as final and conclusive.

The next contention was that the matter is one of procedure. Reliance was placed upon the decision in Attorney General v. Theobald (2). That was a case in which a declaratory enactment was construed. It was held that, where the Legislature declares the meaning of a particular expression, that must be deemed to have been the meaning from the outset. In the present case, the Legislature has deliberately withdrawn certain cases from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court. This is not a case of declaring the law but of the making of a new law. To such an enactment the statement of law contained in the judgment of Lopes, L. J., in Pulborough School Board Election, In re (3) is peculiarly applicable: "It is a well recognised principle in the construction of Statutes that they operate only on cases and facts which come into existence after the Statutes were passed unless a retrospective effect is clearly intended.

"This principle of construction is especially applicable when the enactment to which a retrospective effect is sought to be given would prejudicially affect vested rights or the legal character of past transactions."

Mr. Rajah Aiyar next referred to cases which have held that there is no vested right in having a case tried by a tribunal which has been deprived of jurisdiction by a subsequent enactment. Such a right has been held by Lord Monaghan in Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving (1) as pertaining to the province of processual law, and not to vested right, because so long as there has been no trial, no party has any right to say that the mode of trial or the procedure for trying it shall not be changed. These observations apply to Vajechand v. Nandram (4) as well.

For these reasons we are of opinion that no second appeal lies in this case and we reject it with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

TEUNON, J.—These two appeals arise out of a partition suit, No. 1913 being preferred by the plaintiff and No. 1957 by defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The question in the former is whether the appellant is entitled to her share ($\frac{1}{4}$ th) in plot No. 1 of the schedule to the plaint, being a plot of Bhadrason or homestead measuring some $1\frac{1}{2}$ bighas in area, and the question in the latter appeal is whether she is entitled to the same share in the ancestral house of 3 rooms standing on the said plot.

The plot appertains to Taluk No. 2510 and the contention of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 is that by a kobala, dated 7th Asar 1315, the plaintiff sold to one Satish Chandra Bhattacharjee (the son of plaintiff's father-in-law's sister) her interest in this Taluk and, therefore, in the plot now in question. The plaintiff on the other hand says that the Bhadrason and the Bhadrason Bati were excluded from the sale which covered only the agricultural lands.

In the Court of first appeal the case proceeded on the assumption that the provisions of section 92 excluding oral evidence applied to the case. But that is not so; defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are no parties to the deed. Satish Chandra Bhattacharjee the vendee has in this Court been made a party to the suit and he has filed a written statement supporting the plaintiff and disclaiming all interest in the Bhadrason and the house thereon. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are admittedly not entitled to the plaintiff's share in the property now in question and Satish being now a party it would be possible in the case to direct that the $\frac{1}{4}$ th share in question should be allotted to the plaintiff and Satish jointly. But this, in our opinion, is unnecessary; Satish's written statement, the improbability of a sale by the plaintiff of her house, and the documents, and other matters relied on by the Subordinate Judge justify us in holding that the property in question, being regarded as a separate parcel, was excluded from the sale to Satish.

In this view No. 1957 is dismissed with costs. The decree of the first Appellate Court in respect of the Bhadrason is reversed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge restored. Appeal No. 1913, is, therefore, decreed with costs.

NEWBOULD, J.—I agree.

The Court of a District Judge has no power to transfer suits or petitions filed in a Court subordinate to it to another subordinate Court newly established thereafter, which is only empowered to hear cases presented to it from a specified date after its establishment. [p. 15, col. 1.]

The latter Court is not a Court ‘competent to try and dispose of the same’ within the meaning of clause (1) (b) (ii) of section 24, Civil Procedure Code, nor can it be regarded as ‘successor’ to the Court which originally entertained the suit or petition within the meaning of Order XLVII, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 14, col. 2; p. 15, col. 1.]

The Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam issued notice, on a review petition presented to him, on 19th November 1915, to the opposite party to appear on 27th November 1915. The petition not having been disposed of on the latter date, the District Judge transferred the petition to a new Small Cause Court established at Kumbakonam on 1st January 1916 with jurisdiction to try all Small Cause suits from that date.

Held, that the order of transfer was ultra vires. [p. 15, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1897, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of Small Causes, Kumbakonam, in Original Petition No. 24 of 1916 (Original Petition No. 2121 of 1915, in Small Cause Suit No. 1373 of 1915, on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kumbakonam).

Mr. K. Aravamuda Ayyangar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was originally instituted on the Small Cause Side of the Subordinate Judge’s Court at Kumbakonam. He pronounced judgment on the 27th October 1915. A petition for review was presented to him on the 19th November 1915. He directed the issue of notice to the opposite party on the 27th November. On the 1st January 1916 a Special Small Cause Court was established at Kumbakonam which was invested with jurisdiction to try all small cause suits within a specified area. The High Court issued a circular, R.O.C. No. 3656 of 1916, dated 31st October 1916, in which it was stated that the Special Small Cause Judge alone shall have jurisdiction to hear all small cause suits instituted after the 1st January 1916. Apparently on this circular the District Judge transferred the review petition from the Kumbakonam Subordinate Court to the new Small Cause Court. The question for consideration is whether this transfer was right.

This petition was presented by the plaintiff and as I found that the opposite side was not represented before me, I requested Mr. Madhavan Nair to help me, as a question of considerable importance regarding the procedure was raised by the point taken before me. I am very much indebted to Mr. Madhavan Nair for his assistance.

Mr. Madhavan Nair supports the order of the District Judge by a reference to section 24, clause (1) (b) (ii). He concedes that the High Court circular can only affect cases which were instituted after the 1st January 1916. But he argues that the District Judge had power to withdraw the case from the file of the Subordinate Judge and to direct its disposal by any Court subordinate to the District Court which was competent to try and dispose of small cause suits. The difficulty arises in construing the words ‘competent to try and dispose of the same’ in clause (1) (b) (ii) of section 24. There can be no doubt that the Special Small Cause Judge, according to the circular of the High Court, was only competent to hear cases which were filed after the new Court was established. Order XLVII, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code provides that after notice has been issued by the Judge on an application for review, the successor of that Judge is competent to dispose of it. Mr. Madhavan Nair’s contention is this—that the Special Small Cause Judge is the successor of all those Judges who exercised Small Cause Court’s jurisdiction within the limit which was subsequently assigned to him and, therefore, he became the successor of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam and as notice was directed to be issued by the Subordinate Judge in respect of this matter, the new Small Cause Court Judge must be taken to be a successor competent to dispose of the review petition, within the meaning of section 24 (b) (ii). As pointed out by the learned Vakil for the petitioner, it seems to me that the new Small Cause Court Judge should be regarded as the successor of the existing Small Cause Court Judges, only in respect of cases filed after the 1st January 1916. Having regard to the circular wording of the High Court circular he cannot be regarded as the successor of the Small Cause Court Judges in respect of matters which were pending on their file at the time when the new Court was established. There can be no doubt on the question of convenience and justice that the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam would be the proper person to dispose of this review petition. He is cognisant of all the facts which transpired before him, and it would be very inconvenient that a new Judge who had nothing to do with the original trial should be asked to hear the review petition. The observations of the Judicial Committee in Ram Nath v. Gowdur (1) support this view. I have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the order of the District Judge transferring the case from the file of the Kumbakonam Subordinate Court to the new Small Cause Judge is ultra vires. On this ground, I must reverse the order in this case and direct the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam to dispose of the petition on the merits. Costs to abide the result.

Order reversed.

Provincial Small Causes Courts Act (IX of 1887) as amended by Act VI of 1914, Sch. II, Art. 35, cl. (ii)—Suit for value of paddy wrongfully and forcibly taken away whether cognisable by Small Cause Court.

A suit to recover the value of paddy alleged to have been forcibly, wrongfully and maliciously cut and taken away by the defendant from the possession of the plaintiff is not cognisable by a Court of Small Causes. [p. 16, col. 1.]

Rule against the order of the Small Cause Court Judge, Barisal.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Abinash Chandra Ghosh, for the Petitioner.—The defendant is the petitioner and the suit is for the recovery of the price of paddy alleged to have been wrongfully and forcibly cut and taken away by the defendant from the land in possession of the plaintiff. So, under clause (ii), Article 35, of the Second Schedule of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act, as amended by Act VI of 1914, the suit is not maintainable in a Court of Small Causes. See Helaluddi Molla v. Abdul Gafur Molla (1), Ram Prasad Pramanik v. Sricharan Mandal (2), Adu Malo v. Nagar Bashi Malo (3).

[TENNON, J.—Was the objection as to jurisdiction of the Court taken in the lower Court?]

Yes. In the written statement it is stated that the suit is not maintainable in the Court of Small Causes. Even if the objection as to jurisdiction was not specifically taken, that would not give jurisdiction to the Court to try the suit when the law expressly takes away such suits from the cognizance of the Court of Small Causes. It has been held in many cases that where there is a total want of jurisdiction, omission or failure to take that objection would not vest the Court with jurisdiction.

Babu Suresh Chandra Talukdar, for the Opposite Party.—The objection as to the jurisdiction of the Court not having been specifically taken in the Court below, the decision of the Court below should not be interfered with in revision.

[TENNON, J.—Under the Amending Act VI of 1914 the suit is not triable by a Court of Small Causes.]

Then the plaint may be returned to the plaintiff for presentation to the proper Court. But the petitioner shall not be entitled to costs, as the objection now raised was not taken in the lower Court.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is directed against a decree made by the Small Cause Court of Barisal. The plaintiff brought his suit to recover the value of paddy and his claim has been decreed to the extent of Rs. 15. His allegations in the plaint were that this paddy being in his possession the defendant had forcibly, wrongfully and maliciously cut and taken it away. On these allegations it is clear that under the Small Causes Courts Act, Second Schedule, Article 35, clause (ii), introduced into the Act by the Amending Act VI of 1914, the plaintiff's suit was one not triable by a Court of Small Causes. We, therefore, set aside the decree against which this Rule is directed and return the case to the Small Cause Court Judge in order that he may return the plaint to the plaintiff for presentation in the proper Court.

Under all the circumstances we make no order as to costs.

Decree set aside; Case returned.

No suit lies for damages for breach of an agreement by a decree-holder to give time to the judgment debtor for satisfaction of the decree where the agreement has not been certified to Court under Order XXI, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, and there is no consideration to support it. [p. 17, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Cocanada, in Appeal Suit No. 59 of 1916, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Peddapur, in Original Suit No. 648 of 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. D. Appa Rao, for the Appellant, argued that failure to obtain the Court's sanction for the adjustment out of Court only rendered the judgment-debtor liable in execution proceedings. The reporting of the agreement would bar execution, but there was an independent cause of action on the agreement between the parties and a breach of the covenant by the decree-holder rendered him liable in an action for damages. The consequence of the failure to certify in time under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, was that the matter could not be pleaded in bar of execution, but the common law right to seek reparation for breach of the covenant by a suit is preserved. As the judgment-debtor paid an instalment the agreement had consideration to support it.

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Respondent, urged that the agreement itself was void as it was not made for consideration or with the sanction of the Court, and no right could be rested on it. Venkata Subramania Ayyar v. Koran Kannan Ahmud (1).

Mr. Appa Rao was heard in reply.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sues to recover damages from the defendant in somewhat curious circumstances. The defendant had a decree for money against the plaintiff and there was an agreement arrived at between the parties by which the decree-holder consented to receive an amount less than the decree amount in several instalments, covering a period of two years, the first instalment being payable on the date of the agreement. It would seem that two instalments were paid to the decree-holder. In the payment of the 2nd instalment there was a delay of a few days, but the defendant waived the delay and accepted payment, but would not receive the 3rd instalment sent to him and then took steps to enforce the decree and realise the amount due upon the decree apart from the agreement. The agreement was never brought to the notice of the Court or sanctioned by it. The plaintiff says that he is entitled to recover damages from the defendant for violation of the agreement even though he could not set up the agreement as a bar to execution. But the agreement comes within the purview of section 257 A of the old Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1852, which lays down that "every agreement to give time for the satisfaction of a judgment debt shall be void unless it is made for consideration and with the sanction of the Court which passed the decree and such Court deems the consideration to be under the circumstances reasonable " It would be void on two grounds:—first of all, it was not sanctioned by the Court, and secondly, there was no consideration for it. We cannot accept the contention that because the 1st instalment was paid at the date of the agreement, there was valid consideration for it. The case referred to by the District Munsif, Venkata Subramania Appur v. Koran Kannan Ahmed (1), clearly shows that an agreement of this nature is an agreement to give time within the meaning of section 257A and does not put an end to the relationship of judgment-debtor and creditor by extending the time. It relieves the defendant from the obligation of satisfying the decree at any time he is called upon to do so by the decree holder. The agreement being void as not being sanctioned by the Court as required by law, no rights can arise to the plaintiff under such an agreement and the suit was rightly dismissed by both the Courts.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss 184, 248—Principal and agent Minor, whether can act as agent—Firm, liability of, for acts done by managing minor member—Minor, liability of, on attaining majority.

Where on the application of an active minor member of a firm who did most of the business of the firm, shares in a Limited Liability Company were allotted to the firm:

Held, (1) that as a minor can act as an agent under section 184 of the Contract Act, the fact that at the time of the application the member was not sui juris did not vitiate the contract between the Company and the firm and that the firm was, therefore, liable on the shares;

(2) that as the minor did not give notice within reasonable time after attaining majority of his repudiation, he was also equally liable.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, for revision of the decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Lahore, dated the 19th August 1916, decreeing the claim.

Lalas Tirath Ram and Kahan Chand, for the Petitioner.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—After hearing arguments on both sides and considering the findings arrived at by the Judge, Small Cause Court, we are of opinion that no adequate ground for revision has been made out. There can be no doubt whatsoever that Durga Das, purporting to act on behalf of the firm Gopi Mal Durga Das, consisting of himself and his father, Gopi Mal, applied in July 1913 for 20 shares in the Jain Bank of India, Limited, and paid Rs. 40 with the application. The shares were duly allotted to the firm, and the letter of allotment was posted and presumably reached its destination. It is, therefore, clear that the firm became a share-holder in respect of 20 shares, if Durga Das had the authority to act on its behalf. Now the Judge, Small Cause Court, finds that "Durga Das is an active member of the firm and he does most of the work of the shop," and this finding receives support not only from the evidence of Gopi Mal but also from the general circumstances of the case.

Now, section 184 of the Indian Contract Act shows that a minor can act as an agent. The fact that Durga Das was at the time of the application not sui juris does not, therefore, vitiate the contract between the Bank on one side and the firm on the other. The firm is liable on the shares, and Durga Das having attained majority in 1915 is equally liable, vide section 248, Indian Contract Act.

We are accordingly of opinion that the defendant firm has been rightly held liable for the payment of the call money, and this application for revision is hereby dismissed with costs.

Revision dismissed.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 28th September 1917 and on the 1st October 1917, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgment and decree of the lower Court and the material papers in the suit, and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Appellant, and of Mr. T. Ramachandra Rao, for the Respondent, and the case having stood over for consideration till the 30th day of October 1917, the Court (Chief Justice and Kumaraswami Sastri, J.) made the following

BENCH.

WALLIS, C. J.—It is quite clear in this case that the 1st defendant and his adult son the 2nd defendant, carried on business as timber merchants with the joint family property. It is also clear that the advances made by the plaintiff were made to them both and that the 2nd defendant was personally liable on them as well as the 1st defendant. This is abundantly proved by the fact that the 2nd defendant has signed the settlements in the plaintiff's books Exhibit A, dated the 27th April 1907, and A1, dated the 12th September 1909, and the promissory notes D, dated the 1st May 1907, and E, dated the 13th September 1909. He did not sign the settlement A2, the promissory note F, dated the 26th September 1910, or the letter J, dated the 1st October 1910, as he was absent, but on the 7th February 1911 he signed the letter Exhibit G, set out in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, in which he stated that he and his father had been borrowing from the plaintiff, that his father had settled accounts on the 26th September 1910 and signed in the plaintiff's book, that he had not signed as he was not present and that subsequently they had received further advances to the extent of Rs. 4,000. In this letter he undertook to discharge both these amounts on his personal liability and added: "There subsists also my personal liability for the whole of the amount payable according to your accounts. As I did not sign in your accounts, this letter was written and given." He did not, however, sign the subsequent settlement A3, dated the 7th September 1913, or the promissory note Exhibit H, dated the 7th September 1913, or the letter Exhibit K, dated the 9th September 1913, by which the 1st defendant acknowledged the joint indebtedness to amount to Rs. 9,855 and arranged for a further advance of Rs. 1,200 for which they were to give a fresh mortgage. The plaintiff has given evidence in support of his case, and neither the first nor the 2nd defendant has ventured to go into the box and the witnesses called for the 2nd defendant to prove that he had no connection with his father's business are contradicted by the documents under his own signature already mentioned. There is evidence, and it is the 2nd defendant's case, that for the last few years he has been looking after a cloth business, and according to the plaintiff's evidence the 1st defendant was the manager and always wrote the letters and invoices relating to the timber business.

In these circumstances, the only question is whether the suit is barred against the 2nd defendant personally, and this depends on whether the 1st defendant can be assumed to have had implied authority to sign the settlement in Exhibit A 4, and the letter Exhibit K on behalf of the 2nd defendant as well as himself. The last acknowledgments were made by the 1st defendant when he was managing the joint timber business, which was being carried on with joint family funds by the 1st and 2nd defendants as co-contractors or partners and while the 2nd defendant was looking after another business. According to the decisions of this Court in Valasubramania Pillai v. Ramanathan Chettiar (1) and in Sheik Mohideen Sahib v. Official Assignee (2), these facts are not sufficient to raise a presumption that the 1st defendant had authority to make an acknowledgment on behalf of the 2nd defendant. In the latter case it was expressly decided that the fact of a partner being left in management of the business did not give rise to a presumption that he was authorized to sign acknowledgments. I have pointed out in K. R. V. Firm v. Sathayavada Sitharama Swami (3) that a different view has been taken by other Courts in India in the cases cited, to which may be added Lalla Parshad v. Babu Parshad (4) and, also apparently in England, where the statutory provisions are substantially the same as in India. The point is fully discussed in K. R. V. Firm v. Sathayavada Sitharama Swami (3) and, as it is one of great importance to the commercial community, we have decided to refer to a Full Bench the question whether, in the absence of direct evidence that a co-contractor or partner has authorized his co-contractor or partner to make acknowledgments or payments saving limitation on his behalf, such authority can be inferred from other circumstances such as the position of the other co-contractors or partners in the business?

KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—I agree to the reference proposed by my Lord, as I am of opinion that the decisions in Valasubramania Pillai v. Ramanathan Chettiar (1) and in Sheik Mohideen Sahib v. Official Assignee (2) require re-consideration in the light of the decision in K. R. V. Firm v. Sathayavada Sitharama Swami (3), which, if, I may say so with respect, gives cogent reasons for placing on section 21 of the Limitation Act a more liberal construction in conformity with the decisions of the other High Courts. There is no essential difference between the position of partners in England and India and if under section 251 of the Contract Act the act of one partner which is necessary for or is usually done in the course of the business binds the other partners, there is no reason why acknowledgments of liability or payments made by one partner should not bind the others. I have rarely come across any instance where partners, while providing for authority to borrow on behalf of the firm, make any express provision for acknowledgments or payments with reference to limitation. Very often the partnership agreement restricts the powers of certain of the partners to borrow, but when there is no restriction, business is conducted on the footing that one who has the power to borrow has also power to settle accounts, make payments and in general to do all things necessary to ensure the credit of the firm. It is well known that Marvadis and Nattukottai Chettys who open account with persons insist on periodical settlements and would make no further advances unless accounts are settled when required. The object of the settlement is to prevent disputes as to its correctness and pleas of limitation from being raised. It is difficult to see why partners who allow business to be conducted on lines which are well known to everybody should not be presumed to have given authority, in the absence of evidence that the authority to borrow was limited and excluded the doing of things which are ordinarily done where accounts are opened with money-lenders.

I do not think that the wording of section 21 concludes the matter or makes any difference in the general law applicable to partners. The use of the words "by reason only of" in the Acts of 1877 and 1908, instead of the words 'by reason of,' suggests that the Legislature did not intend to affect the powers of one partner to bind another by acts falling under section 251 of the Contract Act. If it is shown that one partner has been borrowing money, making payments and settling accounts without objection by the other partners, it may well be presumed that he was authorized to do so. There is no reason why we should go further and require an express authority treating the implied authority as useless for the purpose of section 21.

Section 21 is similar in language to section 14 of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act of 1856, which has received judicial interpretation in England so far as partners are concerned. The following passage from Lightwood (time limit to action) correctly summarises the law in England on the subject. "Though the doctrine of implied agency as between co-debtors is abolished, one may still be the actual agent of the other so as to bind him by payment. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, one partner is presumed to be the agent of the other to make payments in respect of partnership debts [Goodwin v. Parton (5)] and though the agency is in general terminated by a dissolution of partnership [Watson v. Woodman (6)] it may under special circumstances be treated as continuing where for instance the retirement of a partner is kept secret and payments of interest are made in the name of the firm, In re Tucker (7).

I agree with the judgment in K. R. v. Firm v. Sahayavada Sitharama Swami (3), which deals fully with the English and Indian Statutes and decisions and which is entirely in accordance with my experience of the consciousness of the mercantile community and the course of business usually followed. The same view has subsequently been taken in Lalla Prashad v. Babu Parshad (4) and in Abdulali Badrutin v. Ranchodlal Trikamlal (8) and in Karmali Abdulla Allarkhia v. Bora Karimji (9).

The question referred came on for hearing before the Full Bench on the 20th February 1913.

Mr. P. Ramakrishna, for the Appellant.—Section 21 of the Limitation Act is general. To make an acknowledgment by a partner or contractor binding on his co-partner or co-contractor, the section does not, in express terms, say that there should be direct evidence of the latter's authority. Such an insistence would work great hardship in commercial dealings. Applying the principles of section 251 of the Contract Act by which the acts of one partner generally bind his co-partners, it follows that acknowledgments by one partner bind the other partners in the absence of any specific understanding between them to the contrary. The wording of section 21 of the Limitation Act literally follows the corresponding provision in section 14 of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act of 1856, which has received a liberal judicial interpretation intending the requisites of proof to direct evidence of authority as well as to circumstances from which the authority may be inferred.

The cases in Valasubramania Pillai v. Ramanathan Chettiar (1) and Sheik Mohideen Sahib v. Official Assignee (2) have been wrongly decided.

Mr. T. Ramachandra Rao, for the Respondent, argued contra.

OPINION.—In this case the two defendants carried on the business of timber merchants as a family business, they being father and son in an undivided Hindu family. They are sued on a debt which would be statute-barred in the absence of an acknowledgment, sufficient, within section 19 of the Limitation Act, to take it out of the Statute. There is such an acknowledgment, but it is only signed by the 1st defendant, the father, and the question is whether it can operate as against the son, the co-defendant, also.

The learned Judges who referred the case have propounded a question about the answer to which we feel no hesitation, but it is obviously referred to us because they felt a doubt as to whether the decisions in Valasubramania Pillai v. Ramanathan Chettiar (1) and Sheik Mohideen Sahib v. Official Assignee (2) did not preclude them from arriving at the conclusion which they clearly thought to be the right one.

SRIPAT NARAIN RAI v. TIRBENI MISRA.

The exact question propounded is "whether in the absence of direct evidence that a co-contractor or partner has authorised his co-contractor or partner to make acknowledgments or payments saving limitation on his behalf, such authority can be inferred from other circumstances such as the position of the other co-contractors or partners in the business." Our answer is in the affirmative. We think that direct evidence of a specific authority to give acknowledgments is quite unnecessary, and that authority may be inferred from circumstances, though it is, of course, quite beyond our province to indicate what circumstances should, in our opinion, be deemed sufficient to warrant the inference. It is important to notice the exact wording of section 21 (2) of the Limitation Act. The section does not say that a person shall not be liable on acknowledgment signed by the partner by reason only of his being a partner but by reason only of a written acknowledgment signed by his partner; and it amounts to saying that if you have no more than a written acknowledgment signed by one defendant the fact that the other defendant is his partner cannot affect the latter's liability. You could obviously have a case where one partner signed an acknowledgment in respect of a gambling debt of his own; but for the sub-section proof of the acknowledgment would be sufficient to fix the other partner with liability, a conclusion manifestly repugnant both to sense and justice. We see nothing in the sub-section to make it necessary to suppose that it is intended to apply to transactions conducted in the ordinary Courts of partnership business. We need only refer to the general principle of law embodied in section 251 of the Contract Act that partners are the agents of one another and that their acts done in the ordinary course of the partnership business bind the partnership.

As regards the two decisions referred to, it is not quite easy to say whether they should properly be regarded as laying down as a condition of liability that there should be direct evidence of express authority to give acknowledgments. But at least one sentence in Sheik Mohideen Sahib v. Official Assignee (2) lends colour to that view. White, C. J., referring to the former decision in Valasubramania

Pillai v. Ramanathan Chettiar (1), says: "Following the principle we here [i. e., Valasubramania Pillai v. Ramanathan Chettiar (1)] lay down, we have to see in this case if there is evidence that the person who made the acknowledgment had authority to do so on behalf of his firm." Those words are capable of the construction that what is meant is direct evidence of specific authority, and they were obviously so regarded by the learned Judges who referred this question to us. If that be so, we have no hesitation in saying that they were wrongly decided and should no longer be regarded as law. Such a view is completely at variance with that taken by the other Courts of India and by the English Courts in their construction of the corresponding sections of the English Acts and would obviously put a premium on commercial dishonesty.

Answered in the affirmative.

of the District Judge, Gorakhpur, reversing that of the Munsif, Banagaon.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Iswar Saran, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of execution proceedings. It appears that a decree for pre-emption was obtained against three persons, one of whom was Bindeshri. It is alleged, and it is possibly correct, that all the three persons constituted a joint Hindu family. The question of jointness is not now before us. Bindeshri died and the present application was for execution against the surviving defendants and also against the sons of Bindeshri as his legal representatives. It was objected that Bindeshri had died before the decree was made. Having regard to the order of the Court below and to what happened when this case was before us on a previous occasion, we intend to deal with the case on the assumption that Bindeshri was dead at the time the decree was made against him. The lower Appellate Court has dismissed the application for execution as against the sons of Bindeshri as his legal representatives. This Court has held in the case of Imdad Ali v. Jagan Lal (1) that it is a good answer to an application for execution against the alleged representatives of a judgment-debtor to show that the judgment-debtor was dead at the time the decree was made, and that such a decree is void and incapable of execution as against the person so dead. This is an authority which we think we ought to follow, unless it can be shown that it is no longer law. It is contended that there has been a change in the new Code of Civil Procedure by the omission from Order XXI, rule 7, of the word "jurisdiction." We think that this alteration in no way modifies the authority of the case to which we have referred. No question of "jurisdiction" of the Court to make the decree arises because no Court can make a decree against a dead man; and a decree so made is a nullity. In this view we think the decision of the Court below was correct. It is suggested that as the family is joint it was sufficiently represented by the members of the family who were alive when the decree was made, and that it is unnecessary that the sons of Bindeshri should be named as judgment-debtors. A good deal might be said for this contention particularly if the pre-emption money is accepted by the joint family, but we have not to decide this matter in the present appeal. We express no opinion as to what the effect of the execution of the decree against the surviving defendants will be. But we think the Court below was justified in dismissing the application for the execution against the sons of Bindeshri as his legal representatives. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

SESHAGIRI Aiyar, J.—The suit has been disposed of by the lower Courts on the pleadings and on the construction of the note annexed to the plaint. The learned District Judge says that as "it is a physical impossibility for it (the note) to have been paid on the day it was drawn," it was not a promissory note. The learned Vakil for the respondents said that he would not rest his case on this view of the District Judge. If I understand the learned Judge rightly, unless the payee and the drawer are face to face with each other, no promissory note can be made payable on demand. Whether it takes seven days to go to Penang or 24 hours from the place of execution to the place of payment, cannot matter if the view of the District Judge is correct that an 'on demand' is payable eo instanti and should be paid the moment payment is claimed. No authority is cited by the learned Judge for this proposition and neither I nor the learned Vakil are able to find any.

The real question is, what is the nature of the document. The translation made by the interpreter shows that the note is payable to the bearer who brings it to the place of payment on the order of the payee. It is clear, therefore, that there must be an endorsement by the payee. If this is the correct view of the document, it does not offend against section 26 of the Paper Currency Act. The principle underlying that section is that private persons should not be permitted to usurp the privileges of the Government. For they alone have the right to get a note negotiated by bare presentation. The language of an ordinary currency note is what the Legislature intended should not be copied by private parties. In Chidambaram Chettiar v. Ayyasami Thevar (1) and in Nachimuthu Chetty v. Andiappa Pillai (2) the language of the note was such that there was no necessity for an endorsement before payment can be demanded by the bearer of it, who is not the payee under it.

Mr. Gurusamy Ayyar then argued that the note postpones the payment of the amount due thereunder and is, therefore, obnoxious to section 19 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. In the first place, I am unable to accept this construction of the note. What it provides for is, for postponing the date on which interest shall accrue due on the note. I am not prepared to say that even the payment of interest is put off. A comparison of the English Bill of Exchange Act, section 10, with section 19 of the Indian Act shows that a note which does not fix any date for payment is an 'on demand' note. Also a note will be construed as an 'on demand' note, if it is so expressed. This is the clear meaning of section 10 of the English Act. Mr. Gurusamy Ayyar contended that even though a note may be made expressly payable on demand, if the time for the payment of interest or principal or both is put off, then the document is not a promissory note. The omission in the Indian Act to provide for cases of notes expressed to be payable on demand must be attributed not to any intention to depart from the English rule of law but to the view that if the expression is there, the Legislature need not provide for it specially.

Looking at the document from any point of view, the conclusion of the Courts below is wrong and we must reverse the decree of both the Courts below and remand the suit for disposal on the merits. Costs will abide the result.

NAPIER, J.—The objection raised by the District Judge is absolutely without any foundation. A bill of exchange is nonetheless payable on demand for the fact that the demand cannot be made on the day when the bill is drawn. There has been some discussion on the meaning of the document. The District Munsif and the translation department translated it in a way which appellant's Vakil contended was not correct. It has now been translated by the principal interpreter and my learned brother is satisfied that the translation is accurate. On the words as we have them now, it is clear that the payment of the bill is not postponed to a future date and that it is not payable to any holder without endorsement. It, therefore, does not require an ad valorem stamp and does not offend against section 26 of the Paper Currency Act, the effect of which is explained in Chidambaram Chettiar v. Ayyasami Thevan (1). The document is, therefore, both receivable in evidence and one made in accordance with law. The case will be remitted to the Court of the District Munsif for disposal. Costs will abide the result.

An order under section 335, Civil Procedure Code of 1882, is final, if no suit is instituted questioning its correctness within a year, in the sense that it cannot be re-opened after a year, that is, in cases where the order upholds the auction-purchaser's right to possession, if there is an application for delivery within the time allowed by law, the party against whom the order is passed cannot be heard to say that he will not deliver possession as he has a better title. But where the order is unexecuted and the resister remains in possession, he is not estopped from pleading, in defence to a suit for possession, that the plaintiff has no title to recover. The Civil Procedure Code of 1908 does not provide for the investigation of the claim of an objector who does not derive title under the judgment-debtor. The provision to that effect in section 335 of Act XIV of 1882 has not been reproduced in the new Code [p. 25, col. 1.]

Mr. P. Narayanmurthi, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Nurasimha Row, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by an auction-purchaser to recover possession. He applied in execution for possession, but was obstructed by defendants. The District Munsif passed the following order upon the application: "the counter-petitioner has no witnesses. It is not necessary to take evidence in this case. It is ordered that the property be delivered over to the petitioner at once. In case the counter-petitioners raise any further obstruction, they will be committed to jail". No attempt was made to obtain possession and we accept the finding of the Courts below that possession remained all along with the defendants. As more than 3 years had elapsed from the date of the order above referred to, the plaintiff brought this suit for possession basing his title on the sale certificate. The District Munsif held that the order for possession precluded the defendants from disputing plaintiff's title. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge held that the order for possession was not passed on investigation and that the defendants were not, therefore, estopped from showing that plaintiff acquired no title to the property. On the merits he found that the judgment-debtor, as whose property the suit site was sold, had no title to it at the time of the auction sale and dismissed the suit.

We agree with his conclusion. Under section 335 of the old Code of Civil Procedure, the law provided for the investigation of the claim of an objector who did not derive title under the judgment-debtor. The present Code has abolished this provision. It was anomalous that the rights of a person who was no party to the suit should be concluded by summary proceedings in execution; and the Legislature has removed this anomaly in the present Code. But as the present case is governed by the old Code, we have to see whether the order passed against the defendants has the effect of preventing them from showing that their title is superior to that of the plaintiff. Section 335 by its last clause provides that "the party against whom such order is passed may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property; but, subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be final." This can only mean that the particular order, if given effect to, should not be allowed to be reopened after a year; that is to say, if there was any application for delivery of possession within the time allowed by law, the defendant could not be heard to say that he would not deliver possession as he had a better title than the plaintiff. But where the order remained unexecuted, and the defendant continued to be in possession, he is not estopped from pleading, in defence to a suit for possession, that the plaintiff has no title to recover. He is not disputing the order passed in execution which section 335 said was conclusive on him. He is contesting the plaintiff's right by proving that he has got a superior title. The decision in Fidaye Shikdar v. Ozeecoddeen (1) is on all fours with the present case and we think that it was rightly decided. Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar expresses concurrence with the view taken in that case in Ayyakutti Mankondan v. Periasami Koundan (2). It is not necessary to consider the arguments addressed to us that the learned Judge is wrong in his view that where possession of a share is given by the order of the Court, that is not actual possession, we agree with him when he says that where the obstructor has not been dispossessed, the order does not conclude him in a subsequent suit from proving that the plaintiff has no title to sue.

As regards Achuta v. Mammavu (3) there was a finding that the objector had no title; consequently it was incumbent on him to sue to establish his title. In Muhamad v. Ayyappan (4) possession was given to the auction-purchaser which was not contested within a year. A subsequent suit by the objector based on title was disallowed apparently on the ground that the order as to possession which was carried into effect had to be vacated if the suit is to be decreed.

We think these authorities do not affect the present question. In our opinion the defendants whose possession was not disturbed by the order are entitled to sustain their right to continue in possession by proving that plaintiff's title is defective.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is right and we dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the learned Officiating Additional Subordinate Judge of Chittagong, dated the 10th February 1915, affirming the decision of the Munsif of Hathazari. The suit was brought by the plaintiffs to recover khas possession of the land in dispute. The plaintiffs purchased a revenue paying estate which was sold for arrears of revenue under the provisions of Act XI of 1859. The question in this case is "has the contesting defendant a protected interest within the meaning of the proviso to section 37 of the Act?" The facts found are these:—First of all, it has been found that the contesting defendant is a settled raiyyat of the village within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Secondly, it has been found that he holds the land in suit which is in the same village as the village of which he is a settled raiyyat under the terms of a permanent lease at a fixed rate of rent. Whatever may be the law as regards other classes of raiyyats, it is quite clear on the terms of section 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act that, contract or no contract, every raiyyat who is a settled raiyyat of a village and obtains a raiyyati interest in other lands in that village acquires a right of occupancy in those other lands; and, if that is so, the present defendant seems to me clearly to have a right of occupancy in the land in dispute. If he has a right of occupancy, he comes clearly within the proviso to section 37 of Act XI of 1859, and has an interest which has not been annulled by the sale for arrears of revenue. In that view, I agree in the decision arrived at by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Second appeal against the decree of the court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tellicherry, in Appeal Suit No. 535 of 1913, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Taliparamba, in Original Suit No. 39 of 1910.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 3rd December 1917, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgments and decrees of the lower Appellate Court and the Court of first instance and the material papers in the suit and upon hearing the arguments of Counsel on both sides, the Court (Seshagiri Aiyar and Napier, JJ.) made the following ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.—This is a suit to remove a Karnavan. The Courts below directed his removal. Mr. Anantakrishna Aiyar for the appellant contested the findings regarding the charges framed against the Karnavan. There is evidence to support the findings and we are not prepared to differ from the Courts below on these points. The next contention was that, even if the charges are proved, they are not serious enough to entail the removal of the Karnavan. One of them which relates to the assignment of a satisfied decree to the 16th defendant, the son of the Karnavan, to enable the said defendant to bring Tarwad properties to sale is a very serious one. Both the Courts below have found that the conduct of the Karnavan in this respect was fraudulent. Other charges also have been proved against him. They are all detailed in the judgments of the Courts below. We think that taking them all together, there is enough justification for the decree passed in the case.

Mr. Anantakrishna Aiyar relied on Cheria Pangi Achan v. Unnalachan (1) and contended that the suit was not maintainable, as the 1st defendant was not the de jure Karnavan, but was appointed to his position by a family Karar. The facts necessary to understand this contention are these:—The 3rd defendant (who has since died) was the senior in age and was the de jure Karnavan. He was removed by a Karar. Then the 2nd defendant, who is also now dead and who was next in age, was in management. During this period, the members of the Tarwad were dissatisfied with the way the affairs were being conducted. Therefore there was a family council and Exhibit B, dated the 17th May 1892, came into existence. All the members of the Tarwad were parties to that document. By its terms, the 2nd defendant was removed from the general management and the 1st defendant who was admittedly the senior Anandrayan was constituted the Karnavan. The 2nd defendant was allowed to manage a family temple and to utilise the surplus income for his maintenance. The result of the Karar was that the 2nd defendant, the Karnavan, was substantially removed from his office and his duties were entrusted to the 1st defendant. As both the defendants were parties to this Karar, it was argued that the 2nd defendant must be deemed to have renounced his rights by his assenting to it. The decision in Kenath Puthen Vettil Tarazhi v. Narayanan (2), on which Mr. Ramachandra Aiyar relied, seems to enunciate the following propositions:—(a) the renunciation by a Karnavan is binding on the Tarwad and is irrevocable by him, (b) this renunciation may be by a unilateral act or by being a party to the contract by which his rights are superseded, and (c) by such renunciation, the next in age becomes the Karnavan de jure. Applying these conclusions to the present case, it may be said that the 1st defendant, who was the senior in age after the 2nd defendant, became the de jure Karnavan by virtue of the renunciation implied by the Karar. It is true that some powers which ought ordinarily to have been exercised by the Karnavan were entrusted to the 2nd defendant. This may be taken to have entailed some restrictions on the full powers of the 1st defendant. In other respects his rights as Karnavan were recognised and confirmed by the Karar. If this is the correct view of Exhibit B we think that a suit will lie to remove the 1st defendant. This conclusion is, in our opinion, not inconsistent with the decision in Cheria Pangi Achan v. Unnalachan (1). But Mr. Anantakrishna Aiyar argued that this decision is authority for the larger proposition' that whenever a Karnavan is designated by a Karar, he is not liable to be removed by a suit. We express no opinion on the question whether, even though the Karar Karnavan is not the senior in age, a suit may not lie at the instance of some of the parties to the Karar to remove him. But we think that when a de jure Karnavan is recognised by the Karar, he does not acquire a higher status than that which he originally possessed. However the question raised is a very important one, affecting as it does the rights of management in numerous families in Malabar. We have, therefore, resolved to refer the following questions for the decision of the Full Bench:—

(a) Where a de jure Karnavan is a party to a family Karar by which his general rights as Karnavan, subject to some minor exceptions, are taken away, can he be said to have renounced his rights as Karnavan?

(b) When, under the above circumstances, the next in age to the Karnavan is recognised as the Karnavan by the Karar, whether a suit will not lie to remove him from the Karnavanship?

This second appeal came on for hearing in pursuance of the above Order of Reference before a Full Bench.

Mr. C. V. Anantakrishna Aiyar, for the Appellant, contended that the 1st defendant was not the de jure Karnavan, as he was appointed to the office by the family Karar Exhibit B and as the 2nd defendant, the Karnavan, had not renounced all his rights under the document, having been allowed by the Tarwad to manage a family temple, the 1st defendant could not be said to have all the unrestricted powers of a Karnavan. Cheria Pangi Achan v. Unnalachan (1) was authority for the proposition that no Karnavan appointed by a family Karar could be removed by suit.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar, for the Respondent, argued that as the 2nd defendant had substantially renounced all his rights under the Karar, the 1st defendant, who was the senior Anandravan and who was appointed to the office of Karnavan, became the de jure Karnavan and was, therefore, liable to be removed for misconduct. It was also urged that no distinction could be drawn in principle between a renunciation made by the unilateral act of a Karnavan and a renunciation under a contract to which he and the other members of the Tarwad were parties.

Mr. Ananta Krishna Aiyar replied.

OPINION.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—It is clear to my mind that the Karar Exhibit B dated in 1892 deprived the 2nd defendant of his Karnavastanam though with his consent and vested the office in the 1st defendant. The fact that the Tarwad (including the new Karnavan) gave the management of a temple and its income to the removed Karnavan did not affect the other results of the Karar, namely, the putting an end to the tenure of the second defendant's office as Karnavan and the appointment of the first defendant to the said office. The supersession of second defendant's rights by the family Karar cannot, of course, be affected by any subsequent unilateral act or expression of intention on his part.

The 1st defendant became not only the de facto Karnavan but also the de jure Karnavan under the Karar and he can, therefore, be removed by suit for gross misconduct.

As soon as a Karnavan ceases to be such by death or removal, the next in order of seniority becomes the Karnavan, and any family Karar binding on the person who has ceased to be the Karnavan ceases to have any effect on the new Karnavan, "except perhaps where he has himself agreed in that Karar to be bound by those restrictions whenever he succeeded to the Stanom." There is no scope for the framing of a scheme of management by a Court under those circumstances. This was all that I intended to express in Cheria Pangi Achan v. Unnalachan (1).

A family Karar to which all the adult members of a Tarwad are parties and by which a person is deprived of his status as Karnavan is not the same thing in the eye of the law as an unilateral act of relinquishment of his office by the Karnavan, though the result on his status as Karnavan may be the same.

I think that the question (a) referred to us does not arise for decision on the above view of the legal nature and effect of the family Karar Exhibit B and I would answer as regards question (b) that a suit will lie

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLIV, r. 1
—Appeal in forma pauperis—Application rejected—
Applicant, whether entitled to pay Court-fee on appeal.

An application under Order XLIV, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code asking for leave to appeal in forma pauperis was rejected under the proviso to the rule. The applicant then filed a petition praying that he might be permitted to pay Court-fees on his memorandum of appeal. The petition was rejected on the ground that the appeal had already been dismissed:

Held, (1) that what was rejected under the proviso to Order XLIV, rule 1, was the application for permission to appeal in forma pauperis, and that the memorandum of appeal was still before the Court:

(2) that the Court refused to exercise its jurisdiction in not allowing the Court-fees to be paid on the memorandum of appeal.

Civil revision from an order of the District Judge, Meerut.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Applicant.

Mr. Uma Shankar Bajpai, for Mr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The present applicant brought a suit in forma pauperis for possession of certain property which had been mortgaged. He sought to recover possession without payment of any sum of money. On the 15th of July 1916 the Court gave a decree for redemption of the mortgage on payment of Rs. 4,301-3-2. On the 19th of August he filed an application under Order XLIV, rule 1, together with a memorandum of appeal as directed therein asking for permission to be allowed to appeal in forma pauperis. The Appellate Court directed further enquiry by the Court of first instance into the alleged pauperism and on the 15th of February, that Court reported that the applicant was a pauper. On the 17th of February 1917, the Court then took action under the proviso to rule 1 of Order XLIV. It examined the judgment and the decree and rejected the application under that proviso. Information of this was sent to the applicant by post and he received it on the 17th of March 1917. On the 20th of March 1917 the applicant filed a petition stating that he had received a post-card from the Court intimating that his application for permission had been rejected. He, therefore, prayed that he might be permitted to pay the Court-fee on his memorandum of appeal. On this the lower Court passed the following order:—"Yesterday the applicant filed a petition requesting to be allowed to deposit fees and to prosecute his appeal. His appeal was dismissed on the 17th of February last. I reject his petition." The Court, therefore, refused to exercise its jurisdiction in not allowing the Court-fees to be paid, under the impression that the appeal had been dismissed on the 17th of February. This is clearly wrong. The appeal had never been dismissed. The memorandum of appeal is still before the Court. On the 17th February what was rejected was the application for permission to appeal in forma pauperis. We think that in the circumstances the applicant should have been allowed to pay the Court-fees if he so wished, and we allow this application and direct the lower Court to allow this to be done. Any question of limitation that may arise will be decided by the Court in the usual way according to law. The Court below will fix a time within which the applicant will pay the Court-fees. In regard to the costs of this application, they will be costs in the cause and will abide the result.

(Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, rr. 5, Appellate Court—Jurisdiction.

An Appellate Court has power, on an original petition presented to it, to direct stay of sale of immoveable property in execution of the decree under appeal before it. The inherent powers of the Appellate Court recognised by Order XLI, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code, are not cut down or limited by the special and exceptional power conferred on the executing Court by Order XLI, rule 6.

Petition praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith the High Court will be pleased to issue an order directing stay of further proceedings in execution of the decree by way of confirmation of sale in Original Suit No. 75 of 1914, on the file of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramnad at Madura, pending the disposal of Appeal Suit No. 350 of 1917, preferred to the High Court against the decree of the Court

ORDER.—As regards the preliminary objection that no petition under Order XLI, rule 5, of the Code of Civil Procedure lies in this Court in respect of a stay of sale of immoveable property, Wallis, C. J., and Hannay, J., doubted in Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 1595 of 1914 (in Appeal against Order No. 175 of 1914) the soundness of the decision in Kanniappan Chetti v. Manikavasagam Chetti (1), which was quoted in support of the objection. We are inclined to go further and dissent (with great respect) from the decision in Kanniappan Chetti v. Manikavasagam Chetti (1).

ALAUDIN SAHEB v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

The inherent powers of the Appellate Court clearly recognised by Order XLI, rule 5, cannot be held to have been cut down or limited by the special and exceptional power conferred on the executing Court by Order XLI, rule 6, which rule seems to have been clearly intended in order that the executing Court might be compelled to exercise it in emergent cases for the benefit of the judgment-debtor [see also the pertinent observations of Mookerjee, J., in Tribeni Sahu v. Bhagwat Bux (2) and Rama Prasad Ray v. Anukul Chandra (3)]. We overrule the preliminary objection.

On the merits it is not the decree under appeal that is sought to be executed by the sale of immoveable property but another decree against the execution of which the decree under appeal refused to grant an injunction. The present petition is not for a temporary injunction but it is for stay of execution of the decree under appeal.
The decree appealed against not being under execution Order XLI, rule 5, does not apply, and this petition is misconceived. It is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Memorandum of costs will follow.

Appeal dismissed.

Madras Land Encroachment Act (III Mad. of 1905), s. 3

SHANKAR LAL v. RAM BABU.

—Pathway on private land, obstruction of, by owner—
Penal assessment, levy of, legality of.

(Government have no right under Madras Act III of 1905 to levy penal assessment where an owner of land obstructs a pathway over the land to which the public have acquired a right of user.)

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of North Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 107 of 1909, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Vellore, in Original Suit No. 123 of 1907.

Mr. G. C. Adam, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. F. Nopier, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The suit was for a declaration of the plaintiffs' absolute right to the sight of a pathway, free from any public right of way, to recover the penal assessment levied by Government on the footing that the pathway belonged to it and not to the plaintiff, and for an injunction to restrain Government from interfering with the plaintiffs' enjoyment of the pathway as their absolute property. Both the lower Courts have found that the public have been walking along the way as a matter of right and not with the plaintiffs' license as urged by them, and that the public have a right of way. The plaintiffs did not contend that the right of way was abandoned by the public and we cannot, therefore, allow the contention to be raised at this stage. It is then argued that the ownership of the pathway is in the plaintiffs, though the public may have a right of way, and that, therefore, Government had no right to levy penal assessment under Madras Act III of 1905. The District Judge's view that even in such a case penal assessment could be lawfully levied is not sound, as Act III of 1905 allows penal assessment only where Government property is encroached on. But the plaintiffs did not contend in the first Court that they were the owners of the pathway even if the public had a right of way. The question presented to the Munsif by the parties was whether the pathway belonged to the plaintiffs and the public walked along it only with their license, or whether the public did so because the pathway belonged to Government. A right of way in the public was taken to carry with it the right of ownership in the pathway on the part of Government. The point that the public might have a right of way as an easement should have been raised in the first Court, as it was one on which the parties would be entitled to adduce evidence. The Munsif, moreover, found that the plaintiffs failed to establish their ownership. The fact that the site is not marked in the survey plan as Poramboke he regarded as not conclusive. On the other hand, the Union metalled the pathway and built culverts so early as 1694 without any assertion of their ownership by the plaintiffs. We see no reason for not accepting the Munsif's finding that the plaintiffs' ownership of the site was not proved. We dismiss the second appeal with the costs of the first respondent.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1909), O. XX, r. 15—Partnership—Death of partner—Accounts, suit for, by surviving partner against representative of deceased partner, maintainability of.

The personal representative of a deceased partner is bound to give an account of what has been received on behalf of the partnership, but he will only be liable for the person he represents to the extent of the assets he receives. The mere fact that a minor representative is personally unable to give the accounts will not absolve him from the obligation of getting the accounts prepared by the persons who were conversant with what took place and what money was received and spent and who were acting either for the deceased partner during his life or for the minor and the estate of the partner after his death. [p. 32, col. 2.]

Where a surviving partner sued the representative of a deceased partner for accounts, alleging that a much larger sum in connection with the partnership business was received by the deceased partner's estate than the plaintiff had received and that there would be a balance payable to him upon taking accounts:

Held, (1) that the suit was maintainable; [p. 32, col. 2.]

(2) that the proper procedure for the Court was to pass a preliminary decree directing that each party should furnish an account of what had been received and what had been spent. [p. 32, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Agra, confirming a decree of Munsif of Agra.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katju, (with him Mr. Shiam Krishna Das), for the Appellant.

Mr. Mangal Prasad Bhargava, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We think that both the Courts below have taken an extremely narrow and technical view of this case. It appears that one Puran Chand had a lease of the grass farm at Agra. He took into partnership the plaintiff. They were to provide the capital between them and to share in the profits. Puran Chand died. The plaintiff then instituted the present suit, alleging that he had received certain monies and that Puran Chand and after his death his minor son received further money in connection with the joint enterprise. He alleged that there was a much larger sum received by Puran Chand's estate than he had received and that there would be a balance payable to him upon taking accounts. He accordingly asked that the accounts should be taken. The Courts below have dismissed the suit, holding that it was not maintainable and that the minor could not be liable to render accounts. It seems to us (assuming the plaintiff's allegation to be true) that it would have been a very right and proper thing that the minor should have been ordered to render an account of the monies received by Puran Chand or after his death by his estate in respect of the enterprise. It is said that he (the plaintiff) ought to have claimed a definite sum. It is only after he knew what had been received by the other side and what expenses had been incurred that he would be in a position to name the sum that ought to be paid to him. The learned District Judge says that it will be most unfair that the plaintiff should escape rendering an account whilst the other side was ordered to render accounts. We cannot understand what there was to prevent the Courts below, if it was objected on behalf of the minor defendant that it was not admitted that the plaintiff had only received the sum he alleged, to have directed that he also should furnish an account of what he had received and what he had expended. We think that the personal representative of a deceased partner is bound to give an account of what has been received on behalf of the partnership. Of course the personal representative will only be liable for the person he represents, to the extent of the assets he receives. What we think the Court below ought to have done was to have passed the preliminary decree directing that each party should furnish an account of what has been received and what has been spent. These accounts after they have been filed can be accepted or objected to in the ordinary way and dealt with by the Court. It may be objected that the minor is unable to give the accounts. The mere fact that he is personally unable to give the accounts will not absolve him from the obligation of getting the accounts prepared by the persons who were conversant with what took place and what money was received and spent and who were acting either for Puran Chand during his life or for the minor and the estate of Puran Chand after his death. We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of both the Courts below and remand the case to the Court of first instance, through the lower Appellate Court, with directions to re-admit the suit in its original number and to proceed to deal with the same having regard to what we have said above. The Court can deal with the case as near as possible on the lines of the provisions of Order XX, rule 15, of the Code of Civil Procedure making a preliminary decree for an account. Costs here and heretofore will be costs in the cause.

Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

Compromise, whether binding on person not party to it Execution Sale set aside on compromise between auction-purchaser and mortgagee Surplus sale-proceeds taken away by judgment-debtor, whether liable to be refunded by order of Court on compromise—Appeal—Revision.

No one can be bound by a compromise to which he is not a party. [p. 33, col 2.]

After the sale of a raiyati holding in execution of a rent-decree, the mortgagee of the holding, who in execution of his mortgage-decree had purchased the holding, applied to have the sale set aside under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 50 of the Civil Procedure Code. A compromise was effected between him and the auction-purchaser of the holding and was given effect to by an order of the Court which was as follows:—

"The application for setting aside the sale is granted in terms of the solanamah and the sale is set aside. The judgment-debtors will deposit the surplus sale-proceeds taken by them at once for payment to the petitioner".

Held, that the order relating to the refund of the surplus sale-proceeds was not binding on the judgment-debtors who were no party to the compromise and was not capable of execution against them, that there was no jurisdiction to make the order in the first instance and there was no jurisdiction to enforce it. [p. 34, col 1.]

Held, also, that no appeal lay to the High Court on behalf of the judgment-debtors but the matter was one for revision by the High Court. [p. 33, col 2.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Noakhali, dated the 1st of December 1916, reversing that of the Munsif, 3rd Court at Sudharam, dated the 24th of July 1916.

FACTS of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Bhagirath Chandra Das, for the Appellant.—The judgment-debtor not having been a party to the compromise effected between the mortgagee and the auction-purchaser, whatever order might have been made by the Court on that compromise would not be binding on him.

The application was merely for setting aside the sale under Order XXI, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code. On such application any order passed by the Court for paying back the money taken out from the Court by the judgment-debtor as surplus sale-proceeds was without jurisdiction and hence invalid and not binding upon the judgment-debtor. There is, therefore, no jurisdiction to enforce the order which was passed without jurisdiction and was, therefore, inoperative.

Babu Jatindra Kumar Sen Gupta, for the Respondents.—By the compromise the sale was set aside and the order passed by the Court on such compromise directing the re-payment of the sum received by the judgment-debtor from the Court as surplus sale-proceeds is within jurisdiction.

Even assuming that the order for the refund of the surplus sale-proceeds was without jurisdiction, the order cannot be challenged in execution proceedings, because the executing Court cannot go behind that order as it stands. See Kalipada Sirkar v. Harimohan Dalal (1). When that order stands and is not set aside by suit, appeal or review as being null and void, the Court which is asked to execute that order cannot refuse execution on the ground that the order was made without jurisdiction.

Babu Bhagirath Chandra Das, in reply.

JUDGMENT.—The appeal and the Rule before us relate to the same matter. In my opinion no appeal lies in the present case and the matter must be dealt with under the Rule.

The whole question is covered by the simple proposition that no one can be bound by a compromise to which he was not a party. The compromise in the present case related to an execution sale which had taken place in the course of executing a decree for rent obtained by the landlord of a raiyati holding against his tenant. The holding was sold and was purchased by the auction-purchaser for Rs. 400. The landlord satisfied himself out of the money and the balance Rs. 353 and odd was taken by one of the judgment-debtors as the representative of the rest. Then the mortgagee, to whom the holding had previously been mortgaged and who had obtained a decree on the mortgage and had in execution of that decree purchased the holding, though he had never received recognition from the landlord, came in and applied to have the sale set aside under the provisions of rule 90 of Order XXI. It was in connection with that application that the compromise in question was arrived at. The mortgagee came to an agreement with the auction-purchaser by which the sale was to be set aside on condition that the mortgagee paid to the auction purchaser the sum of Rs. 500 and the mortgagee was to be at liberty to recover the balance of the sale proceeds previously taken out by the representative of the judgment-debtors. Now, as between the mortgagee and the auction-purchaser that may be, and no doubt was, an entirely valid and binding agreement, but in the nature of things the compromise can have no binding effect upon the judgment-debtors who were no party to it. No doubt the order made upon the compromise was in the following form: "The application for setting aside the sale is granted in terms of the solenamah and the sale is set aside. The judgment-debtors will deposit the surplus sale-proceeds taken by them at once for payment to the petitioners." Some attempt has been made to argue as to the latter part of this order that it is in some way independent of the compromise. But obviously the order arose out of the compromise and depends upon the setting aside of the sale. What the mortgagee is attempting to do now is to execute that order against the judgment-debtors, that is to say, to execute as against the judgment-debtors an order founded upon and dependent upon a compromise to which they were not parties. The application was dismissed by the Munsif in the first Court, but on appeal the learned District Judge for reasons which I am unable to appreciate has made an order in favour of the mortgagee. In my opinion, whatever rights the mortgagee may have to the surplus sale-proceeds taken out of Court by the judgment-debtors or their representative, as to which we say nothing, he had no right to treat this order made on the compromise as an order binding on the judgment-debtors and capable of execution as against them. There was no jurisdiction to make the order in the first instance and there is now no jurisdiction to enforce it. In my opinion, therefore, the order of the learned District

Judge on appeal must be set aside and that of the Munsif rejecting the application of the mortgagee must be restored. The petitioner will be entitled to his costs (of this Rule) and in the Court below. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at two gold mohurs.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed and the Rule made absolute as above.

BEACHCROFT, J.—I agree.

The parties to a dispute referred it to six arbitrators agreeing that the verdict should be, if necessary, the verdict of the majority. The arbitrators recorded the evidence of the parties, but no decision was arrived at. Thereupon two of the arbitrators withdrew, and the remaining arbitrators, after notice to the defendants but in their absence, recorded afresh the evidence offered by the plaintiffs and gave an award:

Civil revision from an order of the District Judge, Allahabad.

Mr. Uma Shankar Bajpai, for the Applicants.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision arising out of arbitration proceedings. The facts briefly are as follows:—The parties to the dispute agreed to settle it by arbitration (out of Court). There was no suit pending. They referred their dispute to six arbitrators agreeing that the verdict should be, if necessary, the verdict of the majority. The arbitrators met on the 10th of February 1915. The parties produced evidence which was recorded. The arbitrators again met on the 19th or 20th of February. They discussed the matter and apparently were soon divided into two groups in the opinions they expressed. No decision was arrived at, no award was drawn up. Two of the arbitrators withdrew from the arbitration and sent in notice to that effect. Thereupon the remaining four arbitrators again met on the 21st of March. Prior to that date notice was issued to the parties for that and was also sent to the defendants and their arbitrators. On that date the four arbitrators proceeded to take all the evidence afresh that the plaintiffs offered. The defendants were not present nor were their witnesses. One fact has to be noted, and that is that after the meeting of the 19th or 20th of February, one of the two arbitrators who withdrew, took away with him the record of the evidence which had been taken on the 10th of February. On the 21st of March, the four arbitrators after recording the evidence of the plaintiffs' witnesses on that date drew up an award and signed it. It was this award which the plaintiffs put forward in Court that it should be filed and a decree passed upon it. The Court of first instance granted the application. The lower Appellate Court held that this award, on the face of it and upon the facts stated, was an illegal award and set aside the order of the first Court. It seems to us in the first place that the order of the Court below was correct. The award of the 21st of March was not an award within the intention of the parties. It was based upon fresh proceedings and fresh evidence taken by four out of six arbitrators and it was not an award based upon the proceedings of the 10th of February and 19th or 20th of February. We can find no ground whatsoever for revision. The Court below was entitled to go into the matter and to see whether any of the grounds mentioned in paragraphs 14 and 15 of the Second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code were proved. It went into the facts and held, as we have mentioned above, that the award was invalid and set aside the order of the first Court. We cannot find that the Court below acted illegally or with material irregularity in the circumstances of this case. There is, therefore, no force in the application. It is dismissed with costs.

Appeal, under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, against the judgment of Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar, dated the 7th February 1917, in Second Appeal No. 1471 of 1915, reported as 41 Ind. Cas. 361, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Sivaganga, in Original Suit No. 96 of 1913.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar and E. Duraiswami Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. V. Anantakrishnu Aiyar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We agree with the conclusion arrived at by Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar in this case on the ground that a transfer of an expectancy of this kind is not permitted by the Muhammadan Law. That was decided in accordance with the opinion of the numerous law officers consulted in Musammal Khanum

ASHA BEEVI v. KARUPPAN CHETTY.

Jan v. Musammât Jan Beebe (1). Case No. 11 cited at page 89 of Macnaughten's Principles and Precedents of Muhammadan Law is to the same effect. This view has also been taken by the text-writers on Muhammadan Law (Sir Roland Wilson's Digest of Anglo-Muhammadan Law, page 268, and more particularly Volume II, pages 50 and 51 of the 3rd edition of Mr. Amir Ali's Muhammadan Law where the subject is more fully dealt with). Mr. Justice Tyabji's Principles of Muhammadan Law is to the same effect.

On the other hand reliance has been mainly placed on the decision of the Privy Council in Musammât Hurmat ul-nissa Begum v. Allahdia Khan (2), by which Mr. Justice Spencer appears to have been mainly influenced in dissenting from the conclusion come to by Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar. On examining that case we do not think that their Lordships intended to lay down that a Muhammadan could renounce his right of inheritance before that right had become vested on the death of the person to whom he was entitled to succeed. In that case there had been a very great delay in putting forward the plaintiff's claim to succeed as heir of the deceased and their Lordships observed at page 112: "They may further remark that according to the Muhammadan Law, there may be a renunciation of the right to inherit and that such a renunciation need not be expressed but may be implied from the ceasing or desisting from prosecuting a claim maintainable against another." Having regard to the words "right to inherit" and the words "prosecuting a claim", which claim would only arise after the succession had opened, we think that these observations of their Lordships may be taken as dealing with a renunciation after the right of inheritance has vested and are not authority for the proposition that a prior renunciation is authorised by the Muhammadan Law. Mr. Amir Ali in the passage referred to deals with renunciation after the inheritance has vested.

Reliance has also been placed on a decision of this Court reported in Kunhi Mamod v. Kunhi Moidin (3). That decision has been questioned by all the text-book writers who have since dealt with the subject. As pointed out in Wilson's book, the recital that all the law officers were not agreed in the case in Musammât Khanum Jan v. Musammât Jan Beebe (1) is not accurate. Further the respondent was not represented and, therefore, the case was not so fully argued. The learned Judges also proceeded upon the footing that the right of inheritance had vested. We are not prepared to accept this case as an authority for the proposition that under Muhammadan Law a right of inheritance can be renounced before it vests. The decision in Musammât Khanum Jan v. Musammât Jan Beebe (1) has since been referred to with approval by this Court in the judgment of Benson and Sundara Aiyar, JJ., reported as Meerongani Routhar v. Karupathi Nagur Meera Lubhai (4) and the same view appears to have been expressed by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in Sumsullin v. Abdul Hussein (5), though the judgment in that case proceeded upon the construction of the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. Reliance has also been placed upon the decision in Mohammadi Hashmat Ali v. Kaniz Fatima (6), but there is no discussion of the authorities in that case.

On the whole, we think that there is a large preponderance of authority in favour of the view that a transfer or a renunciation of the right of inheritance before that right vests is prohibited under the Muhammadan Law. The rules of Muhammadan Law are not affected by the Transfer of Property Act and it is, therefore, unnecessary to consider whether this transfer or renunciation would not also be invalid under the provisions of section 6 of the Transfer of Property Act itself.

For these reasons the Letters Patent Appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 32, 33, 71, 73, 75, 87—Mortgage deed—Registration—Presentation by duly authorised agent—Refusal to register—Registrar's order to register—Presentation on behalf of Collector as Manager of Court of Wards, validity of.

A mortgage-deed was executed in favour of one S. but before it could be registered S fell ill. Subsequently S. executed a special power-of-attorney as required by section 3 of the Registration Act authorising one N. to present the deed for registration on his behalf. Accordingly, within the period prescribed by law N presented the deed for registration and the Sub-Registrar made an endorsement on the deed certifying its presentation by N. under a special power-of-attorney authenticated in his office. The mortgagor, however, failed to appear and the Sub-Registrar, therefore, refused to register the deed. In the meantime S had died and his widow on behalf of his minor sons applied to the Registrar, who made an order under section 75 (1) of the Registration Act that the document should be registered. Within thirty days of this order the Collector in his official capacity as Manager of the Court of Wards, by whom the estate of the sons of S had been taken over for management, sent the deed to the Sub-Registrar with an official letter, enclosing also a certified copy of the order of the District Registrar. The Sub-Registrar on receipt of this communication took cognisance of the same as a presentation of the document, within the meaning of section 75, clause (2) of the Registration Act, and proceeded to register the document accordingly.

Held, (1) per Piggott, J., that the endorsement on the deed by the Sub-Registrar that it was presented by N under a special power-of-attorney registered and duly authenticated in his office entitled the Court to assume that the Sub-Registrar acted in the proper and lawful exercise of his powers under the proviso to section 33 of the Registration Act, and that, therefore, the original presentation of the deed for registration by N. was a proper and valid presentation under section 32 of the Registration Act; [p. 38, cols. 1 & 2.]

(2) (per Curiam) that the procedure adopted by the Collector after the order of Registrar directing registration of the deed was a sufficient compliance with the requirements of section 75 (2) of the Registration Act; [p. 40, col. 1.]

(3) that even if the procedure was irregular, the irregularity was covered by section 87 of the Registration Act [p. 40, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Moradabad, dated the 29th January 1916.

Mr. A. E. Ryves, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. M. Sulaiman, Dr. Surendra Nath Sen and Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

PIGGOTT, J.—This was a suit on a mortgage, dated the 20th of November 1911. The persons impleaded are the mortgagor and certain subsequent transferees. The mortgage was in favour of one Sahu Parshadi Lal. The evidence shows that before registration of the document had been effected the mortgagee fell ill. It seems a fair matter of inference that the mortgagor endeavoured to take advantage of this fact to defeat the registration of the document. On the 3rd of February 1912 a special power-of-attorney of the kind spoken of in section 33 of the Registration Act (No. XVI of 1908) was registered at the office of the Sub Registrar of Moradabad, whereby the mortgagee Sahu Parshadi Lal purported to authorise a Pleader, named Pandit Nanak Chand, to present the mortgage of November the 20th, 1911, for registration on his behalf. Accordingly, on the 5th of February 1912, within the period prescribed by law, the mortgage deed in suit was presented for registration by the said Pandit Nanak Chand, purporting to act under the authority of the special power-of-attorney of the 3rd of February 1912. A question has been raised as to the validity of this presentation, and it is just as well to dispose of it at once. The learned Subordinate Judge who tried this suit seems to have thought that, whatever the facts may have been, the plaintiff had been remiss in the matter of producing satisfactory evidence and that the Court had before it no evidence from which it was entitled to infer that Pandit Nanak Chand did hold a valid power-of-attorney under the provisions of section 33 aforesaid, authorising him to present this document for registration. I think the decision of the Court below on this point is clearly wrong. The document in suit was presented for registration at the office of the Sub-Registrar of Moradabad, the very same office in which the special power-of-attorney had been registered two days previously. In his endorsement on the deed in suit the Sub-Registrar certifies its presentation by Pandit Nanak Chand under a special power-of-attorney duly authenticated in his office. That certificate is evidence under the Registration Act of the truth of the facts therein stated. There is no reason whatever for presuming that it is in any way an incorrect statement of the facts. What has been contended before us is that the special power-of-attorney referred to in section 33 of the Registration Act requires, not merely to be authenticated by the Sub-Registrar, but to be executed before him. The argument is that the certificate above referred to does not specify that the document in question had been executed before the Sub-Registrar. Moreover it is suggested that, on the evidence as to the illness of Sahu Parshadi Lal, it is fairly certain that he did not appear personally before the Sub-Registrar on the 3rd of February 1912. Had he been able to appear in person at the Sub-Registrar's Office on that date, he would presumably have presented the mortgage of the 20th November 1911 himself. This argument, however, overlooks the proviso to section 33 of Act XVI of 1908. We may take it from the evidence that Sahu Parshadi Lal was suffering from bodily infirmity at the time. Indeed the argument addressed to us on behalf of the respondents on this point assumes that Sahu Parshadi Lal was in fact unable by reason of bodily infirmity to attend in person at the Sub-Registrar's Office. It was, therefore, open to the Sub-Registrar to attest the special power-of-attorney without requiring the personal attendance of the executant at his office, provided only that he satisfied himself that it had been voluntarily executed by the person purporting to be the principal. We have it from his certificate that the special power-of-attorney was not merely registered in his office but was duly authenticated by him. In this state of the evidence we are entitled to assume that the Sub-Registrar acted in the proper and lawful exercise of his powers under the proviso to section 33 aforesaid. I think, therefore, there can be no doubt that the original presentation of the document in suit for registration on the 5th of February 1912 was a proper and valid presentation under section 32 of Act XVI of 1908. The mortgagee Sahu Parshadi Lal died on the 8th of February 1912, a few days after the presentation of the document before the Sub-Registrar. The mortgagor, the executant of the said document, failed to appear before the Sub-Registrar to admit execution of the same. As I have already suggested, I see no reason to doubt that he was purposely keeping out of the way. The Sub-Registrar had no option but to treat the non-appearance of the executant as a denial of execution and to refuse registration on that ground. We know that he did so. This refusal gave rise to a right on the part of any person claiming under such document, or the representative of any such person, to apply to the Registrar to establish his right to have the document registered. We know that such an application was in fact made to the Registrar of Moradabad. It has been made a grievance on the part of the respondents in this Court that the evidence on the record does not show with certainty by whom this application was made. We have been informed that the application was made on behalf of the mother of the two minor sons of Sahu Parshadi Lal, acting as their natural guardian. It does not seem, however, in any way incumbent upon us to call for specific evidence on this point. We know that the Registrar had before him an application on which he proceeded to take action under the appropriate section of the Registration Act. He was satisfied that he had before him a valid application by, or on behalf of, a person entitled to make the same. I do not see that we are called upon to enquire into the precise nature of that application, especially in the absence of any specific plea that it was made by the particular person not authorised to make it. The proceedings before the Registrar resulted in an order by him, under the first clause of section 75 of Act XVI of 1908, whereby he ordered the document to be registered. In the meantime the estate of the minor sons of Sahu Parshadi Lal had been taken under the management of the Court of

COLLECTOR OF MORADABAD v. MAQBUL-UL-RAHMAN.

Wards, and the Collector of Moradabad, in his official capacity as manager of the Court of Wards, became charged with looking after the interests of the minors in this matter. The Registrar's order for the registration of the document was dated June the 28th, 1912. Within the prescribed period of 30 days, that is to say, on the 23rd of July 1912, the Collector sent the document in suit to the Sub-Registrar with an official letter, enclosing also a certified copy of the order of the District Registrar. The Sub-Registrar on receipt of this communication took cognisance of the same as a presentation of the document, within the meaning of section 75, clause (2) of the Registration Act, and proceeded to register the document accordingly. The present suit was instituted on the 23rd of November 1914, the plaintiff being the Collector of Moradabad as Manager of the Court of Wards in charge of the estate of the two minor sons of Sahu Parshadi Lal. The defendants were the original mortgagor, who did not contest the suit, and a number of subsequent transferees. In the written statements filed by some of these men the plea was taken that the document sued upon had not been duly presented for registration within the requirements of the law, that its registration was consequently invalid and that it could not affect the property hypothecated. The Court below fixed a number of issues, but as between the plaintiff and the subsequent transferees it has tried out only the one issue as to the validity of the registration. Having come to a finding that the registration was invalid the learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed the plaintiff's claim altogether holding that, as a claim for a simple money debt against the original mortgagor, the suit would be barred by limitation.

The appeal before us raises simply the question of the validity of the registration. In the earlier portion of this order I have taken occasion to dispose of two points which were incidentally argued. There remains the main substantial point in the appeal, namely, whether the Sub-Registrar of Moradabad was right in treating this document as having been duly presented to him on the 23rd of July 1912, when he received it under cover of an official letter from the Collector of Moradabad. In dealing with this point I do not propose to refer to the numerous authorities which have been cited before us. The present case is clearly distinguishable on the facts from any of those authorities, in that it turns upon section 75, and not exclusively upon section 32, of the Registration Act. This was not a case in which the registration officers had never been lawfully seized of the document at all. There had been, as I have held, a valid presentation of the document in the first instance on the 5th of February 1912. Moreover, there was in existence a positive order by the District Registrar that the document be registered. The only question, therefore, is whether the procedure adopted in carrying out that order was such as wholly to invalidate the registration which followed, or was at most an irregularity of procedure on the part of the Sub-Registrar of Moradabad covered by section 87 of the Registration Act. The provisions of section 75, clause (2), of the Act are somewhat curiously worded. There is no such categorical imperative as is to be found in section 32, where it is laid down that, subject to certain exceptions, every document to be registered shall be presented by one or other of the persons described in the categories which follow. All that section 75, clause (2), does is to empower the registering officer to register the document, without such complete compliance as would otherwise be required with the provisions of sections 58, 59 and 60 of the Act, provided only it be duly presented to him within 30 days of the making of the Registrar's order. The controversy before us has turned on the expression "duly presented". The Sub-Registrar's duty, when he received this document on the 23rd of July 1912, was no doubt to satisfy himself that it was being presented to him by a person claiming under the document. If the Collector of Moradabad had presented himself in person at the office, the Sub-Registrar would presumably have taken the Collector's word for it that the estate of the minor sons of the deceased mortgagee was now in his charge as Manager of the Court of Wards and that he was entitled to prefer a claim under the document on behalf of the said minors, or he might have satisfied himself on this point by a reference to the notification in the official Gazette. What he had before him was an official letter on the authority of the Collector of Moradabad, claiming to be in charge of the estate of the minors and to be entitled to present the document for registration. The argument that the Collector's failure to present this application in person is a fatal defect in the registration of the document seems to me open to a reductio ad absurdum. Whoever the messenger may have been who carried the document in question along with the Collector's letter to the office of the Sub-Registrar of Moradabad, the Collector could have given him formal authority to present the document by the execution of a special power-of-attorney; that special power-of-attorney, being an instrument executed by the Collector in his official capacity, could have been registered on the strength of an official letter from the Collector without his personal attendance at the office under the provisions of section 88 of the Registration Act. On the principle that the greater includes the less it seems to be asking far less of the Sub-Registrar that he should take cognisance of the Collector's official signature and designation to a letter informing him of the Collector's interest in the document in suit and presenting it for registration, than to ask him to accept a similar letter as proof of the fact that a particular document, as for instance a power-of-attorney, had been executed by the Collector. Under the circumstances of the case I think we are not straining the law in holding that the presentation of this document made on the 23rd of July 1912 was a sufficient compliance with the requirements of section 75, clause (2), of the Act. Even if I do not think so, I should feel justified in regarding the action of the Sub-Registrar in taking cognisance of certain facts on the strength of an official letter received from the Collector of the District, without requiring the personal attendance of that officer before him, as at most a defect of procedure, curable by the provisions of section 27 of the Act. I hold, therefore, that the finding of the Court below that the document in suit is invalid as a mortgage for want of due registration is incorrect and must be reversed. Although certain other issues have been disposed of in the judgment under appeal, this was the main issue decided as between the plaintiff and the subsequent transferees and it was certainly a preliminary issue. As we have reversed the finding of the Court below on this point, I think the proper order to pass is that the decree of the Court below be set aside and the case returned to that Court for re-trial and disposal on the merits. We leave the costs of this appeal, which will include fees on the higher scale, to be costs in the cause.

WALSH, J.—I agree. I think the case of the respondents is an attempt to apply the dicta of the Privy Council to a situation in respect of which they were certainly not uttered and to which, I think, they are not applicable. I propose to cite authorities only for the purpose of showing the principles which have to be borne in mind and then to attempt to construe the somewhat complicated provisions in order to make them work, if possible, naturally and easily.

Now first with regard to the presentation by the Pleader on the 5th of February. By the endorsement that presentation purports to have been made under the authority of a special power-of-attorney duly authenticated in the registration office two days before. I feel a difficulty in applying the terms of section 60, sub-section (2), to that endorsement. The endorsement, it seems to me, is only evidence of the facts mentioned by it after the provisions of the section have been complied with and a certificate has been issued for registration. And, inasmuch as the very question which we have to decide is whether those provisions have been complied with as provided by section 60, it looks to me somewhat like begging the question to apply section 60, sub-section (2), to this endorsement. There is a further difficulty strongly relied upon in argument by Dr. Sulaiman that it is only evidence of the facts mentioned in the endorsement and the endorsement does not, it so happens in this case, mention the fact of the execution of the power-of-attorney. And, therefore, although I agree in the conclusion at which my brother has arrived to be drawn from that endorsement, I do so for somewhat different reasons. I think it is in any case, apart from the provisions of the act, an instance of the sort of case to which the old maxim of omnia præsumentur rite et solemniter esse acta ought to be applied, and that view seems to me to be supported by a passage in a case under this Act of a similar nature decided in the Privy Council as long ago as 1877. In that case* Sir Montague E. Smith delivering the judgment of their Lordships said: "If the High Court is to be understood to mean that in all cases where a registered deed is produced, it is open to the party objecting to the deed to contend that there was an improper registration, that the terms of the Registration Act in some substantial respects have not been complied with, their Lordships think this is too broadly stated. Undoubtedly, it would be a most inconvenient rule if it were to be laid down generally, that all Courts, upon the production of a deed which has the Registrar's endorsement of due registration, should be called on to inquire, before receiving it in evidence, whether the Registrar had properly performed his duty. Their Lordships think that this rule ought not to be thus broadly laid down. The registration is mainly required for the purpose of giving notoriety to the deed. . . . If the registration could at any time, at whatever distance of time, be opened, parties would never know what to rely upon, or when they would be safe. If the Registrar refuses to register, there is at once a remedy by an appeal." Applying that general statement of principle to the endorsement on a deed of the alleged authentication before the Registrar of a power-of-attorney under which a person presenting the deed for registration purported to act, I think, in the absence of either a finding or of evidence to the contrary, and there is a total absence of either in this case, we are entitled to assume that when the Registrar endorsed on the deed the due authentication in his office of the power-of-attorney he meant that it was a power-of-attorney which had been properly executed and authenticated before him in accordance with law. And I, therefore, agree with my brother that the case of the respondents with regard to the presentation of the 5th of February breaks down. We, therefore, start with this, that the document in question was presented at the Sub Registrar's Office for registration in accordance with the requirements of the law which, the Privy Council in a passage which I propose to cite has said, "it is the duty of Courts of India to see carried out." The guiding principle recognised more than once by the Privy Council and reiterated by decisions in this Court is to be found in the headnote to the decision in Mujib-un-nissa v. Abdul Rahim (1): "The power and jurisdiction of the Registrar only arises when he is invoked by a person in direct relation to the document." And the necessity of guarding against opening the door even to trivial breaches of these requirements has been recently enforced by the judgment of their Lordships delivered by Sir John Edge in Jambu Farshad v. Muhammad Nawab Aftab Ali (2): "It is the duty of Courts of India not to allow the imperative provisions of the Act to be defeated when, as in this case, it is proved that an agent who presented a document for registration had not been duly authorised in the manner prescribed by the Act to present it." I would only add that a perusal of the judgment of the High Court in that case delivered by Griffin, J., shows that there was positive evidence and a finding of fact negating the strict compliance with the requirements of the Act.

These cases are decisions, as my brother has pointed out, under sections 32, 33 and 34 of the Act. And, as my brother has already pointed out, there is in the provision about presentation in section 75, to which I propose to refer in a moment, an absence of that imperative language which Sir John Edge refers to in the passage I have quoted. This brings me to the question of the second presentation, namely, of the 23rd of July by the Collector through a letter after various incidents including the death of the mortgagee had occurred and a proceeding had taken place before the Registrar. The receipt of that letter was carefully endorsed by the Sub-Registrar on the deed on the same day, and the second point which we have to decide—and it is really the great difficulty in the case—is whether there was a due presentation of that deed in accordance with section 75. I have come to the conclusion that there was, very largely for this reason. I think Part VI and Part XII of the Act deal with totally different circumstances and contemplate a totally different situation, and that the fallacy underlying the respondent's argument is an attempt to introduce into Part XII considerations bearing upon interpretation which are really only applicable to Part VI. The contrast between the two parts is really significant. Part VI is a collection of sections, and they are those on which the decisions of High Courts and Privy Council have been mainly given, dealing solely with "of presenting documents for registration." Part XII is also self-contained and deals with a situation created by what is called "of refusal to register", we have to deal with a case of refusal to register and of another kind of presentation in consequence of the proceedings rendered necessary by such refusal. Section 71 (2) says that "no Registering Officer shall accept for registration a document endorsed with a refusal unless and until, under the provisions hereinafter contained, the document is directed to be registered." Section 72, so far as there is anything before us in the case at present, does not apply but I refer to it for one rather important fact. The word "presented" occurs in it, namely, that an appeal may be heard from the order of the Sub-Registrar if presented to the Registrar within 30 days. It could hardly be contended that that presentation must be of the strict personal character which is obviously intended by Part VI of the Act and, therefore, we find in the part of the Act which we have to construe that the word "presented" is used in what I may call a more elastic sense. Section 73 deals with the right of the party who desires to secure registration where the Sub-Registrar refuses on the ground of the denial of execution. That right is to apply to the Registrar to establish his right to have the document registered. Section 74 provides for an enquiry before the Registrar as the result of such application into (a) the execution, (b) the compliance with the requirements of the law. As regards "presenting" it clearly refers to such presentation as is dealt with by Part VI "so as to entitle the document to registration." And in connection with such enquiry section 75 (4) enables the Registrar to summon and enforce the attendance of witnesses to compel them to give evidence as if he were a Civil Court and to deal with costs which are made recoverable as if they had been awarded in a suit under the Code of Civil Procedure. In my view that proceeding is a judicial proceeding and was intended by the Legislature to be a judicial proceeding, the ordinary penalty for failure in which was visited on the unsuccessful party in the way such penalties are. And to my mind, therefore, the questions of the due execution, the due authorisation of the person presenting, and the due presentation, when such an enquiry has taken place, are decided, and disposed of for the purpose of the immediate question of registration or non-registration in a final order. The result of the Registrar's order, if in the affirmative, is to establish the right of the person to have the document registered and to entitle the document to registration, and the form of his order is an order that it shall be registered. To my mind, though I feel difficulty and hesitation about it, it would be to attribute totally superfluous particularity to the Legislature if one were to hold that these provisions in section 75 superimpose upon that solemn proceeding and final decision a duty, upon the person who desires merely to carry out the order of the Registrar, of performing the strict formalities which are necessary and repeatedly held by the Privy Council to be necessary before the registration by the Registrar has taken place. To my mind what happens after the Registrar's order as provided by section 75 is pure machinery. Any form of presentation, if it is backed up by an application which takes place on the part of the presenter and is noted on the order in his favour, is sufficient. And even if it were not, I agree with my brother that section 87 covers the case. And if some other form of presentation is intended the mistake is merely a defect in procedure. I, therefore, agree that this decision cannot stand and that the case is not covered by any of the authorities cited to us.

I want to add one word with regard to the way in which the case has been dealt with. As I have often said, it is in the interests of the Courts themselves, and what is far more important, in the interests of the litigants, that in a case of this description, where the evidence has in fact been taken and both sides have done all that they are able or likely to be able to do before the trial Court, and the Court, when it sits down to review the whole case and write its judgment, finds that there is some point which in its opinion enables it to dismiss the case, it should go on to dispose of all of the issues which have been dealt with in evidence and argued at the Bar before it. It is just as easy and there is no better time than when the hearing of the case is fresh in the recollection of the Court. Nobody is infallible and in a difficult case of this kind it is not unlikely that the Appellate Court may take a different view of the law and, therefore, it is of the highest importance that the Courts with these points before them should go on to complete the whole case and come to a conclusion upon the merits.

The real question in this case is whether there is anything to show that these two infant children, whom the Court of Wards represents as plaintiffs, are to be deprived of the fruits of the contract entered into by their father. And here are we sitting in this Court with all the evidence material to that point already given on both sides in the Court below, and if findings had been arrived at by the Court below, fully equipped for disposing of the case upon the merits, compelled to send the case back practically for a re-hearing, probably before another Judge, two years at least after the original hearing of the suit. It is suggested that even after that has taken place and it has come to this Court again, there might still be an appeal to the Privy Council on the main question of registration. All these proceedings have a tendency to prolong to an unspeakable extent the decision of a comparatively trivial dispute and to accumulate the expenditure of costs out of all proportion to the issues involved. Of course where there is a preliminary point, it is a totally different matter, viz., as to whether a heavy appeal has been presented out of time. No doubt it is necessary to decide as a preliminary matter whether the Court is competent to hear it at all. When everything has been done to enable the trial Court to dispose of a case, I think it is a great misfortune, and it happens a great deal too often, that the Judge gets rid of it by disposing of some legal technicalities raised by one of the parties and leaving the merits wholly untouched. I agree with my brother that this is a preliminary point and that the proper order is the one that has been passed.

By THE COURT.—We set aside the decree of the Court below and remand the case to that Court under Order XLII, rule 23, of the Code of Civil Procedure for re-trial and disposal on the merits. We leave the costs of this appeal, which will include fees on the higher scale, to be costs in the cause.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 252

August 22, 1917.

Present.—Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, Kt., and Mr. Justice Walmsley.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
versus

DIGAMBAR NANDA—PLAINTIFF—
RESPONDENT.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 5, 104B —Landlord and tenant—Tenant, status of—Tenure or raiyyati interest—S. 104B, scope of suit under.

The mere fact that a tenant has sub-let his land is not decisive of the question whether he is a tenure-holder or a raiyyat. [p. 44, col. 2; p. 45, col. 1.]

The test to be applied to determine the status of a tenant is the purpose for which the right of tenancy was originally acquired. [p. 45, col. 1.]

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA V. DIGAMBAR NANDA.

The statutory presumption under sub-section 5 of section 5 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application when the terms of the original grant of a tenancy are known. [p. 45, col. 1.]

In cases where the origin of the tenancy is unknown or where the terms of the grant are ambiguous, the mode of user of the land and the evidence of the subsequent conduct of the parties may furnish a valuable clue to determine the original purpose of the tenancy. [p. 45, cols. 1 & 2.]

In a suit under section 104H, Bengal Tenancy Act it is not sufficient for the Court to hold that the entry in the settlement rent roll as to the status or the rent is erroneous. The Court must affirmatively determine the exact conditions and incidents of the tenancy as also the rent to be settled on such basis. [p. 46, col. 1.]

Where an amalnamah, which sanctioned the entry of the tenant on the land demised, recited that the mauzas as mentioned therein were settled with the tenant for bringing them under cultivation and directed him to extirpate wild beasts and by clearing out jungles and raising embankments at his own expense to carry on cultivation and tillage and enjoy the crops thereof, and the regular lease which followed did not indicate any intention to alter the nature of the tenancy, but authorised the grantee to continue to enjoy the profits of the land by bringing it under cultivation either by himself or by making settlement with tenants for a term of nineteen years at a progressive rate of rent:

Held, that notwithstanding the land settled exceeded 2,000 bighas in area the settlement was of a raiya holding and not of a tenure. [p. 44, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Midnapur, dated the 27th March 1913.

Babu Ram Charan Mitra, for the Appellant.
Mr. B. Chakrabarty, and Bibus Shib Chunder Palit, Khirad Narayan Bhuiya and Dharendra Krishna Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the Secretary of State for India in Council in a suit instituted by the respondent under section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act for declaration that he is an occupancy raiya in respect of the subject-matter of the litigation and for incidental reliefs. The Subordinate Judge has decreed the suit and has held that the plaintiff is not a tenure-holder but an occupancy raiya and that the existing rent which the plaintiff was liable to pay before the last survey and settlement proceedings was fair and equitable. The substantial question in controversy, consequently, is whether the plaintiff is an occupancy raiya as he alleges, or whether he is a tenure-holder as recorded by the Revenue Authorities. The root of the title of the plaintiff is an amalnamah granted on the 19th June 1868 to his father by

Lal Chand Bhuia, the then settlement-holder under the Government. This document recites that the mauzas mentioned were settled with the grantee for bringing them under cultivation, and it specially directs the grantee to extirpate wild beasts and by clearing out jungle and raising embankments at his own expense to carry on cultivation and tillage and enjoy the crops thereof. The express purpose of the grant consequently was reclamation and cultivation of the leasehold lands by the grantee. No rent was settled at the time but the amalnamah recites that a pattah would be granted at the proper rent in the following year. On the 14th June 1869, the grantor executed a pattah in favour of the grantee. This instrument recites that, on the strength of the amalnamah, Bholanath Nanda had taken possession of land exceeding two thousand bighas in area and that he had at his own expense commenced to reclaim jungles, to raise embankments and to cultivate the lands. The settlement was made for a term of 19 years for carrying on cultivation at a progressive rate of rent. The document further authorised the grantee to continue to enjoy the profits of the lands by bringing them under cultivation either by himself or by making settlement with tenants, and a covenant was inserted to the effect that if the grantee did not cultivate the lands fit for cultivation within the term of the lease, he would be liable to compensation for loss that might be sustained by the grantor. In our opinion, this document leaves no room for doubt that the settlement was of a raiya holding and not of a tenure. The amalnamah was expressly granted for the purpose of reclamation and cultivation by the grantee, and the regular lease which followed did not indicate any intention to alter the nature of the tenancy. Stress has been laid, however, on the circumstance that under the lease the grantee was authorised to cultivate the land, either by himself or by making settlement with tenants. This clause obviously does not show conclusively that the tenant was a tenure-holder and not a raiya. A tenure-holder may settle a raiya on the land of his tenancy, and, a raiya also may, in his turn, sub-let the land of his holding to an under-raiya. Consequently, the mere fact that a tenant has sub-let his land does not by itself establish conclusively that his status is that of a tenure-holder, and not that of a raiyat. The test to be applied to determine the status of a tenant is the intention of the contracting parties. Section 5, sub-section (1), of the Bengal Tenancy Act defines a "tenure-holder" to mean primarily a person who has acquired from a proprietor or from another tenure-holder a right to hold land for the purpose of collecting rent or bringing it under cultivation by establishing tenants on it. Sub-section (2) of section 5 defines "raiyat" to mean primarily a person who has acquired such a right to hold land for the purpose of cultivating it by himself or by members of his family or by hired servants or with the aid of partners. Sub-section (3) further provides that a person shall not be deemed to be a raiyat unless he holds lands either immediately under a proprietor or immediately under a tenure-holder. These definitions show that there may be a tenure holder directly under a proprietor as there may be a raiyat directly under a proprietor. The test to be applied in each case is furnished by section 5, sub-section (4), namely, the purpose for which the right of tenancy was originally acquired. Sub-section (5) formulates a rebuttable presumption, namely, that where the area held by the tenant exceeds one hundred standard bighas, the tenant shall be presumed to be a tenure-holder until the contrary is shown. There is no room, however, for the application of this statutory presumption when the terms of the original grant are known, as in the case before us. To ascertain the status of the plaintiff, we must consequently determine the purpose for which the tenancy was originally created; did the grantor intend to carve out the interest of a middleman or did he intend to settle the land with a person who would bring the lands under cultivation? The mere fact that the plaintiff has sub-let the land is not decisive, because a tenure-holder, though a middleman who collects rent, may yet cultivate a portion of the land himself, just as much as a raiyat, though himself a cultivator, may settle a portion of the land with under-raiyats. In cases where the origin of the tenancy is unknown, the mode of user of the land may furnish a valuable clue to determine the original purpose of the tenancy, and where the terms of the grant are ambiguous, evidence of conduct subsequent of the parties may also be admissible: Pramotha Nath Kumar v. Nilmoni Kumar (1), Promoda Nath Roy v. Asir-ud-din (2), Bamapada Roy v. Midnapur Zemindary Co. (3). The case before us, however, is free from the difficulty which arises when the terms of the original grant are either unknown or ambiguous. Here the amalnamah, which sanctioned the entry of the grantee on the land demised and the lease which followed, makes it plain beyond controversy that the purpose of the settlement was reclamation and cultivation by the grantee himself. The interest created was consequently that of a raiyat and not that of a tenure-holder. In this view, it is needless to consider the conduct of the parties. But we may observe that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge shows, and his view is amply sustained by the materials on the record, that the Settlement Authorities have, from time to time, regarded the plaintiff and his predecessor, not as tenure-holders, but as raiyat entitled to a right of occupancy. Stress was laid by the appellant on the decisions in Secretary of State for India v. J. dan Chandra Misra (4) and Secretary of State for India v. Gobiinda Prasad Barik (5). No useful purpose would, however, be served by an analysis of decisions given on entirely different sets of circumstances, and we may usefully recall the emphatic protest of Lord Haldane, L. C., in the case of Kreglinger v. New Patagonia Meat and Cold Storage Co. (6), against the abuse of judicial precedents, when they are cited, not as authorities for principles enunciated therein, but as guides in the determination of the rights of parties which are dependent on the facts of individual cases, and the contractual obligations enforceable between them. We must accordingly confirm the findings of the Subordinate Judge that the plaintiff is a raiyat and not a tenure-holder.

The next question which requires examination is, is the plaintiff an occupancy or a non-occupancy raiyat, and what is the fair rent assessable on the lands in suit according to his status? In the Court below, it appears to have been assumed that if the plaintiff was not a tenure-holder as found by the Revenue Authorities, he must be an occupancy raiyat. This, however, does not necessarily follow. Indeed, it has been argued before us that after the creation of the holding, the plaintiff was for a period an Ijaradar, and that this circumstance interrupted the growth and perfection of the right of occupancy. This is an aspect of the matter which has not been fully investigated. Besides this, the question of the fair rent payable by the plaintiff must depend upon his precise status, and till that has been determined with accuracy, it is impossible to ascertain the amount of rent to be settled. In a suit under section 104H, it is not sufficient for the Court to hold that the entry in the settlement rent roll as to the status or the rent is erroneous. The Court must affirmatively determine the exact conditions and incidents of the tenancy as also the rent to be settled on such basis; this is obvious, as under sub-section (7), the rent settled by the Court is deemed to have been duly settled in place of the rent entered in the settlement rent roll. It is consequently impossible to affirm the decree of the Subordinate Judge, although we hold that his view that the plaintiff is not a tenure holder is correct.

The result is that this appeal must be allowed and the decree of the Court below set aside. The decree of this Court will declare that the status of the plaintiff is that of a raiyat and the case will be remitted to the Subordinate Judge, to determine whether the plaintiff is an occupancy raiyat or a non-occupancy raiyat and then to ascertain the fair rent payable by him. The plaintiff will have half his costs both here and in the Court below. The costs after remand will abide the result.

Appeal allowed.

RESPONDENT.

Malabar Law and Usage—Otti mortgagee, right of pre-emption of—Involuntary sale, enforceability of right in—Notice of sale and of sale price, whether necessary—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 60, 65, O. XXI, rr. 89, 90, 91, 92.

The right of pre-emption of an otti mortgagee in Malabar does not arise in the case of an involuntary sale, and he is not entitled to notice of the sale or of the sale price in such a case.

Baij Nath v. Sital Singh, 13 A. 224; A. W. N. (1891) 68; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.), 141, approved.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court of South Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 789 of 1915, preferred against the decree of the Court of the First Additional District Munsif, Calicut, in Original Suit No. S44 of 1914.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 5th of December 1917, upon perusing the grounds of appeal, the judgments and decrees of the lower Appellate Court and the Court of first instance, and the material papers in the suit, and upon hearing the arguments of Messrs. C. V. Anantha Krishna Aiyar and K. P. Ramakrishna Aiyar for the Appellant and of Mr. C. Madhavan Nair for the Respondent, and the case having stood over for consideration till the 11th December 1917, the Court (Ayling and Philips, JJ.) made the following ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

PHILLIPS, J.—In this case the plaintiff is an ottidar of the plaint property. The jenmi granted a second mortgage, and in execution of a decree upon that mortgage 1st defendant's brother purchased the property subject to plaintiff's otti right. First defendant then sued for redemption of the otti and obtained a decree. Plaintiff now sues to enforce his right of pre-emption. The question for consideration is the nature of the rights of an ottidar, when the property, over which he holds the otti, is sold in Court auction.

In Oheria Krishnan v. Vishnu (1) it was held that an otti mortgagee was entitled "to be fully informed what price he is to pay before he makes up his mind to buy" and that although he has notice of the sale by auction but fails to bid, he is not precluded from subsequently exercising his right of pre-emption. In Ammotti Haji v. Kunhayen Kutti (2) a somewhat different view was taken and it was held that an ottidar in Malabar loses his right of pre-emption if he fails to bid at a Court sale of the land after having been specially invited to attend and exercise his right, and makes no offer to take the property for a long time after the Court sale. The only distinction between the two cases is that in the former the ottidar had only public notice of the sale, whereas in the latter he had had special notice. In Kanaran Nair v. Raman Nambiar (3) this Court followed the ruling in Oheria Krishnan v. Vishnu (1), although the ottidar had had special notice of the sale and distinguished Ammotti Haji v. Kunhayen Kutti (2) on the ground that there may have been evidence in that case on which it could be held that the ottidar had been placed in a position to elect.

It is very difficult to reconcile these three decisions and I think it advisable that the question should be finally determined by a Full Bench, and I am further inclined to the opinion that the decision in Oheria Krishnan v. Vishnu (1) goes too far. An ottidar is a mortgagee with a right of pre-emption. It is contended for respondent that the pre-emption right of an otti mortgagee in Malabar is something higher than the right of pre-emption as ordinarily understood, it being a right based on custom. The right of an ottidar has been considered by Courts in Madras from 1854 onwards, but the question of whether his right of pre-emption was greater than the ordinarily recognized rights of pre-emption in other places does not appear to have been discussed. In Oheria Krishnan v. Vishnu (1), however, the learned Judges say that "the right of pre-emption is well understood. The otti mortgagee must pay for pre-emption whatever sum is bona fide offered to the jenmi for the purchase, if he has the offer made to him by the jenmi and is rightly informed of the circumstances in reference to the offer. If he does not pay such sum, then his right of pre-emption is gone."

In Mamabi v. Acharath Parakat (4) the previous cases on the subject of otti were reviewed and it was held that the right of an ottidar consists in a right to elect when there has been an attempt on the part of the owner of the property to sell it to a third person, whether he will buy it for the same price as that offered by the third person or not. There would seem to be no difference between the right defined as above, and the ordinary right of pre-emption (as understood in Mahammadan and other laws).

When, therefore, the owner intends to sell the land by private treaty, the ottidar is entitled to come in and buy it at the same price, and according to Oheria Krishnan v. Vishnu (1) and Vasudevan v. Keshavan (5), he is further entitled to have an offer to that effect from the owner of the property, although this further right is doubted in Mamabi v. Acharath Parakat (4). When the property is to be sold by Court, it is an involuntary sale and presumably one contrary to the wishes of the owner. In such a case he cannot predict the price at which the property will be sold, and consequently he cannot offer the property to the ottidar for a certain fixed price. If he is to offer it after the sale is completed, he will be making an offer which may have the effect of upsetting a sale by Court even after it is confirmed. It is questionable whether it is desirable that the right of pre-emption should be allowed to that extent, unless it is clearly established that the right does go so far. In Baij Nath v. Sital Singh (6) Mahmood, J., held that the right of pre-emption, whether claimed under the Muhammadan Law, the compact of the wajib ul-arz or local usage and custom, does not arise in respect of compulsory sales, and in this view followed Abdul Jabel v. Khelatchandra Ghose (7), Shaikh Ferasut Ali v. Ashootosh Roy Singh (8) and Sheikh Nuzmoodeen v. Kanye Jha (9). This aspect of the question does not appear to have been considered in relation to the pre-emptive rights of an ottidar in Malabar, but the arguments of Mahmood, J., in support of his view would equally apply to such rights. In equity the ottidar would be entitled to notice of the sale of property in which he has so large an interest, but I can see no ground for showing him any greater consideration. His right of pre-emption arises out of a contract between him and the owner, and when by order of Court the owner is prevented from intimating the exact amount of the sale price, he should in equity be deemed to have completed his part of the contract when he has informed the ottidar that a sale is to take place and has thus afforded him an opportunity of buying at the price which the property would properly fetch, assuming that the right of pre-emption arises in such cases. There is no question of his being driven to give a fancy auction price, as remarked in Oheria Krishnan v. Vishnu (1), for he is not compelled to buy—can cease bidding whenever the bidding has reached the amount which he is willing to pay for the land.

We, therefore, refer the following questions for decision by a Full Bench:—

1. Does the right of pre-emption of an ottidar mortgagee arise in the case of an involuntary sale?

(6) 13 A. 224; A. W. N. (1891) 68; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 141.

(8) 15 W. R. 455.

(9) Marsh. 555; 2 Hay 651.

2. If so, is he entitled to be informed of the sale price before he can be called upon to exercise or forego his right, or is mere notice of the auction-sale sufficient?

AYLING, J.—I agree to the proposed reference: and am inclined to share my learned brother's view as to the applicability of the right of pre-emption in relation to enforced sales

This second appeal came on for hearing on 4th March 1918, in pursuance of the above Order of Reference, before a Full Bench.

Messrs. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyer, and K. P. Ramakrishna Aiyer, for the Appellant, argued that the right of pre-emption exercised by a Muhammadan co-sharer applied only to private sales. The doctrine cannot be extended to involuntary sales. No express notice of the sale is necessary, the sale proclamation being sufficient notice. In Ammotti Haji v. Kunhayen Kutti (2), the ottidar's pre-emptive right as against the Court purchaser was not recognised. See also Vasudevan v. Keshavan (5). It is a right arising out of contract and does not run with the land.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Respondent, argued that the right of pre-emption was a customary right and was the creature of usage in Malabar. No analogy can be drawn from the rules of pre-emption in Muhammadan law. See M. mabi v. Acharath Parakat (4). Proclamation of sale is not sufficient notice. There must be actual notice to the ottidar both of the sale and the sale price.

The right of pre-emption runs with the land and has not been curtailed by statutory enactments.

OPINION.

WALLIS, C. J.—It is strange that in none of the cases in this Court dealing with the ottidar's right of pre-emption in Malabar, Oheria Krishnan v. Vishnu (1), Vasudevan v. Keshavan (5), Kanharaukutti v. Uthotti (10), Ammotti Haji v. Kunhayen Kutti (2), Kanaran Nair v. Raman Nambiar (3) or Mamabi v. Acharat Parakath (4) has the question been considered, how far such a right can be exercised in the case of Court and Revenue sales consistently with the provisions of the Statute Law regulating such sales. Both in Bengal and in Northern India, where cases of pre-emption are much more numerous than they are here, it appears to be well settled that it cannot in the absence of statutory provision being made for its exercise, as in the case of some revenue sales in the United Provinces. In Baij Nath v. Sital Singh (6) Mahmood, J., after reviewing the authorities, states: "It may, therefore, be taken as a rule of law settled by a long and uniform course of decision that a compulsory sale, such as a sale in execution of a decree or a sale under an authoritative order of the Revenue Authorities for arrears of Government revenue, does not render pre-emption enforceable, whether such right is claimed under Muhammadan Law, the terms of the wajib-ul-arz, or on the ground of local custom or private contract; but that such compulsory sales being the creation of Statute Law do furnish occasion for the exercise of the pre-emptive right where such right is provided subject to the rules and restrictions prescribed by those legislative enactments themselves." And he goes on to refer to the provisions of section 310 of the Code of 1882 and other local statutory provisions. The other learned Judges did not differ from Mahmood, J., on this point, but on the question whether such special statutory provisions had been made in the particular case, and the law as laid down by him was accepted as settled in Kanhai Lal v. Kalka Prasad (11).

On a careful consideration of the question I agree with the law as laid down by Mahmood, J. I find it quite impossible to reconcile the statutory provisions of the Civil Procedure Code as to sale in execution of decrees with the ottidar's right of pre-emption as now claimed. Section 60 of the Code makes immovable property belonging to the judgment-debtor liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree, and section 65 provides that, where property has been sold in execution of a decree and the sale has become absolute, it is to vest in the purchaser. Under Order XXI, rule 92, it becomes absolute where no application is made under rules 89, 90 or 91 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, or where such application is made and disallowed. The rules in question do not provide for the exercise of a right of pre-emption.

There is a very limited recognition of the right of pre-emption in rule 83, and if any further recognition had been intended, it would have been expressly provided. Having regard to the course of the decisions and the importance of the right of pre-emption in Northern India, I can only infer that the omission to make such provision was deliberate. In Manchester Ship Canal Company v. Manchester Racecourse Company (12) it was contended on the one side and not denied on the other that a right of pre-emption was quite incompatible with a sale by auction.

In these circumstances we are bound, in my opinion, even at this late stage to uphold the objection taken and to answer the question in the negative.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I entirely agree and have nothing to add.

SPENCER, J.—I also agree.

EDON MOLLAH V. BADAN.

Defendant was tenant of certain land which the landlord agreed to re-let to him on his paying a certain sum of money in cash. Defendant paid the amount and continued in possession of the land agreed to be let to him. The landlord subsequently granted a lease of the same land to the plaintiff:

Held, (1) that the landlord was not entitled to grant a lease to the plaintiff, inasmuch as he had already, by reason of the agreement with the defendant followed by the acceptance of the money, constituted the latter as a tenant on the land; [p 52, col 1.]

(2) that plaintiff, when he came to deal with the landlord, must be deemed to have had constructive notice of the rights of the defendant who was actually in possession and cultivating the land. [p. 52, col 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Faridpore, dated the 7th August 1914, affirming that of the Mansif, 2nd Court, at Bnanga, dated the 9th September 1913.

FACTS material to the report will appear from the following judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

"Sarat Kumar Mazumdar, Sasi Kumar Mazumdar and Sridhar Chatterjee are closely connected in the transactions which concern us: let us for the moment assume that they are to all intents and purposes one person and let us call that person Q.

Then Exhibit 2 is a certified copy of a registered kabuliyat for the suit lands by plaintiff Shekh Badan in favour of Q. dated 10 Aghrahan 1315.

And Exhibit A is a certified copy of a registered kabuliyat for the suit lands by defendant Edon in favour of Q. dated 5th Baisak 1315 and registered 23rd July 1908 (about Saraban 13.5.)

And Exhibit 3 is a kabuliyat for certain other land by one Kadir in favour of Q. dated 22nd Bhadra 1315 and registered 22nd September 1908.

Admittedly up to September 1907 this person Q. was at liberty to settle the suit land with whatever person he pleased.

Plaintiff's case is that by Exhibit 2 he settled the suit land with plaintiff and that plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to turn defendants out.

Defendants' case is that by Exhibit A this person Q. settled the suit land with Edon defendant and therefore the subsequent settlement, if any, embodied in Exhibit 2 is of no effect.

The plaintiff's witnesses in effect say that this person Q. has no knowledge of Exhibit A.

Formerly Edon was in possession of the suit land as a sub-lessee and Kadir was in possession of certain other land as a sub-lessee. Sridhar Chatterjee got a decree right up to the High Court to eject Edon and Kadir and to get Rs. 300 and interest as costs. Up to September 1907 he had failed to realise any part of the money by execution. He admits that on one occasion one Amar Nath Bhattacharjee came to see him on behalf of Edon; from Exhibit 6, we find the date must be September 1907. On 24th September 1907, it was notified to the Mansif's Court that the amount of Rs. 300 and interest as costs had been amicably realised.

The defendant's story of what happened at Amar Nath's visit is this. Sridhar said on that occasion in effect: "If Edon pays me Rs. 150 in cash I will settle the suit land with him (i. e. the present suit land) and if Kadir pays me the other Rs. 150 I will settle that other land with him." A few days later Edon actually paid Sridhar the Rs. 150. Sridhar handed Edon a draft for a kabuliyat for the present suit lands. Edon accordingly had a kabuliyat written out, there was delay as he was ill, and registered and handed it to Sridhar some ten days after the registration.

The Mansif said: "there is no sufficient evidence to hold that Sridhar Chatterjee accepted the kabuliyat Exhibit A."

What the Mansif seems to think really happened is this. In September 1907 Sridhar said: "If Edon pays me the Rs. 150 in cash—decretal money—I will settle those 2 plots (i. e., present suit land) with him." Accordingly in September 1907 Edon did actually pay Sridhar the Rs. 150. But Sridhar did nothing further towards settling the land with Edon. Finally Edon without any further sanction from Sridhar or Sarat Majumdar or Sasi Majumdar created the original of Exhibit A and signed it and had it registered. But neither Sridhar nor Sarat nor Sasi ever sanctioned it either before or after registration.

I think that is what must have happened. I also think that Exhibit A is just on the lines of what Sridhar proposed in Amar Nath's presence. The former rent paid by Edon as sub-lessee was Rs. 4. In Exhibit A he promises to pay Rs. 6. D W. No. 3, Dilmamud, says it was Amar Nath who suggested the rise from Rs. 4 to Rs. 6, implying that Sridhar concurred. Amar Nath does not remember; but it seems most likely.

Edon says the original of Exhibit A was copied from a draft made by Sridhar himself. The Munsif thinks that is a lie. I agree with him. I entirely agree with his reasons for thinking the wording of Exhibit A is not such as Sridhar would have adopted.

It is argued for appellant in effect that I should suppose that the natural thing to happen did happen, and that as Sridhar had agreed to accept a kubaliyat on the lines of Exhibit A he did accept the original of Exhibit A. But when I look at the wording of Exhibit A, viz, statements that Edon was tenant from before and paid rent at Rs. 4 formerly, I think it is not a likely thing that Sridhar would even have accepted such a document as Exhibit A.

It was not argued before me, except in reply as a mere afterthought, that Sridhar's mere verbal promise in September 1907 to settle the land if the Rs. 150 were paid, followed by the actual payment of the Rs. 150, sufficed to confer a title to the land on Edon even if Exhibit A was never accepted. Nor is it a thing which can be taken for granted.

The result is that I agree with the Munsif's finding that acceptance of Exhibit A is not established and with his order decreeing the suit.

Sridhar appears to have acted despicably and I think it unlikely that Badan the plaintiff is blameless in the transaction. Consequently I refuse costs in this Court.

The appeal is dismissed and the decree of the Munsif affirmed. Parties will bear their own costs in the appeal."

Babu Prokash Chandra Mazumdar, for the Appellant.—My client has been all along on the land. A suit was brought against my client by the landlord previously to this. That suit came up to the High Court. The landlord succeeded in that suit and a decree was made against my client and another person for Rs. 300. Subsequently the landlord agreed to re-let the land on getting Rs. 150 in cash from my client. The sum was paid by my client, so that the terms of the agreement were carried out by my client and the landlord, having accepted the sum, cannot resile from the agreement. I was a tenant by virtue of that agreement and so long as I remain in possession and do not give up my right as the lessee of the land, the landlord has no right to settle the land with the plaintiff. The lease granted by the landlord to the plaintiff being subsequent to my payment of Rs. 150 to the landlord in accordance with his verbal agreement to lease the land to me cannot be operative as against my right as a lessee. Moreover, the plaintiff cannot claim that he was a bona fide transferee because he knew or would have known by the exercise of reasonable diligence that I was in possession of the land as a lessee. Even assuming that the plaintiff has not notice, actual or constructive, he cannot eject me from the land which I held as a lessee before the plaintiff got his lease. My title being prior cannot be affected in any way by the subsequent lease which the landlord purported to grant to the plaintiff.

No one appeared for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant against the judgment of the learned Additional District Judge of Faridpore, dated the 7th August 1914, affirming the decision of the Munsif of the second Court at Bhanga. The suit was one for ejectment brought by a lessee claiming under the same landlord as the defendant. The question, therefore, is who has got a prior title. The obvious facts are these:—

The defendant originally had a lease of this land. There is no doubt about that. A litigation took place between him and the landlord. The case went up to the High Court and Rs. 300 was decreed against the defendant and another person named Kadir. According to the findings, terms of settlement were determined and these terms of settlement, it was found by both the lower Courts, were these: that if the defendant Edon paid to the landlord Rs. 150 in cash out of the decretal amount, the landlord would re-let two of the plots (that is, the land in contest in the present suit) to Edon. It was also found that the defendant complied with those terms, namely, that Edon paid Rs. 150 to the landlord in September 1907. Therefore the defendant Edon became entitled to a lease of the two plots in suit. He was already in possession of those two plots. Therefore having complied with the terms and having got a verbal agreement and possession of the land, the defendant was in possession of the property as a lessee. It is quite true that he foolishly executed a kabuliyat which he said was in accordance with the terms which had been approved of by his landlord. That has been found against him by both the lower Courts. It was a foolish thing to do; but it cannot affect Edon's right to continue in possession of the land after he has paid the Rs. 150 to his landlord for that right. That was in September 1907. The plaintiff claims under a lease dated the 10th Aghran 1315, that is, in the year 1908. It is quite clear that the landlord was not entitled to grant that lease in 1908 to the plaintiff. He had already, by reason of the agreement followed by the acceptance of Rs. 150, constituted the defendant Edon as a tenant on the land. Moreover, the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court considers that it is unlikely that the plaintiff is blameless in the transaction, by which I suppose he means that the plaintiff had notice of the actual agreement that had taken place between the landlord and the defendant Edon. In any case, the defendant Edon being in actual possession of the land and enjoyment thereof the plaintiff, when he came to deal with the landlord, had constructive notice of the rights of Edon who was actually in possession and cultivating the land. In that view of the case, the plaintiff by his kabuliyat got nothing from the landlord. The present appeal is, therefore, allowed and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs both here and in the Courts below.

PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

M. V. APPAVU CHETTIAR AND OTHERS —

DEFENDANTS RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—Transfer to defeat or defraud creditors, whether liable to impeachment by creditors as defence to suit—Right of individual creditors to set aside sale.

A transfer effected with intent to defeat or defraud the creditors of the transferor confers a good title on the transferee, until it is set aside by a suit by the creditors for that express purpose. The creditors cannot plead the colourable nature of the transaction by way of defence to an action by the transferee to establish his title under the sale, if they have not already sued for its cancellation [p. 54, col. 1; p. 57, col. 1.]

Per Coutts Trotter, J.—The mere obtaining of a judgment in India creates no title or only an inchoate title in the judgment creditor, and therefore a creditor who impeaches a transfer must follow up his judgment by attaching the properties in order to enable him to utilise section 53 in answer to a claim founded on the impeached deed of transfer. [p. 54, col. 1.]

It is inconvenient to allow each and every creditor in turn to attack such deed independently. [p. 54, col. 1.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—There is nothing in Hindu Law which is inconsistent with section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. At any rate, the section may be taken as indicating the principles of equity, justice and good conscience which ought to guide Courts in the absence of specific legislative provisions [p. 55, col. 1.]

On the language of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act it is open to any creditor to impeach a conveyance made by his debtor, provided he alleges in the plaint that the sale was intended to defraud him and others similarly placed. [p. 55, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 865 of 1912, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Mayavaram, in Original Suit No. 47 of 1910.

The Advocate-General and Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, for the Respondents.

The second appeal coming on for hearing on 9th and 14th February 1916 and having stood over for consideration till 21st March 1916, the Court delivered the following

PALANIANDI CHETTY v. APPAVU CHETTIAR.

JUDGMENT.

COURTS TROTTER, J.—Although this appeal raises questions of difficulty and importance the facts material to it can be stated very shortly. The plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was the absolute owner by purchase of the suit properties as against the defendants who were holders of decrees against his vendor. The plaintiff's title was based on a sale-deed dated the 5th of September 1903 from Velayudan Chetty to himself for a consideration of Rs. 14,250. It has been found that this deed and the transaction which it carried out was brought into existence with intent to defraud and defeat the creditors of the transferor, and that finding is not and cannot be challenged; but the appellant contends that it is not competent to the defendant to invoke that finding in aid in the present proceedings. For the moment, I am assuming that the transaction in question was in this sense a real one, that it effected and was meant to effect a real transfer of the property from the transferor to the transferee, that is to say, it was not a merely colourable paper transaction leaving the real beneficial enjoyment of the property with him who purported to transfer it. Had the transaction been a merely colourable one, it would, no doubt, have been void and the plaintiff could not have succeeded in his action. His contention is that if it is only voidable it stands good until set aside in proceedings appropriate for the purpose, such proceedings being a suit brought for the express purpose by or on behalf of all the creditors of the transferor.

The material section is section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, which is as follows:—"Every transfer of immoveable property, made with intent to defraud prior or subsequent transferees thereof for consideration, or co-owners or other persons having an interest in such property, or to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor, is voidable at the option of any person so defrauded, defeated or delayed."

The section broadly reproduces the effect of the famous Statute of Elizabeth, 13 Eliz. C. 5, and the English decisions on that Statute are always referred to in India as authorities for the construction of the Indian section. In England it has been held that a suit to avoid a settlement must be brought on behalf of all creditors: Acree River Silver Mining Company v. Atwell (1), and that decision has been followed in India in Hakim Lal v. Mooshah r Sahu (2) and Bunjori Dorabji Patel v. Dhunbai (3). But it has been held by the English Courts that where the plaintiff is a judgment-creditor who has sued out a Writ of Elegit, he may sue on his own behalf without reference to the general body of creditors and impeach the transfer as having been executed with intent to defraud his particular claim: Blenkinsopp v. Blenkinsopp (4). That case expressly left open the question as to whether the deed could be set aside by a person who had signed judgment but not sued out the writ. We are asked to say that in India the section may be called in aid by a creditor who has obtained a decree but has not attached the properties, it being conceded that a creditor who has attached the properties can use the section as a weapon of defence as well as of offence in a case like the present. See Rajani Kumar Dass v. Gaur Kishore Shaha (5) and Chidambaram Chettiar v. Sami Aiyar (6). The matter has been definitely decided by the High Court of Bombay in Ishar Timappa v. Devar Venkappa (7), a decision to which Jenkins, C. J., was a party. In the absence of this Court, I propose to consider the matter on principle.

The remedy sought may be treated as the equivalent of a remedy by way of equitable execution in aid of the legal right given by the judgment. The English authorities subsequent to Blenkinsopp v. Blenkinsopp (4) seem clearly to show that such an equitable execution will not be granted until the title of him who seeks it has been completed; that is to say, according to the technical language of the English Law, a judgment-creditor cannot invoke the equitable relief until he has followed up his judgment by suing out a writ of fi fu or Elegit, as the case may be.

PALANIANDI CHETTY v. APPAVU CHETTIAR.

This was expressly decided by Turner, V. C., (as he then was) in Smith v. Hurst (8) and he cites in his judgment an interesting passage from Lord Redesdale's Treatise on Pleading. An authoritative and clear exposition of the principle on which Turner, V. C., founded his decision is contained in Lord Cottenham's opinion in Neale v. Duke of Marlborough (9). Applying that principle I think it must be held that the mere obtaining of a judgment in India creates no title or only an inchoate title in the judgment-creditor, and therefore he must follow up his judgment by attaching the properties in order to enable him to utilize section 53 in answer to a claim founded on the impeached deed of transfer. The inconvenience of allowing each and every creditor in turn to attack the deed independently is obvious and is amply illustrated by the history of the present plaintiff who has been compelled to buy off a series of creditors one after the other. Accordingly I am of opinion that Ishvar Timappa v. Devar Venkappa (7) is correctly decided and is in accordance with principle and I respectfully follow it. I, therefore, hold that the fact that the deed was executed with intent to defraud the creditors of the transferor affords the defendants no answer to the plaintiff's claim.

As the learned Judge has not decided the question as to whether the transaction is merely colourable, the case must go back to him for a finding on the point. Six weeks are allowed for submission of findings and seven days are allowed for filing objections. Costs will be reserved.

SESHAGI Aiyar, J.—The property in this suit belonged to one Velayudham Chetty. He executed a sale deed to the plaintiff in respect of it on the 5th September 1903. It is not disputed that at the time of the sale Velayudham Chetty was heavily involved in debt. The defendants in this suit had a number of decrees against him for sums of money due to them before the date of the sale to the plaintiff. They attached the properties in execution of their decree. The plaintiff filed a claim petition which was rejected in September 1910. Thereupon he filed the present suit for a declaration that the property belonged to him by virtue of the sale and that Velayudham Chetty had no interest left in the property for the defendants to attach and sell. The Subordinate Judge who tried the original suit held that the sale was binding to the extent of Rs. 9,945 odd, as that sum was applied towards discharging certain mortgages upon the property created by Velayudham Chetty. He dismissed the suit as regards the rest of the claim put forward by the plaintiff. On appeal to the District Judge, the Subordinate Judge's decree was confirmed. In this second appeal a point was raised for the first time by Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar to the effect that as the defendants had not sued to set aside the sale in favour of the plaintiff before they attached the properties in execution of their decrees, they were not entitled to resist the claim of the plaintiff in this suit. Mr. Anantakrishna Aiyar objected to this contention being heard for the first time in second appeal, as he might have rectified the defect if the objection had been raised before the trial Court. It is difficult to see what new evidence could have been let in by the defendants in answer to the abstract legal position argued in this Court. The plaintiff's case is that at the time of the attachment Velayudham Chetty had no interest in the property; because at that time no suit had been brought to set aside the sale in plaintiff's favour. To such a contention, if it is sound, the only answer will be that the sale had been set aside in a properly framed suit. That is not the answer. The decision in Rakim Lal v. Mooshahar Sahu (2), where it was pointed out that an objection like this should not be entertained in second appeal, does not help the respondents. In that case the suit was brought by some of the creditors, and when objection was taken in a second appeal that the suit should have been brought in a representative character, it was met by the plea that if the objection had been taken in time this defect could have been cured. That is not the present case. Although it is unfortunate that this question was not raised in the earlier stage, I do not see my way to refusing to hear the question argued.

On the merits, the first contention of

PALANIANDI CHETTY v. APPAYU CHETTIAR.

Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar was that under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, it is not open to any one of the creditors of the transferor to challenge the validity of the conveyance; he relied on the observations of Mookerjee and Holmwood, J.J., in Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar Sahu (2). In the first place it should be pointed out that section 53 does not in terms apply to the present case, as it is in Chapter II which preserves to Hindus, Muhammadans, and Buddhists their own law on the question covered by its provisions. This will not, however, materially affect the decision, as there is nothing in the Hindu Law which is inconsistent with section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, see Rangilbhai Kalyandas v. Vinayak Vishnu (10). At any rate section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act may be taken as indicating the principles of equity, justice and good conscience which ought to guide Courts in the absence of specific legislative provisions. The decision in Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar Sahu (2), no doubt, lays down that it is settled law in England that if the debtor is alive and not a bankrupt at the time the action is brought to set aside a conveyance on the ground that it was voidable under Statute 13, Elizabeth, Chapter 5, it should be by a creditor or creditors on behalf of himself or themselves and all other creditors of the debtor. The learned Judges say that the rule appears to be based upon a perfectly sound and intelligible principle and point out the difficulties which the contrary conclusion may lead to. Speaking for myself, there are as many difficulties in demanding that all the creditors should join in a representative action as there are in permitting a number of actions being brought against the same purchaser. However that may be, the language of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, to my mind, is clear that any person who was defrauded, defeated or delayed can impeach the transaction,

Before dealing with the English cases quoted by the learned Vakil for the appellant, I wish to draw attention to section 11, explanation 6, of the Code of Civil Procedure. That will apply to actions which may be brought by one of the defeated or delayed creditors if he claims a right which is common to himself and to other creditors similarly situated. It may be that section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act has been so worded having regard to the language of this explanation to section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The case of Hakim Lal v. Mooshahar Sahu (2) went up on appeal to the Judicial Committee but their Lordships did not decide the case on this point. See Musahar Sahu v. Hakim Lal (11). The only other Indian cases bearing on the question are Burjorji Dorabji Patel v. Dhunbai (3) and Ishvar Timappa v. Devar Venkappa (7). Among a number of points decided by Mr. Justice Telang in Burjorji Dorabji Patel v. Dhunbai (3) the learned Judge points out that the plaintiffs in that suit were only some of the creditors and that they were not entitled to succeed inasmuch as the suit was not filed by them on behalf of and for the benefit of all the creditors. When this decision was passed, the Transfer of Property Act did not apply to the Bombay Presidency and the decision proceeded solely upon English authorities. Ishvar Timappa v. Devar Venkappa (7) was after the Transfer of Property Act was applied to Bombay. It does not appear from the judgment that the learned Judges required that the other creditors should eo nomine be parties to the suit. Some observations of the Judicial Committee in Chatterput Singh v. Maharaj Bahadur (12) were relied upon by the appellant. The observation that "such an issue could be raised and such a decree could be made only in a suit properly constituted for that purpose" does not necessarily imply that a representative action is the only mode of setting aside a fraudulent sale. Therefore I am of opinion on the language of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act that it is open to any creditor to impeach a conveyance made by his debtor, provided he alleges in the plaint that the sale was intended to defraud him and others similarly placed. A decree in such a suit will not give any personal rights to the litigating plaintiff but would ensure for the benefit of all creditors like himself.

PALANIANDI CHETTY v. APPAVU CHETTIAR.

The English cases to which our attention was drawn do not in unmistakeable terms lay down that all the creditors should join in a representative action before a fraudulent sale can be set aside. All that Justice Williams in Veys v. Frown (13) held was that the settlement should not be treated as void but it was liable to impeachment in a proper action. Glegg v. Bromley (14) does not take the matter any further. But both these cases are authorities for the position that the assignment by the debtor will be good and valid until it is set aside in a proper proceeding. There are certain observations in May on Fraudulent Conveyances which on their face appeared to mean that a judgment-creditor was in a different position from an ordinary creditor and that it was open to the former by virtue of his judgment to levy execution without having the assignment set aside in a suit for that purpose. The proposition is thus stated: "Where a creditor has a judgment, or order of Court, or process of execution in respect of his claim, and might obtain relief in equity thereunder against property held by, or in trust for, his debtor, and the debtor is living, a Court of Equity can declare a settlement made by the debtor, which is fraudulent within 13 Eliz. C 5 to be void against the plaintiff, without also declaring it to be void against the creditors generally, and may direct the settled property, or a sufficient part of it, to be applied in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim." When the cases cited for this proposition are examined, they show that if a judgment was obtained at common law and a further action was brought in the Equity Court to have it declared that the settlement or conveyance by the debtor in fraud of creditors was void, the Court of Chancery will not move in the matter until all the common law remedies had been exhausted. See Smith v. Hurst (8) and Neate v. Duke of Marlborough (9) and Reese River Silver Mining Co. v. Atwell (1). But since the Judicature Act and since the Act of Edward I which define the rights of judgment-creditors, these decisions have no practical value. A judgment-creditor in England is in a very favourable position as compared with a judgment creditor in this country. He becomes practically the owner of the property which he seizes either under a Writ of Elegit or of fi fa. I do not think the English decisions which differentiate between the position of the judgment creditor and that of an ordinary creditor are of much use in deciding Indian cases. The judgment-creditor in India, for all practical purposes, is in the same position as any ordinary creditor. If he attaches the property it gives him no lien: if he realises monies, they would be subject to participation by those who may be entitled to rateable distribution. But the position in England is altogether different. Therefore the passage in May relating to the judgment-creditor has no relevancy in this country. Nor is there anything in the words of section 53 to differentiate between the position of the decree-holder and that of an ordinary creditor.

The next question is whether the judgment-creditor can protect his rights to proceed against the property of the judgment-debtor by pleading in defence that the sale which the plaintiff seeks to establish in the suit should be set aside. There is no question that if the sale is void or is found to be a sham transaction, it will not be necessary either for the creditor individually or conjointly with others to sue to set aside the sale. But if it is only voidable it seems to me that the creditors can have no remedy against the property conveyed until the sale is set aside. It is well settled that in cases of voidable transactions until the transaction is avoided it continues in force. See Raja Rajeswara Durai v. Arunachellam Chettiar (15) and Muhamad Haji Zakeria v. Ahmad-bhai Habibbhai (16). Therefore at the time that the creditor attached the property the sale was effective to confer title upon the plaintiff.

It was held by the Judicial Committee in Phul Kumarri v. Ghanshyam Misra (17) that the effect of a decree in a suit brought by a defeated claimant is to place the parties in the position they occupied at the time the claim was put in. Consequently if the defendant succeeds in his defence, the result of it will be to allow him to attach the property as if it were the property of the judgment-debtor. This, as I already pointed out, can do him no good so long as the sale is not set aside. Therefore I am of opinion that the defendant is not entitled to avoid the sale by his defence. Mr Anantakrishna Aiyar drew our attention to Vasudeo Raghunath (Aka v. Janardhan Sadashiv Apte (18). All that was decided in that case was that a subsequent transferee was not entitled to impeach a completed sale. It is true that another answer to the defence could have been that the sale was subsisting at the time of the transfer. However, this is no authority for the position that without setting aside the sale a judgment-creditor can impeach the transaction as a defence to the action commenced by the purchaser. The point we have to decide was not considered in Narayana Pattar v. Viraraghavan Pattar (19), Chidambaram Chettiar v. Sami Aiyar (6) and Ishan Chunder Das Sarkar v. Bishu Sirdar (20), to which the learned Vakil for the respondents invited our attention. I have, therefore, reluctantly come to the conclusion that the objection raised by Mr. A. Krishnaaswami Aiyar should be allowed.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Judge of Tanjore submitted the following

FINDING.—The issue on which I have been directed to record a finding is whether the transaction created by the sale-deed, dated 5th September 1903, is merely colourable.

It has been found, and the finding stands good, that the transaction evidenced by the sale-deed was intended to defraud and defeat the creditors. The question now for consideration is whether the transaction was merely colourable or whether it was intended that the property should pass to the vendee.

The consideration for the sale-deed was Rs. 14,250 made up of (1) mortgage debts on the properties to the extent of Rs. 8,842 which the vendee undertook to discharge, (2) a debt of Rs. 2,408 due on a promissory note to Narayanasami Iyer, (3) Rs. 3,000 to be paid in cash to the vendors to discharge sundry debts.

With regard to the mortgage debts, I think on the evidence on record it must be held that they were paid by plaintiff. Exhibits B to J show that they were paid and that they were paid by plaintiff. There is really no evidence that the payments nominally made by plaintiff were really made by his vendor. It is true that the debts were not paid at once and no payments were made until the creditors of the vendor began to be troublesome, but this fact proves nothing. The vendor was obviously more or less bankrupt and it is difficult to see how he could raise the money.

The payment of the debt due on the promissory note to Narayanasami Iyer has not been satisfactorily proved. Narayanasami Iyer was not examined. There is no satisfactory evidence that the note is genuine as it was the plaintiff who alone spoke to it.

The cash payment is not satisfactorily proved. It was to be utilized for paying off sundry debts. There is no evidence at all that the whole sum was utilised in paying debts and not one of the persons who are alleged to have been paid off has been examined.

The conclusion, therefore, is that some Rs. 9,900 were paid and that the rest of the consideration was not paid.

The next point for consideration is whether the plaintiff had possession of the properties after the sale-deed. It is clear from the evidence on record that the family house which was sold under the sale-deed was occupied by the vendor and his relations. The vendor and the vendee are closely related, and I do not think that the fact that the vendee allowed his vendor's family to live in the house shows that the sale was meant to be inoperative. The more important question is with regard to the lands. The plaintiff has produced a number of lease deeds Exhibit M series, though he has not examined the lessees. The evidence of these deeds is attacked on the ground that none of these are earlier than 1904, i. e., after the vendor's creditors had begun to execute pressure. I do not think there is much in this. The sale-deed was in September 1903 and it is not usual to enter into leases at that time or until the next year. Exhibit N series are receipts for payment of kist. The earliest date of any of these receipts is January 1904 but kist would not in any case be paid till January. As to the oral evidence it necessarily has to be received with caution. But there is this fact. Sundaram Chetti, one of plaintiff's agents, lives in one of the villages where the lands are. It is true that Sundaram Chetti is related by marriage to the vendor, but I see really no reason to doubt that he is agent of the plaintiff. This man formerly lived in Swamimalai. It seems probable that the reason he has moved to Ayyavadi is that he is plaintiff's agent and plaintiff has bought the lands there. It is difficult to explain his change of residence otherwise. The evidence on the other side is entirely oral and to a certain extent hearsay. It has been proved that the plaintiff paid over Rs. 9,000 and it seems unlikely that even a close relation would pay so large an amount without getting something for it. It is true that the whole consideration for the sale was not paid and it seems certain that the consideration even if fully paid was not adequate. Otherwise there is no explanation at all for Exhibit R, a release deed by which the plaintiff was to pay an extra Rs. 6,000. This release deed was executed after plaintiff had been worried in litigation. Plaintiff, no doubt, thought that his sale deed would be attacked on the ground of inadequate consideration and wanted to save himself further trouble. Though the full consideration was not paid and though the consideration was inadequate, it does not follow that the sale was merely nominal. The vendor was in a very bad way at the time of sale and was not in a position to dictate terms. He wanted to prevent his creditors getting his property and he had recourse to a relation. The relation, though willing to oblige him, was not likely to do it for nothing and it was quite likely that the relation would impose hard terms.

The subsequent conduct of the plaintiff is rather in favour of the theory that the transaction was a real one. He paid off under pressure a considerable number of creditors and unless it is shown that he did not really pay them off, the presumption is that he paid them off because the transaction was a real, though a fraudulent, one. There is really no evidence at all that the money which went to pay off the various debts came from the vendor and not from the vendee and it is certainly not shown that the vendor who was hopelessly bankrupt was in a position to find the money. It is contended that some of the debts may have been paid out of the income of the land, but though, as pointed out in paragraph 11 of the Subordinate Judge's judgment, this might apply to the Rs. 6,000 supposed to have been paid under Exhibit R, yet it is clear that this sum represented the income of some five years. It is not explained how the vendor could have raised the money to pay the other debts which were undoubtedly discharged.

The probabilities are, therefore, all in favour of the position that the sale was real and not nominal. I, therefore, find that the transaction created by the sale-deed, Exhibit A, is not merely colourable.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—We accept the finding, reverse the decrees of both the Courts below and give a decree to the plaintiff as prayed for.

Costs will be awarded to the appellants in this Court. Each party will pay his own costs in the lower Courts.

Testamentary suit—Caveat, remote reversioners, whether can file.

In a testamentary suit caveats against the Will were entered by B., the immediate reversioner of the deceased, and some other persons, alleging that the Will propounded was a forgery. Subsequently B. entered into an agreement with the propounders of the Will for an amicable settlement on their paying him a large sum of money raised by the sale or mortgage of a portion of the estate. Before this agreement was assented to by the other caveators, S. and R., who would be immediate reversioners of the testator after the death of B. during the lifetime of the testators' widow filed caveats against the Will.

Held, that S. and R. had locus standi to enter the caveats, as B. by entering into the agreement had done his best to render it impossible for him successfully to challenge the Will or had at least shown that at all events he could not be relied upon seriously and successfully to contest the Will. [p. 6, col. 2]

Quære—Whether any interest however slight, or even the bare possibility of an interest in the estate left by an alleged testator, is enough to entitle a party to oppose the Will. [p. 51, col. 2.]

Appeal against the judgment of Mr Justice Chitty, in Testamentary Suit No. 9 of 1915, dated the 25th January 1917.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of.

CHITTY, J.—This is an application on notice by the plaintiff in a testamentary suit that the caveat filed on 20th December 1915 by Satindra Mohun Tagore and Ronendra Mohun Tagore be discharged. It appears that in this case when the present plaintiff put forward the Will of Atanunandan Tagore caveats were filed by Diptendra Mohun Tagore, Bidyut Prokash Ganguly and Srimati Hazari Dassi Devi. The case was accordingly set down as a contentious cause by an order of 30th June 1915. The present caveators Satindra Mohun Tagore and Ronendra Mohun Tagore had also filed caveats, they being distant agnates of the deceased. It was pointed out at that time that they had no locus standi to come in and contest the Will, and eventually in June 1915 their caveats were withdrawn. They have now filed them again and wish again to come in and contest the suit. It is conceded that though Diptendra Mohun Tagore, one of the other caveators, is dead the two caveators who came in with him, Bidyut Prokash Ganguly and Srimati Hazari Dassi Devi, are still on the record. It is alleged by Satindra Mohun Tagore and Ronendra Mohun Tagore that Bidyut Prokash Ganguly is contemplating a settlement of the case with the propounders of the Will. It is not suggested that Hazari Dassi Devi, who is the mother of the widow of the deceased, has entered into or proposes to enter into any such compromise. It appears to me that for two reasons the caveats of these two persons should be discharged. In the first place they deliberately withdrew them in June 1915, and I do not think that the defendants in a suit ought to be allowed to blow hot and cold in that way, and, having withdrawn their defence, be allowed to come in again after a year and a half without some very good and substantial reason. The other reason is that the position of these parties, so far as the relationship is concerned, is in no way altered from the position in which they stood in June 1915. It is conceded that the death of Diptendra Mohun Tagore has made no difference in that respect. It is clear, therefore, that they have now no better locus standi than they had before. I accordingly make an order in terms of the petition that the caveats of these two persons be discharged with costs. Bidyut Prokash Ganguly must bear his own costs. Certified for Counsel.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—In this case the appeal is from the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Chitty, which was given upon an application by the plaintiffs in a testamentary suit that a certain caveat, which was filed on the 20th of December 1915 by Satindra Mohun Tagore and Ronendra Mohun Tagore, should be discharged. The Will which was the subject-matter of the suit was the Will of one Atanunandan Tagore who died, as we are informed, at the age of 19 years, and left a widow who was then 13 years old and who at the time of the suit was said to be 16 years old. Caveats had been entered against the Will by three persons, Diptendra

SATINDRA MOHAN TAGORE v. SARALA SUNDARI DEBI.

Mohun Tagore, Bidyut Prokash Ganguly and Srimati Hazari Dasai Debi. Of these Diptendra Mohun Tagore is now dead; Bidyut Prokash Ganguly is alive; and so is Srimati Hazari Dasai Debi who is the mother of the widow of the testator Atanunandan. Caveats had also been entered by the two appellants Satindra Mohun Tagore and Ronendra Mohun Tagore. But on the 17th of November 1914, a letter had been written by the solicitor for the plaintiffs alleging on behalf of his clients, namely, the widow of the deceased testator and the executor and the executrix named in the Will, that the appellants had not any interest whatsoever, and that consequently the solicitor was instructed not to allow inspection of the Will for which the appellants had been asking. The result of that, and, I think, of further communications was that on the 8th of March 1915 the caveats which had been entered by Satindra Mohun Tagore and Ronendra Mohun Tagore were withdrawn.

Now, the position at that time was as follows: Bidyut Prokash Ganguly was contesting the validity of the Will as is shown by the fact that on the 11th of March 1915 he affirmed an affidavit in which he set up very serious allegations: In paragraph 9 of his affidavit he alleged that the brother-in-law of Srimati Sarala Sundari Debi, who was the executrix of the Will, had not only murdered his mother-in-law but that also one Triguna Sundari Debi and had cut off four of the fingers of the hand of the said Srimati Sarala Sundari Debi and in addition to that, he struck the testator such a blow upon his face that he lost the sight of both his eyes and that in consequence of that unfortunate incident he had no training or education of any sort whatever and by constantly brooding over his misfortune he practically lost his memory and intelligence as well as balance of mind and lived the life of practical imbecility until his death: and in paragraph 22 he went on to allege that the Will was simply and wholly the act of Ashutosh Bannerjee and Srimati Sarala Sundari Debi (who are the executor and executrix of the Will), in order to get the estate absolutely in their clutches and to get the son of the said Ashutosh Bannerjee adopted. I ought to have said that although we have not the Will before us, we are informed that the main provisions of it are to the effect that the property was left to the widow with power to adopt a son, if she so desired. That was the position of affairs at the time when Satindra Mohun Tagore and Ronendra Mohun Tagore withdrew their caveats.

On the 30th of June 1915, the suit was set down as a contested suit. It appears that before that date an order had been made for a commission to issue for the examination of certain witnesses, namely, on the 22nd of May 1915: and, inasmuch as on the 18th of November Diptendra Mohun Tagore died, the death was recorded, and liberty was given to the Commissioner to proceed with the commission. That was the state of affairs up to the end of November 1915.

The next fact which is necessary for me to mention is this: Apparently, in December 1915, a proposed settlement with Bidyut Prokash Ganguly was made, and that is evidenced by a letter which was written on the 9th of December 1916 by Mr. Sen acting on behalf of the executor and the executrix, addressed to Messrs. Mannel, Agarwalla and De who were acting as solicitors on behalf of the mother of the widow in these terms: "I have the pleasure to inform you that subject to the sanction of the Court my clients and Mr. B. Ganguly have arranged to settle this case amicably on the terms of which I enclose for your information a copy. Having regard to the relationship of the parties and seeing that your client has no personal interest in the matter I trust you will agree with me that this settlement is very desirable and should be carried out." The material provisions of the settlement were as follows: Mr. B. Ganguly being the next reversioner after the widow of the deceased, in case no adoption takes place or fails, was to be paid out of the estate of the said A. N. Tagore the sum of Rs. 1,55,000 "out of which he will meet and pay his own costs and the costs of Srimati Hazari Dasai Debi, the mother of the said widow, one of the defendants in the suit;" and that the said sum of Rs. 1,55,000 should be paid by the executor and executrix by sale or mortgage of a portion of the estate of the deceased within two months after the grant of probate. That agreement was to be subject to the sanction of the Court, as was provided by clause 6 of the agreement, namely, that these terms would be treated as without prejudice to any or either of the parties to the suit until recorded and confirmed by the Court with the usual certificate that they were for the benefit of the infant widow. We do not know what took place after that, but we must approach the case on the basis that the widow's mother has not agreed to that proposal up to the present time. Apparently, Satindra Mohun Tagore and Ronendra Mohun Tagore having got to know of this proposal proceeded on the 20th of December 1916 to file their second caveat, and the paragraph in their affidavit upon which they rely is paragraph 14, which is to this effect: "That previous to this there was no necessity for our entering caveat as we were under the impression that Bidyut Prokash Ganguly, who had always maintained that the Will was a forgery, would properly prosecute the proceedings started on the caveat entered into by him, but now that he is willing to have probate granted of a forged Will on being promised a large sum of money, we have been advised to contest the Will which has been set up as aforesaid." That is the caveat which the learned Judge in the Court below has directed should be struck off the file.

Now, two main points have been raised in the argument in this Court. The first is that Satindra Mohun Tagore and Ronendra Mohun Tagore have not got sufficient interest to entitle them to file caveats against the Will. The relationship is as follows: There is no doubt that Bidyut Prokash Ganguly is the immediate reversioner in case of the death of the widow without a son being adopted: and, that if Bidyut were to die before the widow then the persons who would then become the immediate reversioners are the appellants Satindra Mohun Tagore and Ronendra Mohun Tagore. There is no doubt that Bidyut Prokash Ganguly, the immediate reversioner, is entitled to contest the Will on the authority of the decision in the case of Brindavan Chunder Shaha v. Sureshwar Saha Paramanik (1), and it is said that that case is an authority for the proposition that any interest, however slight, and even the bare possibility of an interest is sufficient to entitle a party to oppose a testamentary paper. In my judgment I do not think it necessary in this case for us to consider whether the rule laid down in the English cases has been adopted in this country as the rule applicable to such a case as this, because it was admitted during the course of the argument that if the immediate reversioner is not protecting the estate, then the next reversioner is entitled so to do: and I intend to base my judgment in this case on the facts of this case and not to lay down any general rule upon the question whether any interest, however slight, or even the bare possibility of an interest is enough to entitle a party to oppose a testamentary paper. With regard to Bidyut Prokash Ganguly, as I have already pointed out, he has entered into this agreement to the material terms of which I have already referred; and, in my judgment, he has thereby done his best to render it impossible for him successfully to challenge the Will: or, looking at it from another point of view, in my judgment, he, by the agreement into which he has entered, has shown that at all events he cannot be relied upon seriously and successfully to contest the Will. But Mr. Das argued that it is not a concluded matter because there is the mother of the widow who is contesting, and there is no suggestion that she is going to abandon the position which she has taken up in contesting the Will. I assume that and I decide this case upon that assumption, because Mr. Das has pointed out that he has not had an opportunity of answering the affidavit which had been put forward on the actual day of hearing before Mr. Justice Chitty. But even assuming that the widow's mother at the present moment has not agreed to compromise the suit, I still think that under the special and peculiar circumstances of this case, the appellants Satindra Mohun Tagore and Ronendra Mohun Tagore have sufficient interest to entitle them to enter caveat and contest the suit. I do not think it necessary for me to say anything more upon that point.

The second point urged is that the appellants ought not to be allowed to enter

(1) 3 Ind. Cas. 178; 10 C. L. J. 283.

VANJAPURI GOUNDAN v. PACHAMUTHU GOUNDAN.

caveats at this stage, because they had already entered caveats on a previous occasion and withdrew them and, to use the words of the learned Judge, 'they ought not to be allowed to blow hot and cold in that way.' The answer to that seems to me to be that it cannot be said to be a case of blowing hot and cold, because the conditions which existed when caveats were first entered and withdrawn do not exist at the present moment. The caveats were withdrawn, as I have already pointed out, when the opposition of Bidyut Prokash Ganguly could certainly be regarded as a genuine and strenuous opposition; but having regard to the agreement into which he has entered I think, as I have already said, he cannot be relied upon in future seriously to contest the Will. Therefore, the conditions being different, the accusation of 'blowing hot and cold' cannot reasonably be made against the appellants, and I do not think that that is sufficient reason for preventing them from filing caveats on the 20th of December 1917.

The result, therefore, in my judgment is that the two appellants ought to be allowed to enter caveats. I think it would be a misfortune if there should be another suit, and consequently they ought to be added as defendants to the suit which is now proceeding. Mr. Sarkar has agreed that he will accept the evidence which has already been taken on commission, provided that he is allowed to have an opportunity of putting further questions in cross-examination, if he is advised so to do; and, the appellants will, therefore, be added as defendants to the suit upon the understanding that they will accept the evidence which has already been given, subject to any application which may be made by the appellants to the Judge trying the case for leave to put further questions in cross-examination. We cannot decide whether that leave ought to be granted or not, and it will be for the learned Judge trying the case to decide that.

For these reasons I think that the appeal should be allowed with costs here and in the Court of first instance.

WOODROFFE, J.—I agree with the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice on this ground: the caveator Diptendra Mohun Tagore is dead, and the caveator Bidyut Prokash Ganguly has entered into a compromise to settle this litigation, and there is thus left out of the original caveators, only Srimati Hazari Debi acting on behalf of the minor widow. It seems to me that it is very likely that Hazari Debi was consulted about the compromise, and though it has not been shown that she has actually assented to this compromise, I am not satisfied under the circumstances of this case that the interests of the reversioner appellants will be sufficiently protected unless they are allowed to intervene.

Appeal allowed.

Hindu law—Joint family—Partition—Division in status, when effected—Sale by co-parcener divided in status and excluded from enjoyment of his share—Vendee, position of—Profits, past, right of vendee to.

A definite and unambiguous indication by one member of a joint family of his intention to separate himself and enjoy his share in severalty will amount to a separation or division of status, and the filing of a plaint for partition is such an indication. [p. 64, col. 1.]

After a division of status between two co-parceners, they are in the position of tenants-in-common with reference to the property left undivided and, therefore, the party who is in exclusive possession of the property and takes the whole of the rents and profits thereof has to account to the other party for his share of such rents and profits [p. 64, col. 2.]

A vendee from a co-parcener in a Hindu family, who has become divided in status from the other members and has been excluded from the enjoyment of his share in the property, is entitled to an award of profits from the date of such separation. [p. 64, col. 2; p. 65, col. 2.]

The rule of law that profits cannot be claimed till after decree applies only to the case of a joint family and not to the case of a divided family with joint property. [p. 64, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

KRISHNAN, J.—The lower Appellate Court has given the plaintiff a decree for the division of survey No. 44/1 into three equal shares with reference to good and bad soil and for delivery to him of one of those shares, and has directed defendants Nos. 1 and 5 to pay him past profits till the date of suit from the date of demand for partition and also from the date of suit to the date of decree and future mesne profits till the date of delivery of possession or for three years whichever be the shorter period. Defendants Nos. 1 and 5 are the appellants before us. The only point argued for them is that the award of profits before the date of decree is wrong in law. No objection has been raised to the rest of the decree.

The facts necessary for the disposal of the question raised are these. Plaintiff purchased in 1910 an undivided one-third share in survey No. 44/1 from one Sengoda Goundan, the 4th defendant in this case. He and the other defendants were originally members of a joint Hindu family and the land survey No. 44/1 was one of their joint properties and was in the possession of defendants Nos. 1 and 5. Plaintiff made a demand on them for a partition and delivery to him of the share he purchased and on their failure to comply with it, brought the present suit for a general partition against all the members of the family, praying that one third of survey No. 44/1 might be allotted to the share of his vendor and put into his possession with profits from the date of his demand.

The question of plaintiff's claim to the profits before decree was argued by the appellant's Vakil on the assumption that the 4th defendant, the vendor, continued as an undivided co-parcener of the other defendants till the date of the decree appealed against, and on this footing he cited the cases of Muharaja f. Bubbili v. Venkataramanulu (1) and Kota Balabhadra Patro v. Khetra Das (2) as also the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Pirithi Pal v. Jowahir Singh (3) and in Shankar Baksh v. Hardeo Baksh (4). But the learned Vakil for the 1st respondent has pointed out to us that the 4th defendant was really divided in status from the other members some time before the sale to his client. There is no express finding by the lower Courts on this particular point because the issue as to profits was not "seriously pressed" in the first Court, as the Munsif points out, and no question seems to have been raised about it in the Appellate Court. As the parties do not seem to be at variance on the question of fact from which the divided status is to be inferred, I think we may act under section 103, Civil Procedure Code, in the matter and find the fact ourselves and we need not call for a finding. The 4th defendant, the vendor, stated in his written statement that he was entitled to a third share in all the properties and that "for three years there was a Panchayat for dividing and giving him his share though it was not accomplished." The main contesting defendant, the 5th defendant, admitted as 1st defence witness that Sengodan (i.e., the 4th defendant) had asked him for partition and delivery of his share in the presence of witnesses and that Panchayatdars had also come and asked him on Sengodan's behalf to separate and give away his share. The 9th defendant also admitted in the written statement the allegation made by the 4th defendant. The case of defendants Nos. 1 to 2 and 5 to 8 in their written statement was that the 4th defendant had become divided from them long previously, though that has been found against. The 4th defendant and his son the 10th defendant recently brought a suit in 1913 for partition by metes and bounds and delivery over to them of their share in the remaining properties and that suit has been decreed. It seems, therefore, clear that the 4th defendant did make a demand on his co-parceners for partition some three years before the date of this suit and though the properties were not divided by metes and bounds at once he must be taken to have become divided in status from the others on the authority of the Privy Council decision in Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain (5), where their Lordships say that a definite and unambiguous indication by one member of his intention to separate himself and enjoy his share in severalty will amount to a separation or division of status. This proposition was adopted and acted upon in the Full Bench case of Soundararajam v. Arunachalam Chetty (6), where the filing of a plaint for partition was considered to be such an indication as above stated.

We have, therefore, to consider the validity of the award of profits in the present case with reference to a sale of his share by a member of a Hindu family who had become separate in status, and not with reference to sale by an undivided member of a joint family as was the case in the two Madras authorities cited for the appellants and referred to above.

These cases are, therefore, clearly distinguishable from the present case.

After a division of status between two co-parceners there can be no doubt that they are in the position of tenants-in-common with reference to the property left undivided and, therefore, the party who is in exclusive possession of the property and takes the whole of the rents and profits thereof will have to account to the other party for his share of such rents and profits. The plaintiff's alienor, the 4th defendant, was excluded from the enjoyment of the land and the share of his profits by defendants Nos. 1 and 5 who took the whole of the profits, and he was thus entitled to recover his share from them from the date of his exclusion after he became divided in status. The appellant has relied on the observations of the Privy Council in the cases in Pirithi Pal v. Jorahir Singh (3) and in Shankar Baksh v. Hardeo Baksh (4). In the former case, though their Lordships say that the provisions of the Code as to mesne profits apply only to suits for land or other property in which plaintiff has a specific interest and not to a suit for partition where he has no specific interest until decree, they point out in the sentence just previous that it is erroneous to treat a claim for an account of the proceeds or profits of a joint estate as a claim for mesne profits as defined in the Code. In the latter case, while they re-affirm the position that in a suit for partition of a joint family estate profits are not recovered till after decree, they hold that where there is an agreement between the members that each should get a share of the profits, a suit for such share of profits and for partition can be maintained when the enjoyment of that share is in any way disturbed. The observations that profits cannot be claimed till after decree apply only to the case of a joint family and not to a case like the present of a divided family with joint property.

Plaintiff's alienor having thus a right to obtain from defendants Nos. 1 and 5 his one-third share of the profits of the land in this case, is there any reason why plaintiff who stands in the shoes of that alienor with reference to the share he purchased should not get the same relief, the alienor con-sending? I can see none. It was argued that as partition by metes and bounds between the members of a joint family has to be effected by the Court with due regard to the interests of the sharers and to the debts due by the family and other such circumstances, it may happen that the purchaser of an undivided share in one item of property is unable to get that share allotted to him in a partition suit and that he may even chance to get no land at all but only money compensation or perhaps even nothing at all. This may very well be so in some cases, but of course the Court will always endeavour as far as possible to allot to the purchaser the share he purchased. See the observations of Bhashyam Aiyangar, J., in Aiyangari Venkataramayya v. Aiyangari Ramayya (7). It does not follow, however, as argued by the appellants, that, because a difficulty may arise in some cases and the profits awarded in such cases to the purchaser may be smaller than he would otherwise have got or no profits may be awarded to him, in all cases profits should be disallowed. Where, as in the present case, the Court has been able to award to the purchaser the very share he purchased and there is no dispute about that award, there is no reason for disallowing his proper share of profits.

As regards the amount awarded in the present case for profits before decree there has been no contest before us, so that the distinction between profits and mesne profits is immaterial.

For the above reasons, I am of opinion that plaintiff is entitled to the profits before decree as awarded to him and that the second appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs of the 1st respondent.

SPENCER, J.—I am of the same opinion. In Maharaja of Bobbili v. Venkataramanjulu (1) one of the most telling arguments for disallowing mesne profits prior to suit in a suit brought by a purchaser from a member of joint Hindu family was that it would be unfair to require the other members of the family to bear the expenses of the family including the alienating co-parcener, and simultaneously to bear the extra burden of allotting a portion of the income of the family properties to meet the alienee's claim.* This argument, however, loses its force when the alienor has already ceased to be a co-parcener. From the moment he becomes divided in status, he is no longer entitled to be maintained out of the funds of the undivided family, but he is entitled to call for an account from the manager of the income of his share remaining in the hands of the latter, if there is any interval between the division of status and the actual partition, and if, as presumably is the case, he has been excluded from enjoyment of the property since the former event. Bhivra v. Sitaram (8).

It follows also that whatever the seller can get by way of income on his share, the purchaser of his right, title and interest can recover.

The second appeal is dismissed with 1st respondent's costs.

Appeal dismissed.

IN NO. 34 OF 1914

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Noakhali, dated the 27th of June 1913, modifying that of the Munsif, Additional Court, Feni, dated the 27th of May 1912.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—These appeals are preferred by the defendants against the judgment of the learned District Judge of Noakhali, dated the 27th June 1913, reversing the decision of the Munsif of the Second Court at Feni. The plaintiff brought the suits out of which these appeals have arisen to recover rents from the defendants as his tenants after declaration of his title to the lands. Rents were asked for a period extending from Agrahan 1314 to Kartick 1317 B. S. In their written statements the defendants set up three pleas; first of all, that they held the lands as Niskar lands, secondly, that, if they were not Niskar, their possession had been adverse to the plaintiff since the 27th Agrahan 1290 T. E. and thirdly, that the plaintiff's suits were barred by limitation. The third plea obviously has reference to the amounts of rents sued for between Agrahan 1314 and Kartick 1317 B. S. The adverse title set up was from a specific date, the 27th Agrahan 1290 T. E. The cases came on for trial. The Munsif found that none of the lands was Niskar. He, however, found that the suits were barred by limitation and by adverse possession from an assertion of the defendants' right during the publication of the Record of Rights. That case was not pleaded anywhere in the written statement. The adverse possession that was pleaded was said to have run from the 27th Agrahan 1290 T. E. On appeal to the lower Appellate Court, the learned District Judge set aside the decision of the Munsif and assessed rents in favour of the plaintiff. The learned Judge had this evidence before him. He had the Record of Rights in which the defendants were stated to be settled Raiyats with liability to have the rents assessed. That Record of Rights had been duly published in the manner required by law. The learned Judge was competent to act upon that as the final Court of fact. The question he had to consider was whether the evidence that had been produced rebutted the presumption contained in that record. It is quite obvious, although the learned Judge dealt with the matter in a somewhat summary manner in his judgment, that he came to the conclusion that the evidence that had been adduced on behalf of the defendants did not rebut the presumption contained in the Record of Rights. That was a matter obviously within the competence of a final Court of fact. In my opinion it is a matter incapable of being reviewed by a Court having a limited jurisdiction that this Court has in hearing a second appeal. Whether, if the matter had been open to us, we should come to the same conclusion as the learned District Judge has come is not a matter we have to consider. The learned District Judge having come to the conclusion that he should act upon the Record of Rights, we are not competent in hearing in second appeal to review that decision. I think in the result the present appeals fail and must be dismissed with costs.

RICHARDSON, J.—As the decision in Aman Gazi v. Maharaja Birendra Kishore Manikya Bahadur (1), to which I was a party, has been so much referred to, I must add a few words. Having listened with an entirely open mind to the argument addressed to us by the learned Pleader for the appellant before us, I am still of opinion that the decision is correct in principle.

An entry in a Record of Rights is not conclusive but it is an entry to which by Statute the presumption attaches that it is correct unless and until the contrary is proved by legal evidence. In these cases the entries necessarily imply that the landlord, the respondent Maharaja, was entitled when the Record of Rights was finally published to have a fair rent assessed on the land held under him by the appellant tenants. At the time, therefore, the possession of the tenants was prima facie a possession which was subject to the liability to pay rent. Whatever adverse claim the tenants had previously set up, the landlord then succeeded in obtaining an authoritative declaration importing that the claim was unfounded. Prima facie again the subsequent possession of the tenants was a possession consistent with the entries. It was, of course, open to the tenants to show that the entries were wrong when they were made or that by reason of something which had since happened, coupled perhaps with what had happened before, they had ceased to represent the true state of things. But the burden was on the tenants to displace the entries and the results flowing from them. As I gather from the judgment of the Court below, the learned Judge was of opinion that the tenants had not succeeded in rebutting the statutory presumption or in showing that the entries no longer represented the true state of the facts. The questions which arose in that connection were essentially questions of fact and there appears to be no ground for disturbing in second appeal the conclusions arrived at by the learned District Judge. Indeed very little attempt seems to have been made in the Courts below to show that the entry was wrong. According to the trial Court, the tenants had not shown any title to hold the land rent-free. In the Appellate Court no attempt or little attempt seems to have been made to contest this finding. The tenants seem to have relied on the fact that, before the final publication of the Record of Rights, they had asserted a claim to hold the land rent free. Their learned Pleader stated that the assertion was made not before, but during the course of the proceedings in connection with the preparation of the Record of Rights. It is clear, as it seems to me, that the learned Judge was entitled on the question of fact to hold that the mere fact that this adverse claim had been made was not sufficient to show that the entry in the finally published record was wrong. Apparently, no prescriptive title to hold the land rent-free, acquired prior to the Record of Rights, was established to the satisfaction of either of the Courts below.

The case of Birendra Kisore Manikya Bahadur v. Nizir Mahommed (2) and Birendra Kisore Manikya Bahadur v. Kailas Chandra Sarkar (3), to which our attention was invited, were cases in which it was held in the Courts below that the entry in the Record of Rights was rebutted. There is, therefore, no conflict between our decision in the present case and the decisions arrived at in those cases. For these reasons I agree that these appeals should be dismissed with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 24, 26, 33, 52—Official Receiver, framing of schedule by—Enquiry, nature of—Court, function of, nature of, under s. 26

The power delegated to the Official Receiver under section 52 of Act III of 1907 is to frame the schedule after an ex parte examination of the evidence tendered by the alleged creditors of the insolvent and he does not decide judicially or finally upon contested claims. His entering a creditor's name in the schedule does not prevent the Court from entertaining applications under sections 26 and 36. [p. 68, cols. 1 & 2.]

The provisions of section 26 contemplate a judicial enquiry. [p. 68, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Tinnevely, in Original Petition No. 395 of 1915.

Messrs. C. V. Ananthakrishna Ayyar and K. R. Rangasami Ayyangar, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. D. Devadoss, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The first question in this case relates to an order passed by an

JIWAN LAL v. BEHARI LAL.

Official Receiver upon the claim of a creditor of an insolvent to rank as a secured creditor under an hypothecation bond which was disputed by another creditor. The Official Receiver received oral and documentary evidence and held that the bond was supported by consideration and was not fraudulent. His successor-in-office seeks to impeach the transaction notwithstanding this decision.

By virtue of section 52 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907, and rules of this Court made thereunder, an Official Receiver has power (b) to frame schedules and to admit or to reject proofs of creditors, and (f) to hear and to determine any unopposed or ex parte application. Section 24 (1) directs the Court to frame a schedule of creditors and the debts proved by them, and section 25 prescribes the ordinary procedure for proof of debts. Under these provisions all persons alleging themselves to be creditors are required to produce evidence of the amount and particulars of their debts, which may be upon affidavits containing certain particulars and the Court, by order, determines the persons who have proved themselves to be creditors and the amount of their debts, and then frames the schedule.

Section 24 (3) then provides for an application by a creditor after the schedule has been framed that his name may be entered therein, and section 26 provides that the Court may expunge an entry in the schedule or reduce the amount of a debt upon the application of a Receiver or, in certain cases, of a creditor or the debtor; and both provisions contemplate a judicial inquiry. Having regard to these express provisions for a judicial enquiry upon the rectification of the schedule when framed, and to the absence of any such provision in relation to the framing of the schedule in the first instance, we think that the latter operation is intended, at least in general, to be an ex parte determination by the Court upon the evidence furnished by the alleged creditors. If this construction be correct and the sections and rules already mentioned be read together, it is clear that the power delegated to the Official Receiver is to frame the schedule after an ex parte examination of the evidence tendered by the alleged creditors and that he does not decide judicially or finally upon contested claims.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the action of the Official Receiver amounted only to an entry of the appellant in the schedule of creditors under section 24, and does not preclude the Court from entertaining an application under sections 26 and 36.

[Their Lordships then dealt with the evidence and, holding that the appellant's mortgage bond was a bona fide transaction supported by consideration, allowed the appeal with costs.]

Estoppel—Both parties estopped, effect of—Court, duty of, to decide case on merits.

In a case of one estoppel against another, the parties are set free and the Court has to see what their original rights are. [p. 70, col. 1.]

S., deriving title by sale from B., sold certain land to J. B. subsequently sold the same land to L. Before the sale to S., B. had mortgaged the land and in 1905 he sued S. and his co-mortgagees for redemption. On the same day L. sued S., B. and one R. for redemption of another mortgage executed by B. in favour of R. Both these suits were compromised:—B. withdrawing and acknowledging S. as full owner, and L. agreeing to get possession in the second suit on payment of Rs. 50 to S. J. now brought the present suit to recover the land from L.

Held, that though S. was estopped by the compromise decree from denying L.'s right to redeem, L. himself was estopped by the decree in B.'s suit from denying that S. was full owner and that, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to recover the land in suit. [p. 70, cols. 1 & 2.]

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case

out of which this appeal arises are somewhat complicated and are fully stated in the judgments of the lower Courts and are briefly as follows:—

The land in dispute is a plot of 4 kanals 8 marlas in area and was Khasra No. 1182 in the Settlement of 835. In that of 1881 it became Khasra No 150 and in that of 1911-1912 Khasra No. 157. The following alienations have been made in respect of this plot:—

(a) On 2nd November 1882 Bua Ditta through Musammat Sukh Devi, his guardian, mortgaged the land in dispute along with other land to Vaishno Das with possession for Rs. 1,200.

(b) On 19th May 1883 an additional mortgage of the same land was effected for Rs. 200 by Bua Ditta himself, who was then of full age.

(c) On 29th May 1886 Bua Ditta mortgaged the land in dispute together with Khasra No. 1183 to Ram Chand for Rs. 305 without possession. Both these Nos were included in mortgages (a) and (b).

(d) On the 11th October 1887 Bua Ditta sold the equity of redemption of (a) and (b) to Hardit Singh for Rs. 2,400.

(e) On the 5th May 1890 Hardit Singh sold his right to Bhagat Ram, son of Vaishno Das. The result of the above was that Bhagat Ram became owner of the land covered by (a) subject to Ram Chand's mortgage (c).

(f) On the 2th September 1891 Ram Chand sold his mortgagee rights to Bhagat Ram. The latter thus became full owner of the land in dispute. Bhagat Ram died in 1901 and mutation was effected in favour of his son, Sant Ram.

(g) On the 14th February 1905 Bua Ditta mortgaged the land in suit and other land to Behari Lal giving him the right to redeem from Ram Chand.

(h) On the 24th August 1906 Bua Ditta sold the equity of redemption of the land covered by (g) to Behari Lal.

(i) On the 13th May 1914 Sant Ram sold certain land including that covered by (a) to Jiwan Mal, plaintiff.

The present suit was brought by Jiwan Mal to recover the land in dispute from Behari Lal. It is also necessary to mention that two suits were brought relating to the land in dispute:—

(A) On the 1st March 1905 Bua Ditta brought a suit against Hardit Singh and Sant Ram to redeem the land covered by mortgages (a) and (b). In his plaint he ignored the sales (d) and (e).

(B) On the same day Behari Lal brought a suit in which he sued Ram Chand, Sant Ram and Bua Ditta to redeem the mortgage (c).

Both these suits were compromised on the 6th November 1905. Bua Ditta withdrew his suit acknowledging Sant Ram as full owner of the land claimed. In suit (B) the compromise was to the effect that Behari Lal was to get possession of the land claimed on payment of Rs. 550 to Sant Ram. The land now in suit was part of the land claimed in both suits (A) and (B).

The first Court has decreed plaintiff's claim, holding that after the sale (d) Bua Ditta had no interest in the land in dispute left which he could transfer to Behari Lal. The lower Appellate Court on the other hand held that the sales (d) and (e) were never acted upon, and that they were treated as a nullity by Sant Ram himself, and that the latter was estopped by the decree obtained by Behari Lal in 1905 for redemption of certain land which included the plot now in dispute. It, therefore, accepted the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

Plaintiff has filed a second appeal to this Court. The point which has to be chiefly considered is, what effect have the suits (A) and (B) upon the rights of the parties? In suit (B) the compromise shows that Sant Ram allowed Behari Lal to redeem from him on payment of Rs. 550. The contention is that if Sant Ram was the owner of the plot now in dispute he would not have allowed Behari Lal to redeem from him. No doubt if this suit stood alone Sant Ram would probably be estopped thereby, but suit (A) was brought at the same time as suit (B) and both were disposed of on the same day. There can be no doubt that both were decided as the result of the same compromise between all the parties concerned. In suit

BASHARAT V. NAJIB KHAN.

(A) Bua Ditta withdrew his claim and admitted Sant Ram to be the owner of the property then in suit, which included the land now in dispute. Behari Lal derives his title as owner from Bua Ditta and it is, therefore, urged by Mr. Tek Chand on behalf of the appellant that if Sant Ram is estopped by reason of suit (B) Bua Ditta and Behari Lal are estopped by suit (A) from denying Sant Ram's title as owner of the land in dispute. In the sale-deed effected by Bua Ditta in favour of Behari Lal it is clearly stated that Behari Lal incurred the expenses of both the 1905 cases. There can, therefore, be no doubt that he was fully acquainted, or could have made himself fully acquainted, with all the facts of both those cases. He knew, or had the means of ascertaining, that the land now in dispute was in dispute in both those cases. Under all the circumstances I do not see how it can be said that Sant Ram is estopped by the decree in the suit in which Behari Lal got a decree for redemption on payment of Rs. 550. It is a case of one estoppel against another, and where both the parties are estopped we have to see what their original rights were.

It is not contended that sales (d) and (e) were not acted upon in any respect. I questioned Mr. Hukam Chand, Counsel for the respondents, on this point and he stated that those sales were not acted upon only as regards the plot now in dispute. The revenue records show that on the 4th June 1891 effect was given by mutation to the sales (d) and (e) in the presence of Bua Ditta, Hardit Singh and Bhagat Ram. Thereafter the revenue entries are in favour of Bhagat Ram and Sant Ram. After the sale (h) Behari Lal applied for mutation, but mutation of the plot now in dispute was refused on the ground that at the time of the sale Bua Ditta had no saleable interest left in it. The lower Appellate Court considers that the fact that in 1891 Bhagat Ram acquired the mortgagee rights in (c) from Ram Chand shows that he was not at that time the owner. What is meant is that the deed should have been one showing redemption of the mortgage and not one transferring the mortgagee rights to Bhagat Ram. The argument loses a good deal of its force from the fact that mortgage (c) was of Nos. 1182 and 1183 and it was only of No. 1182 that Bhagat Ram had become the owner. He was not the owner of No. 1183 and it was only the mortgagee rights thereof which he could acquire from Ram Chand. I, therefore, hold that Sant Ram and Jiwan Mal, who claims as his representative, are not estopped by reason of suit (B), that the land was validly sold by Bua Ditta to Hardit Singh on the 11th October 1887 and that Hardit Singh on the 5th May 1890 sold his rights to Bhagat Ram. When Ram Chand sold his mortgagee rights to Bhagat Ram on the 12th September 1891 the latter became full owner of the land now in dispute and his son, Sant Ram, made a valid transfer thereof to the present plaintiff.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court restore that of the first Court. Under all the circumstances of the case I direct that the parties shall bear their own costs throughout the litigation.

Appeal accepted.

Evidence Act (I of 1972), s. 103—Presumption of death—Date of death—Evidence.

The only rule which section 103 of the Evidence Act prescribes is that a person who has not been heard of for seven years by those who would naturally have heard of him if he had been alive, is presumed to be dead at the time when the question whether he is alive or dead is raised. There is no presumption as to the time of his death, and if any one seeks to establish the precise period at which such person died, he must do so by actual evidence. [p. 71, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 31st January 1917.

Mr. Abdul Ghani, for the Appellants.

Mr. Badr-ul-Din Kureshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question, which has been argued in this appeal, is whether there is a presumption that Kallu, the collateral of the plaintiffs, who was the original owner of the land in dispute, died more than twelve years prior to the institution of the suit. Now, there can be little doubt that Kallu has not been heard of for more than twenty years, and the learned Counsel for the defendant-appellant contends that section 108 of the Indian Evidence Act raises a presumption that a person, who has not been heard of for more than seven years, died at the end of the first seven years of the period. To this contention I am unable to accede. The only rule which the section prescribes is that a person, who has not been heard of for seven years by those who would naturally have heard of him if he had been alive, is presumed to be dead at the time when the question whether he is alive or dead is raised. There is no presumption as to the time of his death, and if any one seeks to establish the precise period at which such person died, he must do so by actual evidence. This view is in accordance with the law laid down in several judgments, vide, Muhammad Sharif v. Bande Ali (1) and Narki v. Phekin (2). To the same effect is a passage in Taylor's Law of Evidence which runs in the following terms:—

"Although, however, a person who has not been heard of for seven years is presumed to be dead, the law raises no presumption as to the time of his death, and if any one seeks to establish the precise period during those seven years at which some person died, he must do so by actual evidence."

The question as to whether Kallu was alive or dead was first raised in the mutation proceedings taken in 1909, and the only presumption permissible under section 108 is that Kallu was dead in 1909. There is no evidence upon the record which would show that he died more than twelve years before the date when this suit was instituted.

For the reasons stated above I uphold the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

A suit for rent by a fractional sharer in an inam village who has acquired the Kudivaram interest in the entire village in respect of a lease of a portion of the village after such acquisition, is cognizable by the Revenue and not by the Civil Court, the holding not having ceased to be part of the estate. [p. 72, col. 1.]

The expression 'the inamdar' in the exception to section 8 must be read in its strict sense as equivalent only to the owner of the entire interest in the inam and the exception is applicable only to sub-section (1). [p. 72, col. 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar, dated 9th October 1917, in Civil Revision Petition No. 1195 of 1916 on the file of the High Court, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Madura, in Small Cause Suit No. 427C of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. R. V. Sesha Aiyangar, for Mr. K. N. Aiyar, for the Appellant, contended that by the plaintiffs acquisition of the Kudivaram, the land had not ceased to be part of an estate. The exception to section 8 of Madras Act I of 1908 is inapplicable. If the exception be deemed to govern sub-section 2 of the section as well as sub-section (1), the co-sharer landlords would be put to inconvenience and hardship, as they would be deprived of the protection afforded by the Act and would be deprived of the security for their share of the rent.

Mr. N. Chandrasekhara Aiyar, for Mr. A. Krishnasawamy Iyer, for the Respondent, argued contra.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The only question argued is whether the learned Judge was right in holding that the Civil Court had jurisdiction.

The facts, as now agreed on, differ from those stated by the learned Judge. For they are that plaintiff, one of the fractional share-holders of the Melvaram right in an Inam village, that is one of the Inamdars, acquired by gift the Kudivaram right in the whole village, not in a portion of it, and that in 1897 he leased 50 cents of the whole to the defendant, the appellant before us. The suit is on that lease for rent. Ordinarily section 8 (2) of the Estates Land Act would apply, the defendant would be deemed an occupancy ryot and the suit would lie in a Revenue Court. But it is admitted that the land is comprised in an estate falling under section 3 (2) (d) and argued that the exception to section 8 is applicable and the land has ceased to be part of an estate. In effect, therefore, the question is whether the exception governs sub-section (2) or only sub-section (1): that is, whether the expression "the Inamdar" in the exception can be read as equivalent also to "an Inamdar" or "any of the Inamdars."

The point is not, so far as we have been shown, covered by authority. On the one hand the exception stands at the end of the section consistently with its application to both sub-sections (1) and (2) instead of only to the former; and, as the definition of 'land-holder' in section 3 (5) includes a direct reference to joint land-holders, all references to the "land-holder" and, therefore, that to "the Inamdar" which the exception contains, should, it may be argued, be read in the manner proposed by plaintiff. But, on the other hand, although it is not clear that a distinction is drawn between 'the land-holder' and 'a land-holder' or can be implied regarding 'the Inamdar' except in provisions in respect of which such distinction would be material, I think that it would be in that under construction and that the strict reading of the expression 'the Inamdar' is necessary in the interests of convenience and reasonable interpretation. For otherwise the anomalies involved in the application of sub-section (2) to the Inam villages referred to in the exception are excessive. If the exception is applicable to acquisitions of the Kudivaram by a fractional Inamdar, the land in question ceases to be part of the estate; and it can only be regarded as doing so, either (1) as between the acquiring Inamdar and his lessee (if any) and not between the former and the other Inamdars, or (2) absolutely. The first alternative is untenable, since it is not consistent with the general language used in the exception or with the fact that sub-section (2) does not refer to the acquiring Inamdar's right in the phraseology of the Act as that of an occupancy ryot, but simply as being to hold payment, in accordance presumably with the ordinary law. The second deprives the other Inamdars without their consent and perhaps against their will of the security for their share of the rent, which the provisions of the Act relating to distraint, sale of the holding and summary procedure afford. These anomalies can be avoided, only if 'the Inamdar' in the exception is read in its strict sense as equivalent only to 'the owner of the entire interest in the Inam' and the exception is treated as applicable only to sub-section (1). On this interpretation the decision must be that the suit holding has not ceased to be part of the estate and that the suit should have been filed in a Revenue Court.

The Letters Atent Appeal is allowed, the decisions of the learned Judge and the Subordinate Judge being set aside and the plaint being returned for presentation to the Revenue Court having jurisdiction. Plaintiff will pay defendant's costs to date.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I entirely agree.

TATA IRON AND STEEL CO. LTD. v. RAGHUNATH MAHTO.

4, 68, 139—Prodhan, whether tenant—Suit for ejection of prodhan—Jurisdiction—Estoppel, whether cures want of jurisdiction.

The holder of a prodhani pattah is not in the position either of a non-occupancy raiyat or of an occupancy raiyat. He is in the position of a quasi service tenure-holder, that is, he is a tenure-holder of a kind but not one within the definition of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. [p. 74, col. .]

There is no provision in the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act to justify a Court, constituted to hear suits under that Act, to eject a tenure-holder. [p. 74, col. 2.]

Section 139 (6) of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act gives jurisdiction to the Deputy Commissioner to deal with disputes as between parties claiming the office of prodhan coupled with possession of land attached to such office in a civil proceeding between parties other than landlord and tenant, which would otherwise be apparently outside the scope of the Act. [p. 75, col. .]

A suit to eject a prodhan does not fall within the provisions of this sub-section nor is it covered by sub-section (8) of section 139. The Deputy Commissioner has, therefore, no jurisdiction under the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act to hear such a suit. [p. 75, cols 1 & 2.]

In cases where there is an inherent absence of jurisdiction no subsequent action or conduct of the parties can validate the proceedings. [p. 75, col. 2.]

Mr. Shishir Kumar Mitter, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

ATKINSON, J.—The plaintiffs in this suit, namely, the Tata Iron and Steel Co., Ltd., seek to eject the defendant from certain lands held by him under a Prodhani Pattah lease dated 1852. The interest of the lessor in that lease has now by divers means assignments become vested in the Tata Iron and Steel Co., and of that there is no question at all. The lease that was made to the defendant as Prodhan was made by the Deputy Commissioner of Singhbhum while the owner of the estate was a disqualified proprietor. The lease covered an area of 64 bighas odd of cultivated lands in the village of Beldih for a period of 15 years, subject to an annual rent of Rs. 25-9-9. The lease was subject to certain conditions, namely, that the Prodhan was to maintain the sal jungles for the benefit of the lessor, and also that he was to pay his rent according to the stipulations contained in the lease, ki-ti by kist, and that he was to collect no rent from the bastu lands in excess of the rent stated in the doul jamabandi, and that if in the discharge of his duties as Prodhan he was proved unfit, then the lessor for the time being would be entitled to eject him from the lands and also from his office as Prodhan. Irrespective of the lands comprised in the lease, the defendant has also a right to certain other lands and in respect of which he is a raiyat; but Mr. Pugh disclaims on behalf of the plaintiffs any intention to eject the defendant from such raiyat lands. The plaintiffs' claim is conversant only with the ejection of the defendant from the lands covered by the lease of 1852; and for which he pays a reserved rent, subject to the due discharge of his duties as Prodhan.

The case was originally instituted by the plaintiffs in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Singhbhum; and in that Court the defendant raised the contention that the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction inasmuch as the claim was governed by the provisions of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act of 1903; and that therefore the only Court that had jurisdiction to hear and dispose of that suit was the Deputy Commissioner of Singhbhum. The learned Subordinate Judge held that by reason of the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties, this suit was cognizable only by the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Singhbhum. The plaintiffs accepted that contention, without demur, and accordingly instituted the present suit on the 25th February 1916 in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner, relying on the contention that the cause of action sued upon was one governed by the provisions of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, and as such cognizable by the Deputy Commissioner.

Before the Deputy Collector to whom the case was properly assigned for disposal, the defendant took up a novel position and urged that the Deputy Collector had no jurisdiction to hear the case; having raised before the Subordinate Judge formerly the contention that he (the Subordinate Judge) had no jurisdiction but that the Deputy Collector only had jurisdiction. It would be interesting to inquire if the Deputy Collector had no jurisdiction and the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction, then what Court had jurisdiction to try the case and grant the relief claimed in this suit? The question as to jurisdiction does not seem to have been pressed before the learned Assistant Judicial Commissioner in appeal. The Deputy Collector, however, proceeded to try the case, holding that there was jurisdiction inasmuch as the plaintiffs were seeking to eject a tenant, and that the facts as proved before him warranted the plaintiffs' right to eject the defendant; and he accordingly granted a decree to the plaintiffs. The learned Deputy Collector found on the question of fact submitted to him that there had been breaches by the Prodhan of the conditions of the lease which justified his eviction; and on the issues of fact raised by the parties before him, the Deputy Collector decided in favour of the plaintiffs. No question as to limitation was raised before the Deputy Collector. On appeal whether any, and if so which, party raised the question of limitation does not appear; but the learned Judge decided that the plaintiffs' suit was barred under the provisions of section 231 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, inasmuch as the specific breaches relied upon by the plaintiffs to warrant the eviction of the defendant under the terms of the lease were breaches which occurred more than a year prior to the institution of the suit. We are not called upon now, having regard to the view we take, to consider the propriety of that decision; but we take leave to say that inasmuch as the question of limitation was not taken expressly in the pleadings or before the Deputy Collector at the trial, the learned Judicial Commissioner, if he intended to hold that the suit was barred by limitation, might very properly have given the plaintiffs an opportunity to establish by proof that the specific breaches of the lease alleged to have taken place were within one year before the institution of this suit.

The main discussion before us now has been whether or not the Deputy Collector in point of law had jurisdiction to try this case. It is necessary, first, in determining this legal consideration that we should ascertain what is the nature of the relationship which exists between the plaintiffs on the one hand and the defendant on the other. Is he a tenant, if so, what class of tenant is he? Is he an occupancy raiya or a non-occupancy raiya? If the defendant fulfils neither of these qualifications, then is he a tenure holder? I asked Mr. Pugh what class of tenant the defendant was and Mr. Pugh candidly confessed, "I do not know what class of tenant is he." I think myself, having regard to the definition of tenant provided by section 4 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, that the defendant was not in the position of either a non-occupancy Raiyat or an occupancy Raiyat qua the lands held as Prodhan under the lease. The furthest that it could be pushed would be to contend that the defendant was a tenure-holder holding lands under the plaintiffs. Mr. Pugh contends that with regard to the 64 bighas odd of cultivated lands which were covered by the lease of 1882 the defendant is a tenure-holder. But the plaintiffs' claim in this suit is not merely to recover these 64 bighas of land but also to eject the defendant from his office as Prodhan and to have it declared that the defendant has ceased to exercise the right of Prodhan, so far as his rights are concerned outside the mere collection of rents of the lands occupied by tenants. We think the defendant occupies the position of a quasi service tenure holder, that he is a tenure holder of a kind; but certainly not one within the definition of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. If the defendant is a tenure-holder, and not a raiya, then there is no power vested in the Deputy Commissioner to eject him under the provisions of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. The Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act gives express power to deal with the eviction of occupancy *raiya*s and non-occupancy *raiya*s. But there is no provision, so far as we can find, to justify a Court, constituted to hear suits under that Act, to eject a tenure-holder. Section 63 says that "no tenant shall be ejected from his tenancy or any portion thereof except in execution of a decree, or in execution of an order of the Deputy Commissioner, passed under this Act."

Section 22 also bears upon this consideration relative to the position of occupancy and non-occupancy *raiya*s under the Act. But the Deputy Collector acquires a special jurisdiction only in suits specified in section 13 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. The suits set out in the sub-clauses of that section are suits which he alone has jurisdiction to try and which no other Court has any jurisdiction to try.

It is contended before us that this suit, if maintainable, would be maintainable under the provisions of section 139, sub-clause (5). But we are clearly of opinion that sub-clause (6) of section 139 has no application to the facts of this particular case; although that section does provide that "suits by or against headmen of villages for declaration of title in, or for possession of their office or agricultural lands" may be maintained in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner irrespective of the fact whether the relationship of landlord and tenant exists. This enactment involves nothing more than a provision which empowers the Deputy Commissioner's Court to hear suits between the Prodhans on the one hand and rival claimants on the other with regard to the right to hold the office coupled with the possession of the agricultural lands attached thereto, and it provides that such a suit is maintainable although it is a suit between parties between whom the relationship of landlord and tenant does not exist. And thus this section in our view gives jurisdiction to the Deputy Commissioner to deal with disputes as between parties claiming the office of Prodhans coupled with possession of land attached to such office in a civil proceeding between parties other than landlord and tenant, which would otherwise be apparently outside the scope of the Act. The present suit is clearly not within the express provisions of sub-clause (5). The only other sub-clause in respect of which this suit could be maintained would be clause (8) of section 139, and that clause runs as follows:—

"All suits and applications in respect of which jurisdiction is conferred by this Act on the Deputy Commissioner."

Is the present suit one in respect of which jurisdiction is conferred by this Act? Yielding to Mr. Pugh's argument that there is no kind of tenancy existing between the plaintiff on the one hand and the defendant on the other, except some kind of tenancy in the nature of a tenure-holder's interest, then as there is no jurisdiction conferred on the Deputy Commissioner by the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act to eject a tenure-holder, this suit cannot be maintained under the provisions of sub-clause (5) of section 139. In our view it is manifestly clear that there was an utter absence of jurisdiction in the Deputy Collector to try this suit. Mr. Pugh contends on the other hand that by some principle of equitable estoppel the defendant having forced the plaintiffs to obtain such relief in the Deputy Commissioner's Court, that we should recognise the decision of that Court. It is quite impossible to accept this argument, having regard to the authorities which lay down clearly that in cases where there is an inherent absence of jurisdiction no subsequent action or conduct will validate the institution of a proceeding instituted without jurisdiction. Accordingly we must reluctantly hold, that in this particular case, the Deputy Collector had in law no jurisdiction to dispose of this suit and consequently this appeal must be dismissed.

This decision, of course, involves the dismissal of the present suit instituted by the plaintiffs. As at present advised, we are inclined to think that the fact that the suit has been dismissed for the reasons stated, will not operate as a bar to any fresh suit which may be instituted by the plaintiffs in a Court having competent jurisdiction to try and decide it on the issues raised between the parties. But having regard to the attitude adopted by the defendant, it is equitable and just that he should not receive costs in any Court. Accordingly the plaintiffs' suit must be dismissed without costs in the Deputy Collector's Court, without costs in the Judicial Commissioner's Court, and without costs in this Court.

Article 181 and not Article 182 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act is applicable to an application for a final decree in a mortgage suit under Order XXXIV, rule 5 (2), Civil Procedure Code, where the preliminary decree was passed after the new Code, Act V of 1908, came into force.

JUDGMENT.—The question is whether this application under Order XXXIV, rule 5 (2), of the Code of Civil Procedure for a final decree in a mortgage suit is subject to Article 181 or Article 182, Schedule I of the Limitation Act.

We do not think it necessary to refer to any case before Mahammad Husain v. Abdul Kareem (1). It no doubt goes some way, if it is applicable, in support of appellants' contention for Article 182.

But it is, in our opinion, inapplicable to the case before us, the preliminary decree now in question having been passed after, whilst the decree then in question was passed before, the present Code of Civil Procedure came into operation. This distinction is drawn in the judgment in Nimmala Mahankali v. Kallakuri Subba Rao (2), with which we express our respectful concurrence. We are further fortified in that concurrence by the fact that the judgment is in accordance with the decisions of two other High Courts, those of Bombay and Allahabad, and that it is not in conflict with those of the High Court of Calcutta. Datto Atmaram Hosabnis v. Shankar Dattabhai (3), Madho Ram v. Nihal Singh (4), Bmi Singh v. Burhamdeo Singh (5). We hold that Article 181 is applicable and dismiss the appeal against appellate order with costs.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Patna.

JUDGMENT.

ROE, J.—Of the plaintiffs in this case four are the sons of Lachman Prasad Singh, two of whom have recently come of age and two are still minors. Lachman Prasad Singh is still alive. He is a pro forma defendant, so joined on the allegation that he was unwilling to be a plaintiff. Joined with these youngmen as plaintiffs are the real litigants, purchasers of ten annas of one part of the property and twelve and a half annas of another part. The narrative set forth in the plaint is that Bishen Dyal Singh was the father of Lachmi Prasad and Lachman Prasad Singh. In 1866 he found himself in difficulties and adopted the usual course of executing a benami mokurrari in favour of his son Lachmi Prasad's father-in-law, Parsidh Narayan Singh, in respect of the most valuable part of the family property, the village Powara, on a rent reserved of Rs. 5 per annum. On his death the property passed to Lachmi Prasad and Lachman Prasad. They in 1891 and 1892 mortgaged the whole of the family property except Powara to the defendant No. 1, Manmatha Nath Dey, who in 1896 foreclosed the mortgage and after bringing to sale the mortgaged property obtained a decree under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, and under that decree bought on the 16th of August 1902 Powara said to be worth Rs. 80,000 for Rs. 500. On the 23rd August 1906 Manmatha Nath Dey sold both Powara and the mortgaged properties to one Eknath Sahai, in the benami name of his daughter-in-law, and on the 21st May 1908 and the 7th January 1909 Eknath Sahai sold these properties to defendant No. 2 Jaimurat Koer.

The plaint then sets forth the history of an ijara lease granted to Hari Pershad Lal and others in 1893 and the subsequent history of the mokurrari lease above mentioned. These histories are immaterial to the decision, save that they indicate that any stranger attempting to obtain khas possession would find himself at once in a sea of difficulties.

In the course of the argument mention has been made of another mortgage (and of execution proceedings in relation to a decree made thereon) in favour of one Harbans Narayan Singh. No mention is made of this mortgage in the plaint. I refer to it here as relevant only as still further diminishing the chances of Manmatha Nath Dey's entry into possession of the property.

It was stated incidentally in the plaint that Lachmi Prasad Singh was a man of dissolute habits, that the money raised by him on the mortgages was not utilised for the purpose of the joint family, that the whole of the proceedings in execution of Manmatha Nath Dey's mortgage decree was fraudulent, and that Manmatha, having notice of the existence of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 who were alive at the time of the proceedings, deliberately omitted to join them as defendants in his mortgage suit.

On the suit as framed the following reliefs were sought:—

"That it may be held that the mokurrari deed, dated the 31st December 1866, executed by Babu Bishen Dyal Singh in favour of Babu Parsidh Narain Singh, paternal grandfather of the defendants Nos. 5 and 6, is collusive and fictitious and is without the passing of consideration, that under that deed the said Babu Parsidh Narayan Singh, and Babu Jagannath Pershad Singh, father of the defendants Nos. 5 and 6, never got possession, nor did Babu Jagannath Singh, father of the defendants Nos. 5 and 6, and the defendants Nos. 5 to 7 possess any right in the property shown in Schedule No. 1, nor did the defendant No. 2 or the defendant No. 4 also acquire any right therein by virtue of the deed of sale, dated the 31st December 1908, and that possession by the defendant No. 2 is unlawful.

"That upon decision of the above points, and upon passing a decree and by eviction of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the plaintiffs may be awarded possession of the properties in suit, shown in Schedules Nos. 1 and 2, and the properties Nos. 2 and 4 to 13 entered in Schedule No. 3 and that possession of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4 in respect of the properties Nos. 1 and 3 entered in Schedule No. 3 may be confirmed.

JAGDISH NABAYAN PERSHAD SINGH V. MANMATHA NATH.

"That if in consequence of the sale proceedings, etc., above mentioned or on any ground the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4 be considered to be dispossessed of the properties Nos. 1 and 3 in any way, in that case the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4 may be awarded the passing of decree for possession of the properties Nos. 1 and 3 out of the properties entered in Schedule No. 3.

"That if on any ground relief No. 1 be not granted, and if the plaintiffs be held to be entitled only to redemption in respect of the decrees, dated the 24th July 1896 and the 25th November 1899 and the sales held on 16 August 1897 and the 15th July 1902 and the 16th November 1906, the plaintiffs may be granted opportunity for redemption, and an account of the principal and interest on account of the bonds, dated respectively the 27th September 1891 and the 28th March 1892, may be prepared and upon fixing the amount of the income from the property in suit received by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 with interest thereon, and what may be received by them from the date of suit to that of decree, may be set off against the amount due under the said bonds, that thereafter whatever surplus amount may be found by the account to be justly due to the defendant No. 1, or to any defendant to date of the decree or to any time the Court may think proper, may be caused to be paid by the plaintiffs and then order may be passed for them to take possession of the property in suit or that the Court may be pleased to pass a decree for redemption in the manner or subject to any conditions the Court may deem fit and proper that the plaintiffs may be awarded right of possession by redemption, that if by the account any surplus amount be found due to the plaintiffs besides possession of the property, upon taking Court-fees, may be awarded against the defendant or defendants from whom it may be found due, that the sales held on the 16th August 1897 and the 15th July 1902 and the 16th November 1906 may be set aside.

"That costs of suit with interest may be awarded to the plaintiffs against the liable defendants. That any other relief that may in justice be required may be granted to the plaintiffs."

the facts that the debts were not contracted for immoral purposes, that the sale proceedings were in order, that the mortgagees at the time of their suits upon the mortgages of 1891 and 1892 had no notice of the existence of the plaintiffs, and that, therefore, the proceedings against Lachman Prasad Singh were good proceedings and passed the whole property to the auction-purchasers. Finding, therefore, that the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4 had no title to the property he dismissed the suit. Against the decree made the plaintiffs now appeal.

In appeal it is contended, firstly, that though the decision in the case of Sheo Shankar Ram v. Jaddo Kunwar (1) by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee precludes the argument that where a debt is contracted for family purposes it is necessary to make the minor sons of the family parties to the case, it may still be said that inasmuch as the village Powara round which the whole contest in this Court centres was not a part of the mortgaged property, it is necessary to examine carefully the proceedings under section 90 of the Transfer of Property Act, to ascertain whether in fact it was intended to bring to sale the property of the whole family or only the share in that property of the judgment-debtor on the record, Lachman Prasad Singh. Failing success on this ground it is suggested that there is upon the record a considerable body of evidence which will show that Eknath Sahay was in a position of confidence as an employee of Lachman Prasad Singh, and in that position had obtained a special knowledge of his affairs and that on well-known rules of English equity any purchase made by one in his position must enure to the benefit of his employer. The transaction assailed is the purchase from Manmatha Nath Dey on the 23rd August 1906 of Powara, of which the real value is asserted to be Rs. 80,000, by Eknath for Rs. 500. For a stranger the mokurrari, the ijara and Harbans Singh's mortgage would create a hopeless camou flage. To Eknath by virtue of knowledge acquired as Lachman Prasad's employee it would be apparent that the decree-holder-auction-purchaser had a clear title to direct possession of the property. Eknath took advantage of this knowledge to make a bargain. His bargain must secure to the benefit of the sons of his employer, and though he has transferred his bargain to Jaimurat Koer, this lady is the wife of Ram Hari Lal and Ram Hari Lal was well aware of Eknath's relationship to Lachman Prasad Singh and through Ram Hari Lal, Jaimurat Koer must be held to have constructive notice of Eknath's fraud.

Mr. Pugh's argument on the first point is that though the decision in Sheo Shinkar's case (1) completely cuts away the ground from under his feet with regard to any property covered by the mortgage, nevertheless a decree under section 90 for the sale of properties not covered by the mortgaged properties is in the nature of a personal decree and under that personal decree nothing but the personal property of Lachman Prasad Singh passed by the sale. The decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Nasimi Babu sin v. Mohun Mohun (2) is a complete answer to this argument. In order to ascertain what passes upon an execution sale upon a decree made against the karta of a Mitakshara joint family it is necessary to look, firstly, at the circumstances in which the debt was contracted, secondly, at the form in which the plaintiff's claim was pressed, thirdly, at the decree made, fourthly, at the attachment, fifthly, at the sale proclamation and lastly, at the certificate of sale. The money borrowed from Manmatha Nath Day was taken for the purpose of paying Government revenue. I can conceive no family interest higher than an avoidance of a revenue sale. The plaint (page 33 of respondent's portion) attacks Lachmi Prasad as the head and managing member of the family. The decree made was against the whole interest of the family in the mortgaged property. In the proceedings under section 90 the entire Powara village was attached, proclaimed and sold. All that the minor members of the family can now do is to show that the story that the money borrowed was taken for the payment of revenue is a myth. It is not even suggested in argument that this was so. Mr. Pugh's argument is based upon the fact that the sale proclamation describes the property to be sold as sixteen annas of village Powara, the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor. He suggests that the latter phrase limits the former. Obviously sixteen annas and the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors were intended to be synonymous terms.

It is argued by Mr. Pugh that this obvious interpretation is negated by the value set upon the property. I am unable to appreciate this argument. At the date of the sale Lachman Prasad had at the time two sons. Mr. Pugh says Powara was worth Rs. 80000. If it was intended to put an accurate value on the individual share of Lachman Prasad that value would be Rs. 26,666. The value Rs. 500 was estimated not on a consideration of the interests to be sold but upon the hideous clouds upon a title to possession. If the inokurrari was genuine the property was worth only Rs. 5 per annum. If it was not genuine the ijaradar had to be considered. No one but a lathial would have dared set foot in the village. Manmatha Nath Dey was not a lathial. Rs. 500 was a fair value for the privilege of holding a certificate of sale of this hornets' nest. There is no substance in the argument based upon this valuation. The whole interest of the joint family was liable for the debt and was sold.

On the second part of the case Mr. Pugh realizes that he is arguing a case that was not made in the lower Court, but urges that on the long series of English decisions and Indian decisions on the point, an Appellate Court has the widest jurisdiction to give leave to amend the pleadings. This is a case, he says, in which poor minors have been ill-advised by incompetent practitioners in the Courts below. This appeal to one's pity is somewhat discredited by the fact that these poor minors will, if the suit is successful, receive $3\frac{1}{2}$ annas of one and six annas of the other property and the remainder go to persons who have been deliberately brought into this litigation. A further reason for viewing this petition for amendment of the pleadings with some lack of sympathy is that the person who in English Law would be required to contest the proceedings of Eknath Sahay would have been Lachman Prasad Singh himself. He has preferred to stand in the background as a defendant. The suggestion that Jaimurat Koer had notice of Eknath's character and relationship with Lachman Prasad Singh is based on such flimsy ground that, so far as I can see, the only possible result, if the pleas now suggested by Mr. Pugh could be proved, would be a decree against Eknath Sahay for a refund, to Lachman Prasad as karta of the family, of the profits made by him on the purchase of Powara from Manmatha Nath Dey. Eknath is not a party to the suit, and Lachman Prasad is not a plaintiff. For that reason we declined to allow the pleadings to be amended.

There is nothing on the record on which Jaimurat Koer can be asked to surrender the property to the plaintiffs. Eknath Sahay is said to have been a Mukhtar and employee in the plaintiffs' family. He is a notorious character and well known as a practising Mukhtar. In what capacity he was employed by Lachman Prasad is nowhere apparent upon the record.

In order to succeed as against Jaimurat Koer on the line taken by Mr. Pugh it was necessary to prove:

(1) that Eknath Sahay was employed in a confidential capacity by Lachman Prasad Singh;

(2) that in the course of that employment he obtained special knowledge of Lachman Prasad Singh's affairs;

(3) that taking advantage of that special knowledge he made a purchase from Manmatha Nath Dey of his employer's property at a price below its value, and

(4) that Jaimurat Koer was cognizant of all these facts.

From stray passages in the evidence Mr. Pugh has built up an ingenious structure which, when examined, is found to rest on nothing at all. Eknath Sahay paid Lachman Prasad's revenue in 1898. So might any Mukhtar. Eknath Sahay instructed Pleaders to get Lachman Prasad released when arrested for debt in 1905. So might any Mukhtar. Eknath was a co-accused with Lachman Prasad in a criminal case with regard to an affray or riot in connection with Manza Powara. Both were acquitted. How Ram Hari Lal could have had knowledge of these three facts is nowhere apparent, and how, if he had knowledge of them, it could have amounted to notice of a fraud by Eknath Sahay as a confidential agent is even less apparent.

On case law the plaintiffs have no cause of action against defendant No 1, Manmatha Nath Dey. On the facts proved they have no cause of action against defendant No. 2, Jaimurat Koer. No relief is claimed against defendants Nos. 3, 7 and 8. No title is in the plaintiffs for the maintenance of a suit against defendants Nos. 4 5 and 6. The suit was rightly dismissed. I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Ryotwari landholders can only claim a supply of water for irrigation of their lands from a Government channel subject to the right of the Government to regulate the distribution and supply in such manner as they deem fit. [p. 81, col. 2.]

No easement or prescriptive right can be acquired by a person in water in a Government channel when that water has been supplied by Government for the purpose of irrigating lands and in fulfilment of the duty cast on them to supply water to lands which they classify as wet. [p. 83, col. 2.]

No person can claim possessory rights in a channel and ask for an injunction restraining threatened interference with such rights [p. 82, col. 2.]

There can be no possessory rights in connection with incorporeal hereditaments. Where a right to Kontapa Rajan Naidu v. Dwarakowla Suryanarayana, 6 Ind. Cas. 266, 34 M. L. J. 173, 30 M. L. J. 803, 7 M. L. T. 352, (1910) M. W. N. 117, doubted.

Narasappayya v. Ganapathy Rao, 29 Ind. Cas. 255; 38 M. 280, followed.

Plaintiffs sued for recovery of certain lands from their lessees, the defendants. They also asked for an injunction restraining defendants from obstructing the flow of water into their lands from a Government channel called the Diguva channel and for a declaration of their rights. Plaintiffs did not establish any right of easement to the water in the channel, but they based their right to the injunction on the ground that, as the defendants, their lessees, were enjoying the water in the channel under some arrangement with Government, they must be deemed to have been in possession of the right to take water. The Secretary of State was not made a party to the suit.

Held, (1) that plaintiffs were not entitled to the injunction, as they could not be deemed to have had such possession as to entitle them to the relief. [p. 82, col. 2.]

(2) that as the Government was not a party, the Court could not, behind their back, give the plaintiffs the declaration asked for. [p. 83, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Bellary, in Appeal Suit No. 10 of 1916 (Appeal Suit No. 18 of 1915 on the file of the District Court, Bellary), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Bellary, in Original Suit No. 521 of 1910.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, for the Appellants, contended that though they had not acquired a right of easement to the water in the channel, their lessees, the defendants, had had the use of such water for 30 years and their possession must, in law, be deemed to be the possession of the plaintiffs. When that right was threatened, the plaintiffs had a cause of action for the issue of a prohibitory injunction.

Mr. T. Prakasam, for the Respondents, contended that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the reliefs claimed in the absence of Government. They had no possession, in law, of the water, and the defendants' enjoyment as lessees did not constitute the plaintiffs' possession. There was no easement and none could be claimed.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The plaintiffs-appellants sued to recover possession of two plots of land, 12A and 12B, and asked for a declaration of their rights and sought to restrain the defendants from causing obstruction to the flow of water from a channel called Diguva Kalava to the lands in dispute. They got a decree for possession of the lands excepting an acre. There are two questions in this appeal—one is whether they are entitled to an injunction as prayed for or at least to a declaration that they are entitled to the use of the water in the Diguva Channel for irrigating the lands 12A and 12B and the other, whether the judgment of the lower Appellate Court with respect to one acre disallowed to them is right.

The channel takes its rise in the bed of a river called Pennar. The land of the defendants is lower than the land of the plaintiffs. The channel is admittedly a Government channel and the lands of both parties are ryotwari. It seems to be an admitted fact that the channel, which is shown in the Government Register as the source of supply to the land in dispute, is another channel called Yerraguntla Kalava and the Diguva Channel is shown in the register as the source of supply to the defendants' land. The defendants have been in possession of the disputed lands for a long time, about 30 years or so, as lessees of the plaintiffs. During that period they used the Diguva Channel for irrigating the lands in suit. It would also appear from the evidence that for sometime Yerraguntla Channel was in disrepair. That might explain the fact why the water of the Diguva Channel was used by the defendants for irrigation while they were in possession of the plaintiff lands. The channel being a Government channel, neither the plaintiffs nor the defendants have any right to it. Both of them holding wet ryotwari lands are entitled to the supply of water from the Government for the irrigation of their lands. But it is for the Government to distribute the water in any way it thinks fit. That proposition has not been disputed before us and cannot be disputed having regard to the rulings on the subject. The case of the plaintiffs, as put before us, was, not that they had acquired any right of easement by prescription, which the lower Court has negatived, but that Government, having regard to the practice that has obtained within the last 20 or 30 years, would have no objection to their using the

MAHANKALI LAKSHMIH V. TAGNAM NARAYANAPPA.

Diguva Channel for irrigating Survey Nos. 12A and 12B. It is then contended that the defendants have no right to interfere with their use of the water of the Diguva Channel as they have threatened to do. It is not alleged that the defendants have done anything on the plaintiffs' land to interfere with their enjoyment of the water, nor even that they have in any way as yet interfered with the channel which belongs, as already pointed out, to the Government. The only ground for asking for an injunction or for a declaration is that the defendants have threatened interference and claim the right to do so. The important point in this connection is that the Secretary of State, who is the owner of the channel and against whom alone the plaintiffs are entitled to claim a supply of water, has not been made a party. The plaintiffs have not only not established what was their original case, that the channel itself belonged to them; but also failed to establish that they had acquired any easement or right to take water from this channel by prescription. They undoubtedly have a right to a proper supply of water to be secured by the Government. But that is quite a different thing from any right in the channel itself or to the use of the water of this particular channel. If, in a case of this nature, we were to give a declaration in favour of the plaintiffs in the absence of the Government, we should be really deciding the plaintiffs' right as against the Government without Government being represented in the suit. Indeed, Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar for the appellants did not claim that they (appellants) were entitled to such a decree. What he says is that the plaintiffs must be held to be in possession of this right to take water, and as the possessory right has been threatened, they are entitled, on the analogy of cases regarding possessory rights in land, to a prohibitory injunction. In this connection our attention has been drawn to a ruling of Benson and Krishnaswami Aiyar, JJ., reported as Kondapa Rajan Naidu v. Dwarakonda Suryanarayana (1). That case has been considered in a recent decision of this Court reported as Narasappayya v. Ganapathy Rao (2), judgment in which was delivered by Miller and Sadasiva Aiyar, JJ. In that case, the learned Judges thought that the decision in Kondapa Rajan Naidu v. Dwarakonda Suryanarayana (1) might be right on its facts, but they held, after a careful and elaborate discussion of the law, that it was not quite accurate to speak of possessory rights in connection with incorporeal hereditaments, and laid down that where a right to easement has not ripened by enjoyment for the prescribed period, the person who is in actual enjoyment would not have any remedy against any person interfering with such user and enjoyment. They were, therefore, not prepared to endorse a proposition to the contrary, if any such proposition was laid down in Kondapa Rajan Naidu v. Dwarakonda Suryanarayana (1). I respectfully agree with the ruling in Narasappayya v. Ganapathy Rao (2), but it is not necessary to pronounce upon the soundness of the view propounded in Kondapa Rajan Naidu v. Dwarakonda Suryanarayana (1) as the facts of the present case are clearly distinguishable. Here it was the defendants that were, for 20 or 30 years before the suit, using the water of the channel in question for irrigating the land in dispute which was then in their possession. They had lands lower down which, strictly according to custom and practice, should be irrigated by the Diguva Channel. We have no evidence here as to the arrangement by which the defendants obtained from the Government water from this channel for the irrigation of Survey Nos. 12A and 12B. But there can be no doubt that whatever the nature of that arrangement, it was made to suit their own convenience. It is impossible to see how the enjoyment of water under such an arrangement by the defendants would amount in law to possession of the channel by the plaintiffs. Whether the proposition laid down in Kondapa Rajan Naidu v. Dwarakonda Suryanarayana (1) is correct or not, has to be considered more fully when the point directly arises. In the present case, the plaintiffs could not in any way be said to have been in possession of the channel or of any easement with reference to it. That being so, there is no authority for granting the injunction which they seek. The fact is, the plaintiffs have established no right as against anybody in the water of this particular channel, whatever rights they may have as against the Government for the supply of water to the land in dispute. Further I may add that so far as the question of declaration is concerned, it is a discretionary remedy and the facts of the case are certainly not such that we should be justified in granting a declaratory decree in the absence of the Secretary of State, the owner of the channel. On this ground, therefore, I shall hold that the Subordinate Judge was right in dismissing the plaintiffs' claim to an injunction, and that they are not entitled to any declaration with respect to this channel.

As regards the one acre in Survey No. 12B, it would appear that there was a dispute as to the right to this land sometime in 1878. The land was obtained on Dakhast by the plaintiffs, while the defendants claim that they had no right to the patla and that they themselves were entitled to it. The matter was compromised and the claim of the plaintiffs, to that land was given up. The defendants remained in possession in their own right. The question really is whether the defendants have not acquired title to the land by adverse possession. Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar contends that, according to the defendants, they acquired title to the land under a document which has been marked as Exhibit II in the case and he says that, as it is unregistered, it cannot give any right in the land to the defendants. But on the question of adverse possession, we have evidence apart from Exhibit II that the defendants have been in possession of the land for more than 12 years in assertion of their own right, and that is sufficient to dispose of the question.

The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs. The memorandum of objections is also dismissed with costs.

NAPIER, J.—I agree and would only add a few words. The lower Appellate Court has refused the injunction asked for on grounds which my learned brother and myself think are not correct, and it is for that reason that I wish to state what I conceive to be the correct view to take. The lower Appellate Court has held that as the plaintiffs could not claim against the Government the right to take water from this channel, therefore, the defendants were entitled to prevent the plaintiffs taking it. That statement of law is to be found at page 35 of the judgment, where the learned Judge says, "the defendants who hold land irrigated by the channel are entitled to prevent the plaintiffs from using the water, to which they have no right." This statement of law is, in my opinion, entirely unsound and I agree with my learned brother in holding that the rights both of the plaintiffs and of the defendants to water in respect of the ryotwari wet land which they hold are, as has been laid down by this Court time after time, the rights to their customary supply by whatever means the Government chose to put the water on their land. But it appears that, in the lower Courts, the claim by the plaintiffs for an injunction was put on the ground that they had acquired some sort of easement, probably by the user of the water by the defendants for 20 years when they were the plaintiffs' tenants. That contention, I agree with the lower Appellate Court, is entirely unsound. It is impossible for a person to acquire an easement in water in a Government channel when that water has been supplied by Government for the purpose of irrigating land and in fulfilment of the duty cast upon them to supply water to lands which they classify as wet. Therefore no easement can possibly be acquired. Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar in this Court has put his case on an entirely different footing and has asked us to give an injunction limited to the time and period during which the Government is prepared to give the necessary water for this land down the channel. The answer to that claim is to be found in the judgment which has been delivered by my learned brother, in which he points out that there is no possession here and that there is no specific right in particular water in this particular channel; and in view of the fact that the Government is not a party to this suit, it would be inadvisable to give any injunction which would necessarily be based on a declaration of right when such declaration of right can only be operative as long as the Government thinks it advisable to supply water by this channel. I, therefore, entirely agree that this is not a case in which an injunction should be granted and, on this ground, I would uphold the lower Appellate Court's judgment. On the other points, I am in entire concurrence with the view expressed by my learned brother. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

KISHEN DAS AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS

versus

OFFICIAL LIQUIDATOR, DOABA BANK, LTD., IN LIQUIDATION—
RESPONDENT.

Company - Liquidation - Question decided by liquidating Court, whether can be re-opened by regular suit - Review of order by lower Court after dismissal of appeal, legality of.

The Legislature never intended that matters should be decided twice over, once by the liquidating Court and then again by the regular Courts. Therefore, a question which has once been settled by the liquidating Court, cannot be re-opened by a regular suit. [p. 85, col. 2.]

When an appeal from an order has been dismissed by a higher Court, the lower Court cannot review its order. [p. 85, col. 1.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the Additional Judge, in charge of liquidation work, Lahore, dated the 18th July 1916.

Messrs. Herbert and Madan Gopal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Santanam, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the order of the liquidation Judge refusing leave to the appellants to bring a regular suit to obtain a declaration that a sum of Rs. 45,000 deposited with the Doaba Bank of Amritsar should have priority over ordinary debts due by the Bank.

The circumstances in which this sum of Rs. 45,000 were deposited are described in the order of the lower Court. The liquidators recommended that this deposit should have priority, and on 1st April 1914 the liquidating Judge passed an order in these terms: "as this repayment is objected to by nearly all the depositors I am unable to sanction it. The Directors would be well advised if they institute an interpleader suit because then the whole law will be discussed and the question will be finally decided by a ruling of the Chief Court."

No suit was filed as suggested and later on comes another order of the liquidating Judge, dated 11th January 1915, definitely refusing to give preference to the debt. Apparently nobody was present in Court when this order was passed except one Karam Chand, the head clerk of the liquidators. No notice was sent to the appellants, who were the persons primarily concerned.

Against this order of the liquidating Judge an appeal was lodged by the present appellants.

This appeal was dismissed by a Division Bench of this Court as barred by limitation. (See the case published as Bishen Das v. Liquidator of the Doaba Bank, Ltd. (1).) The creditors then applied to the liquidating Judge asking for leave to bring a regular suit to get a decree declaring their claim to be entitled to priority over other claims.

On this the liquidating Judge passed the order now under appeal, holding that though the question was not res judicata, it was doubtful whether he as liquidating Judge could go into the question again, seeing that an appeal from the order of 11th January 1915 had been rejected by the Chief Court, and holding further that the question was one primarily for decision by the liquidating Court and that no good reason was shown why that Court should divest itself of its jurisdiction and hand over the matter to another Court for decision.

The learned Advocate for the appellants strongly urges that the order of 11th January 1915 was passed without notice to his clients, and that so they have never had a chance of being heard, and that justice demands that they should be given a hearing either in the liquidating Court or in some other Court.

KISHEN DAS v. OFFICIAL LIQUIDATOR, DOABA BANK, LTD.

We will assume for the purposes of argument that the appellants have a good case on the merits, and that had they been given due notice they might have advanced sound arguments before the liquidation Judge for claiming priority for their debt, and that the said Judge in passing the order of 11th January 1915 without giving notice to the appellants made a mistake, which was an injustice to the appellants. But still we think it wrong to say that the appellants have been deprived of their fair chance of a hearing. Against the order of 11th January 1915 they had a right of appeal and in pursuance of that right they preferred an appeal to this Court. Through their dilatoriness this appeal was filed too late, and so the appeal, which, according to our assumption, should, and presumably would, have succeeded on the merits was dismissed. The result was that the order of 11th January 1915 stood. How after this the liquidating Judge could again consider the question we are quite at a loss to understand. When an appeal from an order has been dismissed by a higher Court the lower Court cannot review its order. The dismissal of the appeal means that the order of the lower Court has been confirmed (though not necessarily on the merits), and after that the order ranks as the order of the higher Court. It is not such a very rare thing to see an appeal, which on the merits would stand an excellent chance of succeeding, thrown out on the ground of limitation; in such a case the lower Court's order or decree is not confirmed on the merits, but nevertheless the order then ranks as the order of the higher Court and the lower Court cannot review it. We hold then that after the appeal from the order of the 11th January 1915 had been dismissed by this Court the liquidating Judge could not re-open the question. For the appellants it is urged that the order of the 11th January 1915 was not an order passed against them, and that they need not have appealed. We can only say that even though the order was not passed on an application presented directly by them (though apparently the liquidators who presented the application did so on their behalf and at their instance) their interests were adversely affected by the order, and that if they wished to contest it they were bound to appeal. Their grievances were that they had not had a hearing, and that the order was wrong in law; they lost their right to a hearing on these points by their dilatoriness in presenting their appeal.

The other question for decision in the case is whether the liquidating Judge should have given them leave to bring a regular suit. For the respondents it is urged that the liquidating Judge and the ordinary Courts have concurrent jurisdiction, and that it is only in cases where the liquidating Judge thinks that for some reason or another a dispute can be settled better by regular suit than in liquidation proceedings that the liquidating Judge gives leave to persons to lodge a suit against the Company, and that when a matter has once been decided by the liquidating Judge there is an end of the matter, unless the liquidating Judge's decision is upset on appeal. These arguments seem to us perfectly correct. If the liquidating Judge's order is wrong the aggrieved party can appeal. If he does not appeal, or if his appeal fails, there is an end of the matter. We see no reason whatever to suppose that the Legislature ever intended that matters should be decided twice over, once by the liquidating Court and then again by the regular Courts. To hold otherwise would lead to absurd results. Suppose that the appeal from the order of the 11th January 1915 had been dismissed by this Court, the highest Court in the Province, not on the ground of limitation but on the merits; would it not then be absurd to re-open the question in a District Court of jurisdiction inferior to that of this Court? We hold that the question, having been settled by the liquidating Court, cannot be re-opened by a regular suit.

In conclusion we note that Mr. Herbert contends that the order of 1st April 1914 gives the appellants leave to bring a regular suit. It certainly says the Directors (the present appellants) would be well advised to bring an interpleader suit. Apparently the Judge who passed this order had vague ideas as to the nature of an interpleader suit; but this is merely an expression of opinion, and does not amount to a formal permission. It is, of course, quite possible, or we may even say probable, that, if on 1st April 1914 permission to bring a regular suit had been asked for, permission would have been given, but no such permission was asked for and we cannot hold that permission was given.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Sivaganga, in Original Suit No. 26 of 1916.

Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellant,

Mr. K. Rajah Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit instituted to recover a sum of Rs. 8,000 and odd from the defendants. The plaintiff and the father of the defendants were partners in a firm, at first called R. M. S. L. P. P. and afterwards changed into R. M. S. L. S. This firm carried on business in Soomangai and Kyato. The plaintiff had also a firm of his own at Rangoon.

The case of the plaintiff is that his Rangoon firm called R. M. S. L. advanced sums of money on different occasions to the defendants' firm of which he himself is a partner, that the latter firm was dissolved long before the institution of the suit, and on taking accounts as between the plaintiff's firm and the defendants' firm it was found that a balance of Rs. 25,000 and odd was due to the plaintiff's firm. The contract between the plaintiff and the father of the defendants with relation to the partnership was that the plaintiff was to have $\frac{2}{3}$ th share and the father of the defendants $\frac{1}{3}$ th share and we may also take it, so far as we can gather from the pleadings, that the plaintiff's share of the liability was $\frac{2}{3}$ ths to $\frac{1}{3}$ th of the defendants' father's. The plaintiff sues to recover, not the entire sum of Rs. 25,000 and odd which was found to be due from the R. M. S. L. S. firm to the plaintiff's firm, but $\frac{1}{3}$ th of that sum on the basis that his liability being to the extent of the $\frac{1}{3}$ ths, the defendants would only be liable for $\frac{1}{3}$ th of Rs. 25,000 and odd, and that nothing is due to anybody else from the R. M. S. L. S. firm. It is not proved that there are any other debts due from that firm. But we may take it to be proved that there are outstanding in respect of a decree debt due to the R. M. S. L. S. firm and otherwise. The question is whether a suit of this character is maintainable.

The plaintiff is practically suing himself and his partner, and he says that for the debt due to himself $\frac{2}{3}$ th of that liability falls upon him. That is to say, he really seeks to establish a certain liability against the defendants on the basis of accounts. The defendants do not admit that upon the taking of the entire account, the amount due would be that claimed by the plaintiff. It may be said on behalf of the plaintiff that if there were any other assets due to the R. M. S. L. S. firm, the only difference which it would make would be that the plaintiff will have his share of those assets as well. But that does not by any means conclude the question.

We may take it that one partner can sue another in certain cases, such as the one which this Court had to deal with in Karri Venkatareddi v. Kollu Narasayya (1). There the defendant partner was sued upon a special agreement to hand over certain promissory notes and other documents to the plaintiff. In such a suit no question of accounts arose. It was, therefore, held that to entertain a suit of that character could in no way work injustice to the defendant partner. The cases referred to in Thiruvengada Mudaliar v. Sadagopa Mudaliar (2) and Sokkanadha Vannimundar v. Sokkanadha Vannimundar (3) are different cases. In these, the suits were to recover a share of a particular item of partnership assets after the dissolution of partnership and the decisions lay down the principle and the conditions under which such suits will lie. They have no bearing on the present case.

Mr. K. V. Krishnasami Ayyar, the learned Vakil for the appellant, relies very strongly on the provisions of Order XXX, rule 9 of the Civil Procedure Code, which says this Order 'shall apply to suits between a firm and one or more of the partners therein and to suits between firms having one or more partners in common; but no execution shall be issued in such suits except by leave of the Court, and, on an application for leave to issue such execution, all such accounts and enquiries may be directed to be taken and made and directions given as may be just.' Now all that can be said is that this rule contemplates the possibility of suits between a firm and one or more of the partners therein and suits between firms having one or more partners in common. But it does not profess to lay down when, and under what circumstances, such suits would be entertained, and it would not ordinarily be within the scope of the Civil Procedure Code to lay down any such proposition. The rule in question only lays down that if such suits are entertained, the procedure to be followed is that set out in the Order.

On the other hand, we have been referred to at least two cases which seem directly to bear on the point, Kashinath Kedari v. Ganesh (4) and Chunder Sikhur Biswas v. Ram Buksh Chetlungee (5). The facts of those cases are very similar to the present case, and it was held that such suits would not lie.

We must, however, say that we do not understand the reasons given by the Subordinate Judge in support of his view on this question. He says that it is shown by the evidence that there are some assets belonging to the firm and, therefore, the suit ought to have been instituted against the assets. We do not understand what the learned Subordinate Judge means. He could have been right if he had held that a suit like this could not be entertained as the plaintiff has not asked for accounts. But there is no meaning in his saying that the suit ought to have been 'against the assets'. He also decided against the plaintiff on other grounds, namely, that certain entries in books of accounts filed by him had not been proved; and, even if proved, they would not be sufficient in law to support his case. It is unnecessary, in view of what we have expressed as regards the maintainability of the suit, to pronounce any opinion on that question. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Where a lambardar dies without heirs, the question of the appointment of a successor should be dealt with under rule 15 of the Lambardari Rules as though it were a case of the first appointment of a lambardar.

An officer making an appointment under rule 15 of the Lambardari Rules is at liberty to consider all matters which may reasonably be regarded as relevant to the suitability of an appointment, and he is expected to decide between rival candidates according to the general balance of their respective claims and of the administrative advantages, or disadvantages, of appointing each respectively. If he exercises his discretion in a reasonable manner, neither ignoring any portion of those matters which he ought to consider, nor perversely running counter to the general sense of the rule, his decision ought to be allowed to stand, and the mere fact that an appellate or revising officer takes a different view of personal claims is not a good reason for upsetting or modifying that decision.

Appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Multan, dated the 22nd October 1917.

Mr. Mukaul Lall, for the Appellant.

Bakshi Tek Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—I have heard Counsel for the parties. There is no claim on the part of either to succeed as heir to the late headman, and No. (8) in the grounds of appeal is misleading in this respect. The case is as, observed by the Commissioner, one to be dealt with under rule 15, as though it were a case of the first appointment of a headman.

Rule 15 specifies four matters for consideration. But these four matters are not the only matters to be taken into account. They are to be taken into account "among other matters," as the first sentence of the rule shows. An officer making an appointment is at liberty to consider all matters which may reasonably be regarded as relevant to the suitability of an appointment, and he is expected to decide between rival candidates according to the general balance of their respective claims and of the administrative advantages, or disadvantages, of appointing each respectively. If he exercises his discretion in a reasonable manner, neither ignoring any portion of those matters which he ought to consider, nor perversely running counter to the general sense of the rule, his decision ought to be allowed to stand; and the mere fact that an appellate or revising officer takes a different view of personal claims is not a good reason for upsetting or modifying that decision.

The Collector had the facts regarding the property and services of the rival candidates before him, and Malik Chiragh Khan is evidently a well-known man, being a retired military officer of distinction and a considerable landed proprietor in the Colony. The order of appointment mentioned the fact that "there is an old feud between him and the other lambardar L. Girdhari Lal," and observed: "In fact Malik Chiragh Khan has a great many feuds. He should not be appointed lambardar in this chak so long as it can be helped."

Against the Collector's order appointing Mashir Ali (who appears at the present time to be the owner of 6 squares in the patti, while Malik Chiragh Khan is the owner by purchase of the other eight) Malik Chiragh Khan appealed to the Commissioner. The Commissioner found that he owns more property than Mashir Ali, and that his services and those of his son are equal or greater than those of Mashir Ali and his forefathers, and also that his influence in the neighbourhood is considerable. He also observed that Malik Chiragh Khan is not to be blamed in the matter of his feud with Girdhari Lal. He, therefore, set aside the Collector's order and appointed Chiragh Khan.

The Collector's further remark that Malik Chiragh Khan has a great many feuds, and should not be appointed lambardar in this chak so long as it can be helped, was overlooked, or at all events not specifically dealt with in the Commissioner's order.

The Collector gave full consideration to the claims of the parties, and assigned a definite reason for not selecting the present respondent. Since he neither ignored any of the considerations which the rule requires him to take into account, nor gave a decision, which could be described as perverse or unreasonable, between the claims, taken each as a whole, of the two parties, his decision should not have been reversed upon appeal. I, therefore, accept the present appeal and restore the Collector's order appointing the appellant. I give the costs of the present proceeding in favour of the appellant.

Appeal accepted.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VII, r. 10—Plaint, return of, for presentation to proper Court—Presentation to Court indicated, whether bars right of appeal—Pre-emption, suit for, valuation of—Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), s. 3 (1)—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (v)—Madras Civil Courts Act (III of 1873), s. 14.

A party who complies with an order of Court returning a plaint to be filed in the proper Court by filing it in the Court indicated in the order does not forfeit his right of appeal against the order returning the plaint.

The proper valuation of a suit to enforce a right of pre-emption is, in accordance with section 14 of the Madras Civil Courts Act, that fixed in the manner provided by section 7 (v) of the Court Fees Act.

Petition, under section 115 of the Act of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court, North Malabar, in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 4 of 1917, preferred against the order of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Tellicherry, in Original Suit No. 36 of 1916.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. C. Madhavan Nair and P. Appu Nair, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent first filed his plaint in the District Munsif's Court. When it was returned, he filed it in the Subordinate Court and it was returned again. He appealed to the lower Appellate Court against the order of return by the District Munsif; and the first question is whether by electing to file his plaint in the Subordinate Court, he forfeited his right of appeal. It has been held that he could do so in Beni Madhub Das v. Jotindra Mohan Tagore (1). But that decision was doubted in Baikunta Nath Dey v. Nawab Salimulla Bahadur (2) and was dissented from by one of us and another learned Judge of this Court in A. A. O. No. 403 of 1914. We do not find in Order XLI or XLIII of the Civil Procedure Code any recognition of the principle that any such election as may have taken place in the case before us affects the right of appeal. We, therefore, hold that an appeal lay to the lower Appellate Court.

On the merits the question is whether a suit to enforce a right of pre-emption should be valued for the purpose of jurisdiction with reference to the gross value of the property or otherwise, the lower Appellate Court having held that it should be valued with reference to the net value after the amount of encumbrances on it has been deducted. Under section 3 (1), Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), Local Governments are empowered to make rules for determining the value of land for purposes of jurisdiction in the suits mentioned in the Court Fees Act, section 7 (v); and suits such as that before us are so mentioned. Under section 6, when such rules are made section 14 in Madras Civil Courts Act (III of 1873) is to be deemed repealed. Section 14 no doubt refers to the subject-matter of suits for land, etc. But it is not, in our opinion, possible to accept the argument that the subject-matter includes only immediate rights to possession and not such rights relating to lands as pre-emption, when the contrary is indicated clearly by the last mentioned provision of the Suits Valuation Act. We, therefore, hold that the proper valuation is, in accordance with section 14 of the Madras Civil Courts Act, that fixed in the manner provided by the Court Fees Act, section 7 (v). It is not disputed that so valued the suit will be within the District Munsif's jurisdiction. We, therefore, agree with the District Judge's decision and dismiss the petition with costs.

Petition dismissed.

First appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Delhi, dated the 14th March 1914, decreeing claim in part.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shafi and Mr. Santanam, for the Appellant.

Mehta Bahadur Chand and Mr. Tarlochan Das Khanna, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Chhote Lal, a Bania of Delhi, died sonless on the 31st October 1909, leaving a widow Musammât Kashmiro. On the 29th March 1911, Musammât Kashmiro executed a registered deed by which she adopted an orphan boy, named Durga Parshad, in accordance with the alleged instructions of her deceased husband Chhote Lal. In the said deed it was declared that Durga Parshad would be the owner of the moveable and immoveable property that had devolved upon Musammât Kashmiro from her husband and her father. On the 17th June 1911 Musammât Kashmiro executed a registered Will in which, after setting forth in detail the properties which she had inherited from her father and also those that had come into her possession from her husband, she stated as follows:—

"With the permission of Lala Chhote Lal, my husband, I have adopted Durga Parshad, minor, under a deed of adoption, dated the 29th March 1911 and registered on the 31st March 1911, on behalf of my husband. I have also performed his Baryan ceremony. The said boy is my heir * * * *

I do hereby, while in the enjoyment of sound health and in full possession of my senses * * * * make a Will in favour of Durga Parshad, minor, adopted son of Chhote Lal, my husband * * * * with a view to remove subsequent disputes arising in connection with the management of the property of the family to the following effect:—

(1) As long as I am alive, I shall be owner of the whole of my property, moveable and immoveable * * * * When I pass away, the legatee will be bound to perform my funeral and other ceremonies.

(2) As the legatee is a minor, I appoint (here follow the names of four persons) as guardians of the said minor for carrying on the management of the property. * * * *

(5) * * * * When the said adopted son attains the age of maturity he will be given proprietary possession of the whole of the moveable and immoveable property left by me which would be forthcoming at that time * * * *

Musammât Kashmiro died on the 12th September 1913; and on the 11th November 1913 the suit which has given rise to the present appeal was instituted by Ramji Das, who is the sole surviving male collateral of Chhote Lal, deceased husband of Musammât Kashmiro, against

RAMM DAS V. DURGA PARSHAD.

Durga Parshad and three of the executors named in Musammāt Kashmiro's Will, for

(1) a declaration that Durga Parshad had not in fact been adopted and that, if adopted, his adoption was invalid;

(2) a declaration that Musammāt Kashmiro had no power to make the Will, dated the 17th June 1911, that the Will was invalid, and that the plaintiff was the lawful heir to the estate left by Chhote Lal and Musammāt Kashmiro.

The defendant Durga Parshad pleaded, inter alia, that the plaintiff was not in possession of all the properties in suit which had been left by Chhote Lal and Musammāt Kashmiro, and, therefore, a suit for a mere declaration did not lie; that the plaintiff had no locus standi to sue in respect of the property which Musammāt Kashmiro got from her mother under a Will, as he was not an heir to that property; that Musammāt Kashmiro had adopted the defendant Durga Parshad under the authority of her deceased husband Chhote Lal; that the adoption was valid; and that she had full power to bequeath the properties obtained by her from her husband and from her mother.

We may note here that at a subsequent stage of the litigation it appears to have been admitted by both parties that the house in Ambala and two houses situate in Kucha Lattu Shah, Delhi, which form part of the properties in dispute, had been inherited by Musammāt Kashmiro from her father and had not come to her under a Will of her mother (page 93, lines 5 and 6 of the paper-book). On the pleadings of the parties the lower Court drew seven issues, which are as follows (page 48) :—

(1) Does the suit for declaration not lie?

(2) Is the plaint insufficiently stamped?

(3) Is plaintiff a relative of Chhote Lal and has he a locus standi to sue?

(4) Were the house in Ambala and the two houses in Kucha Lattu Shah acquired by Musammāt Kashmiro from her mother?

(5) If she succeeded her father to this property, has plaintiff as a relative of Chhote Lal any locus standi to sue?

(6) Did Chhote Lal give Musammāt Kashmiro authority to adopt Durga Parshad?

(7) Did she in fact adopt him?

Later on an additional issue was drawn in the following terms (page 65) :—

“Had Durga Parshad no father or mother alive at the time of his alleged adoption; and if so, does this fact invalidate the adoption?”

On the more material of issues set out above the lower Court has held as follows :—

(1) that the plaintiff's suit for a mere declaration is maintainable;

(2) that the plaintiff is a collateral of Chhote Lal, deceased, and has a locus standi to bring the present suit;

(3) that inasmuch as the house in Ambala and the houses situate in Kucha Lattu Shah were admittedly inherited by Musammāt Kashmiro from her father, she had full power to dispose of the said houses by Will, and the plaintiff, as a collateral of her deceased husband, had no right to contest her power of disposition regarding the said houses;

(4) that Chhote Lal had given no authority to Musammāt Kashmiro to adopt the boy Durga Parshad; and

(5) that the adoption of Durga Parshad by Musammāt Kashmiro was invalid on the grounds—

(a) that he had been adopted by Musammāt Kashmiro without the express or implied authority of her husband; and

(b) that he was an orphan boy at the time of the adoption and could not, therefore, be given in adoption under Hindu Law;

(6) that although the adoption of Durga Parshad was invalid, the Will made in his favour by Musammāt Kashmiro was valid and operative after her death in regard to the three houses inherited by her from her father.

Upon these findings the lower Court has decreed the plaintiff's suit, except as regards the house in Ambala and the two houses in Kucha Lattu Shah, in respect of which it has held that the bequest of Musammāt Kashmiro is perfectly valid, and to this extent only the plaintiff's suit has been dismissed.

The plaintiff has preferred an appeal to this Court in regard to the three houses just referred to; and the defendant Durga Parshad has filed cross-objections, under Order XL1, rule 22, Civil Procedure Code, against that part of the decree of the lower Court by which it has granted the plaintiff (with the exception noted above) the declarations asked for by him. The questions which we have to decide in this appeal are:—

(1) whether the present suit for a mere declaration is or is not maintainable;

(2) whether Durga Parshad was adopted by Musammam Kashmiro under the authority of her deceased husband, and if he was so adopted, whether the adoption was valid under Hindu Law;

(3) if the adoption in question is invalid, whether the Will made by Musammam Kashmiro on the 17th June 1911 is also invalid on the ground that the Will was made in favour of Durga Parshad in his sole capacity as adopted son, the fact of his alleged adoption being the sole reason and motive of the bequest in question.

Upon the first question, we find no difficulty in holding that the suit is maintainable in the form in which it has been instituted. It is no doubt true that some of the moveable property to which the suit relates is in possession of the defendants (page 47), but the plaintiff's Counsel has expressly given up the claim in regard to that property before us. The rest of the moveables in suit are said to be in the possession of the Nazir who was appointed by the District Judge, Delhi, curator under Act XIX of 1841 in November 1913; and we are clearly of opinion that the suit for a declaration in respect of such moveable property is maintainable. So far as the immoveable property in dispute is concerned, it was admitted in the written statement of the defendants that house No. 5 was in possession of the plaintiff and houses Nos. 3 and 6 in possession of third parties (page 44). The only dispute was as to the possession of houses Nos. 1, 2 and 4, which were claimed by the defendants to be in the possession of their tenants. On this point, however, the defendants have adduced no evidence at all; whilst, on the other hand, the plaintiff has gone into the witness-box and deposed that the said houses are in his possession through his tenants Manohar Lal and Kundan Lal who had executed leases in his favour. We hold, therefore, that none of the properties in suit are in possession of the defendants, and that a suit for a mere declaration is maintainable by the plaintiff.

With respect to the second question, upon the view that we take of the case it is unnecessary to decide whether Durga Parshad had been adopted by Musammam Kashmiro with the express or implied authority of her deceased husband. Assuming that he was so adopted, in our opinion, the adoption in question was invalid on the short ground that Durga Parshad being an orphan boy at the time could not be given in adoption under Hindu Law by his grand-uncle Sheo Dial, who is a party to the deed of adoption, dated the 29th March 1911. In his Hindu Law, page 130, Trevelyan says:—

“Under no circumstances can any other than the father or mother give a boy in adoption. A step mother, a brother and a paternal grandfather have no power to give in adoption. The power to give a son in adoption cannot be delegated to any person; but a father or mother may authorize another person to perform the physical act of giving a son in adoption to a named person.”

“According to Hindu Law it is only the father that can give a son in adoption, and in case he is incompetent, the mother can give him in adoption. No other person can give a son in adoption.”

See also pages 113, 117 and 167 of the same Volume; Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, paragraph 132, pages 167—170; and Mulla's Hindu Law, 2nd Edition, page 386.

The learned Pleader for the defendant Durga Parshad has relied, in support of the alleged validity of his client's adoption, on the decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Bhagnat Pershad v. Munari Lal (1). The facts of that case were very peculiar. In 1873 an orphan boy, named Murari Lal, was given in adoption to a Hindu widow by his brother Hazari Lal; and since the date of adoption Murari Lal had been in possession of the properties left by the widow's husband as his adopted son. Upon a suit being instituted in 1906 by a reversionary heir of the widow's husband in which the validity of the adoption of Murari Lal was contested on the ground that he being an orphan boy could not have been validly given in adoption by his brother Hazari Lal, the learned Judges of the High Court, after referring to certain cases in which the maxim quod fieri non debet, factum valet had been held to apply to cases of adoption, went on to observe as follows:—

"To disturb the adoption now would, we think, be to do grave injustice to the person adopted, Murari Lal, by destroying his civil status after it had been accepted for forty years, and we are, therefore, led to the conclusion, though not without considerable hesitation, that in the present case the maxim (of factum valet) may be applied, and that we should not hold that the adoption was invalid because it was made by the elder brother, the father and the mother of the person adopted being then dead. On this ground, therefore, we are of opinion that the suit must fail." The italics in the above passage are ours.

The facts of the present case are different from those of the case just cited; and there are no reasons whatever for applying the maxim of factum valet to the present litigation to the extent of accepting the validity of the adoption of Durga Parshad, in the face of the clear doctrine of Hindu Law that a Hindu boy cannot be validly given in adoption by any one except his father or mother. We hold, therefore, that the adoption of Durga Parshad by Musamat Kashmiro was invalid.

This brings us to the question as to whether, the adoption of Durga Parshad by the widow being invalid, her Will, dated the 17th June 1911, by which she bequeathed her own property to Durga Parshad was also invalid on the ground that his adoption was the sole reason and motive for the bequest. In support of his contention that the Will in question was invalid on the ground stated, the learned Counsel for the plaintiff relied on Fanindra Deb Raikat v. Rajeswar Das (2), Lali v. Murlidhar (3), Karamsi Madhewji v. Karsanas Natha (4), Rango Balaji v. Mudiyeppa (5) and Surendro Keshub Roy v. Doorgasoondery Dossee (6). In Fanindra Deb Raikat v. Rajeswar Das (2) one of the questions involved was whether a person, who was alleged to have been validly adopted according to the custom of the family but whose adoption was found to be invalid, was entitled to succeed to the estate of the alleged adoptive father under a Will (angilrar patro) executed by him in favour of the adopted son subsequent to the adoption.

"There is some evidence in this case of a family custom forbidding alienation by gift, and consequently by Will, but their Lordships do not propose to enter into the question whether there is sufficient proof of it, as they have come to the conclusion that, as Jogendra had no power to adopt a son who would succeed to the estate, it did not pass to Rajeswar by the angilrar-patro. Their Lordships feel no difficulty about Rajeswar being sufficiently designated as the object of the gift, although the adoption may not be valid. They think the question is whether the mention of him as an adopted son is merely descriptive of the person to take under the gift, or whether the assumed fact of his adoption is not the reason and motive of the gift and indeed a condition of it. The words are:—

"I authorise you by this angilrar-patro to offer oblations of water and pinda to me and my ancestors after my death by virtue of your being my adopted son. Moreover, you shall become the proprietor of all the moveable and immoveable properties which I own and which I may leave behind; you shall become entitled to my deva-pauca (debts and dues) and you and your sons and grandsons shall enjoy them agreeably to the custom of the family.' He is to make the offerings by virtue of being an adopted son, and 'moreover' he is to become the proprietor. This is to be the consequence of the adoption. In fact the angilara-patro only states what would have happened without it. The distinction between what is description only and what is the reason or motive of a gift or bequest may often be very fine, but it is a distinction which must be drawn from a consideration of the language and the surrounding circumstances."

It is clear from this passage in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council that it has to be decided in each particular case, after a consideration of the language of the relevant documents and the surrounding circumstances, whether the distinction between what is description only and what is the reason or motive of a gift or bequest, as pointed out by their Lordships, exists or not in that case. In Lali v. Murlidhar (3) their Lordships of the Privy Council, following the rule laid down in Fanindra Deb Raikat v. Rajeswar Das (2), held that the intention of the testator in that case, who had bequeathed his property to a boy, named Murli Dhar, whom he had adopted several years before in virtue of a special custom, was to give his property to Murli Dhar as his adopted son capable of inheriting by virtue of the adoption; and that, as the adoption was invalid according to general Hindu Law, and not warranted by family custom, it gave him no right to inherit, and the gift or Will, therefore, did not take effect. The same principle which has been laid down in the above mentioned cases has been enunciated by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Surendro Keshub Roy v. Doorgasunderdy Dossee (6) and Karamsi Madhewji v. Karsandas Natha (4) and Rango Balaji v. Mudiyeppa (5).

The question for decision in the present case is, whether Musammal Kashmiro made the Will, dated the 17th June 1911, in favour of Durga Parshad simply and solely because he had been already adopted by her under the alleged authority of her deceased husband; in other words, whether his adoption was the reason and motive of the bequest, and its validity a condition precedent to his capacity to succeed under the Will to the property owned by Musammal Kashmiro in her own right in contradistinction to the property left by her deceased husband and held by her in her capacity as his widow. We have carefully considered the language of the deed of adoption, dated the 29th March 1911, and that of the Will, dated the 17th June 1911; and reading the two deeds in the light of the oral evidence on the record and of the surrounding circumstances, we have come to the following conclusion. Musammal Kashmiro had no authority whatever, express or implied, from her deceased husband to adopt the boy Durga Parshad. She adopted him under the influence of Durga Parshad's grand-uncle and certain other persons who were interested in defeating the reversionary claims of the present plaintiff. After executing the deed of adoption, dated the 29th March 1911, Musammal Kashmiro came to entertain grave doubts as to whether the device of adoption would be successful as against the present plaintiff; and she was, therefore, advised to execute a Will in favour of Durga Parshad in which the adoption of the boy was to be referred to by way of formal confirmation of what had been done by her before, but, in addition to it, she was to devise specifically and in detail (a) the properties which had been inherited by her from her own father; (b) properties which had come into her possession from her deceased husband. It has been admitted in argument before us that if the adoption of Durga Parshad by Musammal Kashmiro had been valid, he would have succeeded immediately, on the execution of the deed of adoption, dated the 29th March 1911, to the properties left by her husband Chhote Lal; but that he would not have had an immediate right of succession to the properties which had been inherited by Musammal Kashmiro from her own father. It seems to us that by executing the Will, dated the 17th June 1911, what Musammal Kashmiro intended to do was to place beyond dispute the right of Durga Parshad to succeed to the property inherited by her from her own father in the event of the adoption of the boy being held invalid, which would carry with it the legal consequence of depriving him of succession to Chhote Lal's property. It is thus clear to our minds that the bequest in dispute was made by Musammāt Kashmiro to Durga Parshad, because she wanted him to succeed to her own property referred to in the Will not merely by virtue of his adoption as the son of her deceased husband, but quite apart from, and independently of, his capacity of such adopted son. The adoption of the boy was not the reason and motive of the bequest, nor was its validity a condition precedent to the bequest taking effect; the underlying motive of the bequest was that Durga Parshad should succeed at least to Musammāt Kashmiro's own property after her death in case his adoption, for some reason or other, was found to be invalid, as Musammāt Kashmiro had, in view of the facts within her own knowledge, strong reasons for thinking that the factum of the adoption or its validity would not stand examination. Upon these grounds the present case is clearly distinguishable from the Privy Council decisions cited before us by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff; and we hold that the Will, dated the 17th June 1911, was not invalid simply because the prior deed of adoption, dated the 29th March 1911, did not confer on the boy the status of a validly adopted son.

There remains the subsidiary question as to whether Musammāt Kashmiro had power under Hindu Law to bequeath to Durga Parshad the Ambala house and the two houses in Kucha Lattu Shah which she had inherited from her father. It is indisputably clear upon the authorities that the houses in question having been inherited by Musammāt Kashmiro from her father were not, strictly speaking, her stridhan according to Hindu Law, a proposition which was not disputed before us by the plaintiff's learned Counsel; and it is equally clear that the plaintiff, who is a collateral of Musammāt Kashmiro's husband, but is in no way connected with her father's family, has no locus standi to contest her power of disposition in respect of the property in question.

For the foregoing reasons we maintain the decree of the lower Court and dismiss both the appeal and the cross-objections with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

THE MUNICIPAL COUNCIL,
KUMBAKONAM—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIII, r. 5 (d), scope of—Pauperism, enquiry into—Jurisdiction to determine doubtful questions of law—Limitation, decision on question of, legality of.

Order XXXIII, rule 5 (d), Civil Procedure Code, applies only to cases where the allegations of the petitioner do not show a cause of action and it precludes an elaborate enquiry into doubtful and complicated questions of law during the enquiry into pauperism. [p. 95, col. 2.]

A question of limitation cannot be determined at the stage contemplated by Order XXXIII, rule 5, especially if its decision depends on the taking of evidence. [p. 96, col. 2.]

Appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent against the judgment and order of Mr. Justice Spencer, dated the 27th March 1917 reported as 42 Ind. Cas. 519, in Civil Revision Petition No. 887 of 1916, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Kumbakonam, dated the 5th February 1916, in Original Suit No. 1251 of 1915.

Mr. K. Ramachandra Ayyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. Rajagopala Chariar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We are of opinion that the District Munsif was not justified in determining a question of limitation, as to which there has been considerable difference of judicial opinion, upon an application to sue in forma pauperis. Order XXXIII, rule 5 (d), applies only to cases where the allegations of the petitioner do not show a cause of action, and we think that this should appear clearly upon the face of the petition.

We have been referred to cases where it was held that the Court can go into the question of limitation to see if the petitioner has a subsisting cause of action. The cases do not decide that an elaborate enquiry into doubtful and complicated questions of law should be raised at the stage contemplated by Order XXXIII, rule 5. The pauper has no right of appeal if the decision on the question of law is wrong. We do not think it necessary to decide the question of limitation at this stage. This should form the subject-matter of an issue.

In the present case, moreover, the question of limitation may depend upon the construction of the contract between the parties, and it is possible that other evidence may be admissible as to the rights of the parties to the deposit made by the applicant, and we think that such matters should not be considered by the Court at this stage.

The appeal is allowed, the order of the District Munsif is set aside and the petition is remanded for disposal according to law. The costs in the Civil Revision Petition No. 887 of 1916 and this Letters Patent Appeal will abide the result of the suit.

Appeal allowed.

APPELLANTS

PUNJAB SINGH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Custom—Abadi deh—Alienation—Non-proprietors, right of, to sell sites—Mauza Tuto Mazara, District Hoshiarpur.

In Mauza Tuto Mazara, District Hoshiarpur, non-proprietors have by custom the right to sell their sites. [p. 98, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 22th November 1916.

Lala Madan Gopal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Vaughan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are briefly as follows:—Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who are Khatri, sold the house and site in dispute to defendant No. 3, a Brahman, who re-sold 2/3rds to defendants Nos. 4 and 5 who are comparatively recent proprietors. The plaintiffs are Jats; and they sued for the dispossession of the vendees, alleging that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had no right of alienation. The Munsif held that Tuto Mazara, where the property in dispute is situate, is not a qasba but a village and that the right of alienation of sites by the non-proprietary body is not established. The District Judge concurred in this finding, but granted a certificate on the point of custom. On the basis of that certificate the alienees have preferred a second appeal to this Court.

It may be remarked at the outset that having regard to the fact that the alienees are themselves village proprietors and the plaintiffs have no better title, having failed to establish the claims which they set up, (a) that they were the original owners of the site and (b) that the site belonged to their Patti, they ought not to have obtained a decree for more than joint possession.

As regards the merits of the case, the District Judge was evidently in considerable doubt as to whether on the evidence adduced he ought not to have found that a custom of right of alienation was established, and the finding at which he arrived was based mainly on a comparison of the facts of this case with those detailed in Maya Das v. Jan Muhammad (1) and Khudayar v. Kapur Singh (2). In the earlier of those cases evidence has been adduced regarding 31 sales and 26 mortgages; in the second case 97 deeds had been filed of which 20 specifically referred to the site as included in the sale, but in none was the sale-deed registered, although in many of them registration was compulsory by law. In the present case according to the District Judge documentary evidence regarding 32 sales and 49 mortgages and gifts was put forward.

(2) 50 P. R. 1889.

NANDU C. PUNJAB SINGH.

The documents on the record relate to 27 sales, 5 mortgages with possession, 36 mortgages without possession, 5 gifts and 2 agreements regarding rights in such property. The District Judge thought that in the present case the evidence could not be said to be stronger than that under consideration in the cases of 1889.

Of the sales now under consideration 12 have been registered, and there is no case in which registration was not obtained where it was compulsory.

Though there may be some Jat non-proprietors in the village, the main proprietary body is admittedly Jat and it has not been suggested that any of the sales which were effected in favour of Brahmans were of doubtful value because those Brahmans were members of the proprietary body. There is only one sale which is in favour of a Jat and there are only three sales effected by Jats. All the rest are sales effected by obvious menials such as Chamars, potters, barbers, blacksmiths and carpenters in favour of other persons of similar class or by persons who are presumably non-proprietors, and even residents of other villages.

Again, in the great majority of cases the sales refer not merely to a house or even materials but to the site itself. Indeed there are constant references to the fact of a courtyard being also sold; and in some cases the sales relate even to vacant sites. There is not a single case from which it could be inferred that the intention was to sell the materials only.

The question now in dispute came before the Courts in 1880 and it was then held by the Munsif, an Extra Assistant Commissioner, that the right of alienation by the non-proprietary body was fully established. The District Judge has stated that he is not prepared to attach much importance to this decision; partly because it is that of a Munsif and was not carried on appeal to a higher Court, and partly because he regarded it impossible that any number of instances sufficient to prove such a custom could have been put forward in that year. He has also referred to two later decisions as weakening the value of the decision of 1880.

I am, however, unable to see how the considered decision of 1880 is affected by the later cases in which the question of the right of alienation was not in issue. Both of them related to cases in which the proprietors were suing to eject trespassers who had taken possession of abandoned sites.

Nor do I think that the decision of 1880 has been appreciated at its true value. In that case a house had been in possession of a Brahman family for many years. The direct line becoming extinct, the house was sold to certain Jat proprietors by the collaterals of the last occupant. Other Jats obtained forcible possession and the vendees accordingly brought the suit.

Amongst other lines of defence it was pleaded that non-proprietors could not alienate their sites, and a local commission issued with the result that the Munsif, who wrote a clear and careful judgment, came to a confident finding that the right of alienation was fully established. He did not rely only on the instances cited but had before him the statements of three Lambardars to the effect that the non-proprietary body had a full right of alienating their sites; and he remarked in his judgment that ultimately this plea was given up by the then defendants. It is to be noted that one of the said Lambardars was the father of one of the plaintiffs in the present case.

This being so, it is perhaps not surprising that the defendants, who failed to establish their other pleas, should not have carried the case to a higher Court on the point of custom; and it appears to me that the judgment loses none of its force merely because it was not affirmed on appeal. There was, then, in 1880 a direct challenge to the rights of the proprietary body as a whole, and I do not think that it would be legitimate to assume that the numerous alienations which have since taken place were effected with the consent of the proprietors, tacit or otherwise. The traffic in open sites points directly to a contrary conclusion. It appears to me rather that at least since 1880 the rights of the non-proprietary body in matters of alienation have been recognised as valid and unassailable.

Although, moreover, the lower Courts have concurred in holding that Tuto Mazra is not a town or a qasba but is still a village, it is one of considerable size, and it has a bazār. No doubt, as the District Judge points out, it does not appear in the list of principal towns and villages in the Hoshiarpur District, as shown in a comparatively recent map prepared by a late Deputy Commissioner. But it is, nevertheless, the kind of place in which it might be reasonably expected that a custom of disposition by non-proprietary body would establish itself.

No doubt, again, there is no provision in the wajib-ul-arz of Tuto Mazara relating to the power of non-proprietary residents to make valid transfers of their houses by sale, but the same thing was true in the well-known case of Bilgah, a village of the neighbouring Jullundur District, Ramji Das v. Hamir Chand (3). In that case there was evidence to show that formerly a non-proprietary resident had no such power. There were 102 cases there in which transfers of their houses had been made by non-proprietary residents and in only eight of them had disputes arisen. The best that could be said of the decision of these disputes was that on the whole they were in favour of the right of the non-proprietary residents. It was remarked "that the village had much increased under British rule and is now more like a qasba than an ordinary agricultural village, and a practice has grown up, and has for a long time prevailed, for the non-proprietary residents to sell their houses without the consent of the proprietors of the sites; but it is usual in these cases for the vendor or vendee on the occasion of a sale to pay a small fee or nazar to the proprietor of the site in recognition of his proprietary right and to prevent disputes arising."

The present case is stronger in that there is no allegation that the non-proprietors pay such nazars; and there has only been one dispute in which the contesting proprietors conspicuously failed. Tuto Mazara is certainly much smaller than Bilgah but here as there a practice may well have grown up, and have for a long time prevailed, according to which the non-proprietors have acquired the right which they have so long asserted; and in my opinion the statement of the Lambar-dars in 1880 is an exceedingly strong proof that the said custom was already recognised in that year.

(3) 9 P. R. 1882.

Accordingly I hold that in the case of Tuto Mazara the right of the non-proprietors to sell their sites is established by the evidence on the record. I, therefore, accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Easements Act (I of 1882), s. 15—'Belongs to Government', meaning of—Servient tenement, transfer of, by Government to private individual, after 40 years' enjoyment of easement by dominant owner, effect of—Easement, acquisition of, against transferee.

The words 'belongs to Government' in the last paragraph of section 15 of the Easements Act refer not to the time of suit but to the time during which the easement is enjoyed. [p. 99, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, after 40 years' enjoyment of an easement as against Government, the latter transfers the property to a private party, the easement does not become absolute, but the person claiming it must make good his title by 20 years' enjoyment against the transferee after the transfer. [p. 99, col. 1.]

Semble.—Where the 60 years' period has nearly expired during Government ownership of the land and the land is then transferred by Government to a private party the acquisition of the easement might be held to be completed if the deficiency was made up by subsequent enjoyment against the transferee. [p. 99, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the District Judge of South Kanara in Appeal Suit No. 286 of 1915, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Udipi, in Original Suit No. 126 of 1914.

Mr. K. Y. Adiga, for Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Sundara Row, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The subject of dispute is an easement claimed as acquired by prescription. The servient tenement belonged to Government till 2 years before suit and was then assigned by Government to the defendant. At the time of assignment the easement had been exercised only for 30 or 40 years and had, therefore, not become absolute as against Government. Appellant contends that the transfer of ownership had the effect of rendering it absolute, inasmuch as the servient tenement became the property of a private individual against whom the previous 30 or 40 years' enjoyment would be sufficient under section 15 of the Easements Act.

The point is a novel one and is not covered by authority. But we think appellant's contention cannot be admitted. We think the words "belongs to Government" in the last paragraph of section 15 must refer, not to the time of suit, but to the time during which the easement is enjoyed. An easement can only be acquired by 20 years' enjoyment against a private person or by 60 years' enjoyment against Government. Here neither condition is satisfied. It may be that where the 60 years' period has nearly expired during Government ownership of the land and the land is then transferred by Government to a private party, the acquisition of the easement might be held to be completed when the deficiency was made up by subsequent enjoyment against the transferee, but subject to this the person claiming the easement must make good his title by 20 years' enjoyment against the transferee after the transfer.

If we adopt the view contended for by the appellant, we should have to hold that the transfer of the servient tenement by a private owner to Government would have the effect of destroying any easement right, which had been legitimately acquired by 20 years' enjoyment but which had not been enjoyed for the period of 60 years required as against Government.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1905), s. 19—Acknowledgment—Deposition made by defendant, whether acknowledgment.

A deposition made by the defendant in a previous case but not signed by him or by an agent duly authorised by him in that behalf does not fulfil the requirements of section 19 of the Limitation Act and does not, therefore, amount to a valid acknowledgment of liability within the meaning of that section. [p. 100, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Karnal at Ambala, dated the 17th June 1916.

Bakshi Tek Chand and Lala Sangam Lal, for the Appellant.

Lala Moti Sagor, R. S., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question for decision in this second appeal is whether the defendant respondent can be held to have made a valid acknowledgment of liability in respect of the promissory note sued upon by the plaintiff-appellant within the meaning of section 19 of the Limitation Act—

(a) in the deposition made by the defendant on the 30th June 1913 before Mr. LeRossignol, Divisional Judge of Ambala, in Appeal No. 264 of 1913, Munna Lal v. Narinjan Lal; and

(b) in the written statement filed by the defendant on the 2nd July 1912 in Original Suit No. 47 of 1912, Munna Lal v. Narinjan Lal.

As regards the deposition made by the present defendant before Mr. LeRossignol on the 30th June 1913, it is not signed by the defendant or by an agent duly authorised by him in this behalf; and the case of Allah Ditta v. Karam Chand (1) is authority for holding that the deposition in question does not fulfil the requirements of section 19 of the Limitation Act. In support of his contention that the defendant's deposition, though not signed by him, must be held to contain a valid acknowledgment of liability as required by section

19 aforesaid, the learned Pleader for the plaintiff-appellant has relied on Ram Ditta v. Ibrahim-ud-Din (2) and Gul Muhammad v. Akbar (3) and Jeba v. Ohaman (4). These rulings have no material bearing on the point before me, which is directly covered by the decisions in the case of Allah Ditta v. Karam Chand (1) above referred to. I hold, therefore, that the deposition of the defendant-respondent, dated the 30th June 1913, does not amount to a proper acknowledgment of liability by the defendant and cannot save limitation.

As regards the second contention, viz., that the pleas of the defendant in the case of Munna Lal v. Narinjar Lal contain a valid acknowledgment of liability, I have no hesitation in agreeing with the District Judge that this contention is wholly untenable. All that the second plea of the defendant, on which reliance is placed, means is that the defendant wanted the plaintiffs to produce the promissory note to which reference was made in the concluding sentence of their plaint. No specification of the promissory note is contained either in the plaint or in the pleas, so that it is impossible to say whether the promissory note referred to therein was the promissory note which is now sued upon. The mere fact that the defendant called upon the plaintiffs to produce the promissory note adverted to in the plaint is insufficient to establish an acknowledgment of liability in respect of the promissory note which is the foundation of the present claim.

For these reasons I maintain the judgment and decree of the District Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

JHARI SINGH—RESPONDENT.

Appeal—Decree for possession and remand for ascertainment of mesne profits—Court-fee payable on appeal.

Plaintiff's suit for possession and mesne profits was dismissed by the first Court. On appeal, the lower Appellate Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to possession and sent back the case to the first Court for ascertainment of mesne profits and for passing a decree:

Held, (1) that the lower Appellate Court in fact reversed the decree of the first Court and should have passed a decree for possession in favour of the plaintiff and sent the case to the first Court for enquiry as to mesne profits;

(2) that the order of the lower Appellate Court must be considered as a decree in favour of the plaintiff and the defendant's appeal against it must be considered as an appeal against an appellate decree and must bear Court-fee accordingly.

Appeal from a decision of the Additional District Judge, Patna, dated the 25th January 1916, setting aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Patna, dated the 12th December 1914.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal was filed as an appeal from an order of remand. Order XLIII, rule 1 (v) is referred to. The respondents object that the appeal is not an appeal from an order of remand but from an appellate decree and must bear Court-fee accordingly. On looking into the record we find the first Court dismissed the suit on various grounds. The plaintiff appealed and the District Judge held that plaintiff was entitled to the land which he claimed, that the suit was within limitation and that, therefore, he was entitled to get possession, and he concluded his order in these words:—

"The case must go back to the lower Court for determining whether the plaintiff is entitled to mesne profits and if so what, and whether the plaintiff has any cause of action against defendant No. 6. After determining these remaining issues the lower Court will pass a decree accordingly. The costs of the appeal are to be paid by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2."

It is quite clear that the District Judge reversed the decree of the first Court and should have passed a decree for possession in favour of the plaintiff and sent the case to the Court below for enquiry as to mesne profits. We must consider this as a decree for possession in favour of the plaintiff, and the defendants' appeal against it must be considered as an appeal against an appellate decree. The appeal has been filed on a two rupee Court-fee stamp. The Court-fee paid is obviously deficient. Let the record be sent into the office at once in order that a report may be made as to the amount of Court-fee payable on the appeal. Let the case be entered on the list for to-morrow and if the Court-fee is paid it will be heard.

The language of section 10 of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act is wide enough to include every mortgage which contains a stipulation as to conditional sale, and it is absolutely immaterial whether the mortgagor is or is not a member of an agricultural tribe. [p. 101, col. 2.]

A point of law, which is patent upon the record but which is not raised either in the lower Courts or in the Chief Court, can be given effect to by the Chief Court suo motu in second appeal. [p. 101, col. 2.]

The mere fact that the rate of interest stipulated for in a mortgage deed is excessive is no ground for relief, unless it is shown that the lender was in a position to dominate the will of the borrower. [p. 102, col. 1.]

A mortgage-deed provided that the principal money together with interest at a certain rate shall be paid within one year, and that on default the transaction shall be deemed to be a sale. It was further stipulated that the interest shall be payable from year to year, and that in the event of non-payment every year the debtor shall be liable to pay compound interest. The mortgagor was also prohibited from transferring the property until redemption:

Held, (1) that the covenant as to the payment of interest from year to year and as to the liability of the debtor to pay compound interest showed that the parties contemplated that interest should be payable after the expiry of the period fixed for redemption; [p. 102, col. 1.]

(2) that the mortgagor's liability to pay interest having been established, there was no equitable reason why he should get the property without discharging his obligation, i. e., the mortgagor must pay the interest before redemption. [p. 102, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hissar, dated the 22nd August 1916.

Mr. Nanik Chand, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for the redemption of a mortgage by way of conditional sale executed on the 6th July 1901 by one Jamal Din, Sheikh of the Hissar District, in favour of Allah Dia, Kunjra of the same District. There was a good deal of discussion in the lower Courts as to the regularity of the foreclosure proceedings and as to the validity of the tender or deposit alleged to have been made by the mortgagor before the expiry of the year of grace. The learned Counsel on both sides wanted to argue the same points before me, but I drew their attention to section 10 of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, which provides that in any mortgage of land made after the commencement of the Act any condition which is intended to operate by way of conditional sale shall be null and void. It is clear that the Act came into force on the 8th June 1901 before the date of the mortgage in question, and that the circumstance that the mortgagor was not a member of an agricultural tribe does not make any difference so far as the operation of the section is concerned. The language of the enactment is wide enough to include every mortgage which contains a stipulation as to conditional sale, and it is absolutely immaterial whether the mortgagor is or is not a member of an agricultural tribe. It is true that this point was not raised either in the Courts below or by the learned Counsel in this Court, but it is patent upon the record and I am bound to give effect to the law which, I find, is clearly applicable to the case.

Upon this finding the defendant cannot claim to be the owner of the property, and the only matter for determination is whether he is entitled to interest after the date fixed for redemption and whether the interest is a charge upon the property. The determination of the question must depend upon the terms of the deed, which must be construed in a reasonable manner and with due regard to the ordinary expectations of persons entering into a transaction of this character. Now, the instrument provides that the principal money together with interest at Rs. 1-9-0 per cent. per mensem shall be paid within one year, and that on default the transaction shall be deemed to be a sale. It is further stipulated that the interest shall be payable from year to year, and in the event of non-payment every year the debtor shall be liable to pay compound interest. Lastly there is again a clause repeating the stipulation as to conditional sale on failure to redeem the property. Now, there can be no manner of doubt that the covenant as to the payment of interest from year to year and as to the liability of the debtor to pay compound interest shows that the parties contemplated that interest should be payable after the expiry of the period fixed for redemption. Indeed, any other construction would render the above covenant absolutely unnecessary, and we cannot possibly assume that the parties intended to insert in the document a clause which was never to come into operation.

As regards the question whether the interest and compound interest should be paid to the mortgagee before redeeming the land, it must be remembered that it is not the mortgagee who seeks the assistance of the Court but that the suit has been instituted on behalf of the debtor, and if his liability to pay interest has been established, there is no equitable reason why he should get the property without discharging his obligation. It is to be observed that the mortgagor transferred his rights to the respondents who have purchased the litigation with their eyes open and are consequently not entitled to any indulgence whatsoever. It appears that the mortgagee asserted his right to get interest according to the stipulated rate before surrendering the property, and it was never alleged in the pleadings that the interest was not a charge upon the property. Indeed, certain applications were made during the pendency of the suit for amending or adding to the issues, but it was not until the final arguments in the case that the matter in question was raised and the liability was denied. I have carefully examined the language of the document including the term prohibiting the borrower from transferring the property until redemption, and come to the conclusion that it was never intended that the interest should not constitute a charge upon the property and that the creditor's only remedy was to file a suit for the recovery thereof as it became due. This construction is in accordance with the principle enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mathura Das v. Raja Narindar Bahadur (1) and adopted by this Court in Mota Singh v. Bishen Singh (2).

The amount of interest has no doubt become a large sum, but the stipulated rate cannot be regarded as exorbitant. Further, undue influence was neither alleged nor proved, and it has been held that the mere fact that the rate of interest is excessive is no ground for relief unless it is shown that the lender was in a position to dominate the will of the borrower. In the absence of any proof to that effect I must hold that the parties are bound by the contract, and that the plaintiffs must pay the amount found due upon the strength of the deed. No objection has been taken before me to the calculations made by the Court of first instance, and I accordingly accept the appeal and setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court restore that of the Court of first instance. I direct the parties to bear their own costs in all the Courts.

100, 101—Dispossession from immovable property—Application for restoration of possession, dismissal of, for applicant's failure to produce evidence—Order, whether under r. 101—Suit, regular, brought more than one year after date of order, whether barred—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 11 (a), applicability of.

The defendants obtained possession of the fields in suit in execution of a decree for foreclosure. Plaintiff's predecessors applied to the executing Court complaining of their dispossession by the defendants and asking to be restored to possession. The application was dismissed as applicants failed to produce or summon witnesses. More than one year after they instituted a regular suit for possession:

Held, that no order had been passed under Order XXI, rule 101, of the Civil Procedure Code which would be conclusive in the absence of a suit instituted within the period allowed by Article 11 (a) of the Limitation Act. [p. 105, col. 1.]

However short and summary the investigation may be, an order under rule 101 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code must be based upon the merits of the application, that is, an opinion on such facts as are before the Court as to whether the applicant was in possession or not. A mere dismissal in default or for non-prosecution is not an order under rule 101. [p. 104, col. 1.]

The test as to whether an order has properly been passed under rule 101, Order XXI, is whether there was an investigation and the order was passed as the result of the investigation. [p. 104, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the Court of the District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, dated the 25th of June 1914, in Civil Appeal No. 28 of 1914.

Mr. A. C. Roy, for the Appellant.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant filed a suit upon two alternative causes of action in the Court of the Munsif. The Munsif, being of opinion that the trial of the two causes of action would be inconvenient, called upon the plaintiff to elect between the two. The plaintiff elected to sue for possession of certain fields, though he has purchased from two brothers Sadhu and Shanker, of which the defendant obtained possession in execution of a decree for foreclosure against the third brother Bhiwaji. The plaintiff's predecessors Shanker and Sadhu had filed two separate applications under Order XXI, rule 100, complaining to the executing Court of their dispossession by the defendant. Both the applications were apparently tried together. The order sheet of the 26th January 1911 contains the following entry. "Appt. by Mr. Godbole. Non-appt. abs. by Mr. Deshpande. Appt. has again failed to produce or summon witnesses. Appt. dismissed. Costs on Appt." There is no other order in the body of the proceedings. More than one year after the dismissal of the applications the present suit for possession has been instituted. The defence was that the suit is barred by Article 11 (i) of the Limitation Act, 1908.

There are some remarks in the judgment of the District Judge adverse to the plaintiff-appellant on the merits of the alternative case which has not been tried. These must be treated as obiter.

The only point for decision is whether the suit is barred by limitation. The answer to it depends upon whether the order above mentioned was an order under Order XXI, rule 101.

The appellant relies upon Sarat Chandra Bisu v. Tarini Prasad Pal Chowdhry (1), Kallar Singh v. Toril Mahton (2), and Kunj Behari Lal v. Kandh Prashad Narain Singh (3).

The respondent relies upon Georno Dass Roy v. Sona Monee Dossia (4), Sadut Ali v. Ram Dhone Misser (5) and Rahim Bux v. Abdul Kader (6).

I may at once say that I am unable to distinguish the facts of the present case from those in Rahim Bux v. Abdul Kader (6), but the correctness of that decision has been doubted by Mookerjee, J., in Kunj Behari Lal v. Kandh Prashad Narain Singh (3) if not also by Maclean, C. J., in Sarat Chandra Bisu v. Tarini Prasad Pal Chowdhry (1). The report in the other case does not set out the terms of the order held to be conclusive.

The decisions have been in the past conflicting, but we must now endeavour to apply the law, as laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sardhari Lal v. Ambika Pershad (7). At page 525 Lord Hobhouse says:—"The other reason assigned is that section 280 does not contemplate that any order shall be made until after an investigation which is directed by section 278. The answer to that is that in the first place we do not know what took place before the Subordinate Judge who made this order. It may have been that the parties who were before him agreed so far upon facts that he was enabled to deliver his opinion offhand. But besides that, the Code does not prescribe the extent to which the investigation should go; and though in some cases it may be very proper that there should be as full an investigation as if a suit were instituted for the very purpose of trying the question, in other cases it may also be the most prudent and proper course to deliver an opinion on such facts as are before the Subordinate Judge at the time, leaving the aggrieved party to bring the suit which the law allows him." It is clear that, however short and summary the investigation may be, the order must be based upon merits of the application, that is, to quote the words of their Lordships: "An opinion on such facts as are before the Court." The Court under Order XXI, rule 101, must be satisfied as to whether the applicant was in possession or not. A mere dismissal in default or for non-prosecution is not such an order.

It is urged by Dr. Gour that section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code makes Order XVII applicable to proceedings instituted upon an objection to an attachment or other claims made by or against third parties in execution proceedings. The learned Counsel suggests that under Order XVII, rules 2 and 3, a Court is bound, unless it adjourns the hearing, to dismiss an application if the applicant fails to appear and to decide on the merits if the applicant appears but fails to produce evidence. It was argued that as the Court did not adjourn the hearing it must be deemed to have passed an order on the merits of the application. Two of the Calcutta cases cited for the appellant were sought to be distinguished on the ground that the applicants in those cases were not present, and the third on the ground that the applicant though present asked for permission to withdraw.

I cannot accept the argument as sound. The law directs an investigation and not a trial of the objection. The procedure laid down for suits cannot be properly applied in every respect to such investigations. In Sreemunto Hajrah v. Syud Tajooddeen (8) it was held that an order under section 246 of the Code of 1859 can be passed in the absence of the claimant. In Kunj Behari Lal v. Kandh Prashad Narain Singh (3) Mookerjee, J., says:—"It does not follow, however, that merely because the claimant does not advance evidence or is absent, there are no materials before the Court, to enable it to enquire into the matter. If the Court does enquire into it and dismisses the application, the order must be taken to have been made upon investigation." From this, it follows that, if the Court does not enquire into the matter, the order is not conclusive.

The view suggested by the learned Counsel for the respondent would lead to a very anomalous result. It would be open to a claimant to avoid the adverse result of an investigation when complete by absenting himself on the day fixed for the passing of the order. If a plaintiff is absent and the defendant is present, there is a statutory bar to the institution of a fresh suit for the same cause of action (Order IX, rule 9). Apparently this bar will not apply to such an investigation.

Under section 148 of the Code of 1859 the Court was bound to decide a suit on the record if there was a failure to produce evidence, but this has been changed since 1877. Order XVII, rule 3, makes it optional with the Court to decide the suit on merits in such a case. I need not decide whether the section does not impliedly give the Court power to dismiss a suit for non-prosecution. But the cases recognise that the order on the merits need not be passed if there are in the opinion of the Court no materials for an investigation.

The Calcutta cases do not proceed upon the ground suggested, viz., whether the applicant was present or not. They lay down the test to be whether there was an investigation and the order passed as the result of the investigation.

Applying then the law to the facts of this case, I have to see whether there has been an adjudication on the merits. I can find no trace of any such adjudication. The Judge has not even adverted to the question of burden of proof having regard to the pleadings of the parties, nor has he "delivered an opinion on such facts as were before the Court at the time."

The hasty and abbreviated form in which the order-sheet has been written up does not indicate anything like a judicial determination of the issues about which the Judge had to be satisfied before passing an order. On the contrary it suggests a disposal of the case otherwise than by a decision on the merits. The dismissal should be regarded, in my opinion, as a dismissal for non-prosecution, as was done in Kallar Singh v. Toril Mahton (2).

I hold that there was no order passed under Order XXI, rule 101, which would be conclusive, in the absence of a suit instituted within the period allowed by Article 11 (a) of the Limitation Act. The result is the appeal succeeds, and the decree of the lower Appellate Court is reversed, and the appeal is remanded to the Court for a fresh decision on the merits. The appellant will get a certificate for refund of Court-fees. Other costs will follow the result.

Case remanded.

Landlord and tenant—Occupancy tenancy in Punjab, nature of—Forfeiture—Denial of landlord's title, effect of.

The occupancy tenant of the Punjab is more than a mere permanent tenant; he is an individual who in many cases should have been the landlord, and he enjoys a permanent tenancy subject to certain conditions, at a concession rent. [p. 105, col. 2; p. 106, col. 1.]

The English rule of forfeiture on denial of the landlord's title is applied in the Punjab in the case of ordinary tenancies and even in the case of permanent tenancies on a rack rent and when the denial of the landlord's title admits of no other remedy, but the rule is inapplicable in the case of an occupancy tenancy. Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 2nd June 1916.

Mr. Zia-ud-Din, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In Appeals Nos. 2279—2281 the facts are the same.

The plaintiffs, asserting that they were landlords and defendants occupancy tenants, sued in the Revenue Courts for enhancement of rent and were met with the defence that the defendants were of higher status than occupancy tenants, were in fact full owners.

The Revenue Court referred the plaintiffs to a civil suit and the plaintiffs, relying on the denial of the defendants' occupancy status, sued for their ejection on the ground that they are trespassers.

The first Court found that the defendants had only occupancy right and no proprietary status, (indeed the defendants did not insist in the Civil Court on proprietary status alone) and very rightly gave the plaintiffs a declaratory decree, but the District Judge on appeal decreed the defendants' ejection on the ground that inconsistent pleas could not be permitted, and he referred to Shashi Bhusan Mandal v. Ram Nebak Mandal (1). In the face of plaintiffs' admission he held defendants to be mere trespassers.

In support of the decree of the lower Appellate Court respondents' learned Counsel has referred to the following authorities:—Muhammad Badar Khan v. Chiragh Shah (2), Bhani v. Bhag Mal (3), Sutyabhama Dasee v. Krishna Chunder Chatterjee (4), Mozhuruddin v. Gobind Chunder Nardi (5), Shumsher Ali v. Doya Bibi (6), Jalal Uin v. Ramzan (7), *Khatir Mistri v. is an individual who in many cases should have been the landlord and he enjoys a permanent tenancy subject to certain conditions, at a concession rent.

The Transfer of Property Act does not apply to this Province and there is no statutory law enjoining forfeiture in cases of this kind. No doubt the English rule of forfeiture is applied in this Province in the case of ordinary tenancies and (even in the case of permanent tenancies on a rack rent and when the denial of the landlord's right admits of no other remedy), but in the case of an ordinary tenancy, the forfeiture involves no loss to the tenant but the loss of notice.

The present case, however, involves much more loss to the tenants than the forfeiture of the right to notice and must be decided in accordance with equity and good conscience.

The action of the defendants was, of course, one of sheer folly, but they appear to have been the victims of worthless legal advice and I note that in the first Court they admitted before judgment that they had only an occupancy status.

In the circumstances the first Court's decree declaring the status of parties was a very proper decree and accepting the appeal I restore that decree, but defendants must pay all costs throughout.

Shriram Rupram v. Madangopal Gowardhan, 30 C. 65, 5 Bom. L. R. 483; 8 C. W. N. 25, distinguished.

Appeal from the decree of the Court of the District Judge, Chhindwara, dated the 17th February 1917, in Appeal No. 11 of 1917.

FACTS of the case will appear from the following extract from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

"This is a suit on a mortgage executed by the father of the defendant No. 1 in favour of the adoptive father of plaintiff. The only contesting defendant is No. 4, who is in possession of the mortgaged property having purchased it in 1910 at a Court-sale. The only point of contest is as to the liability of defendants for interest and costs. Defendant No. 4 alleged that he came to know of the existence of the mortgage after he had purchased the property. Accordingly on the 14th July 1910, he sent a notice by registered post to the mortgagees, Sewaram, asking for an account and expressing his intention of redeeming the mortgage. On the 5th September 1910, Sewaram replied by post-card which has been filed in original (Exhibit 4 D-2). The reply was to the effect that defendant No. 4 must pay the amount due under the mortgage either by money order or personally, otherwise he will have to pay the interest till realization. The amount due under the mortgage was not stated but it was mentioned that the mortgage was registered. Defendant No. 4 alleges that he sent a further notice to Sewaram on the 7th September 1910. He filed a postal receipt which shows that he did send a registered letter to Sewaram on that date (Exhibit 4 D-4). He has also filed what he states is a copy of the notice (Exhibit 4 D-5). This alleged notice again calls for an account of the mortgage and says that in the absence of such account defendant would not be liable for costs of a suit when brought or for interest from the date of the first notice. A few weeks after sending this notice, as no reply had been received, defendant No. 4 alleges that he sent his brother Asaram, since deceased, to Sewaram's shop with Rs. 100 to pay off the amount due on the mortgage, whatever it might be. Sewaram refused to accept payment. The plaintiff expressed ignorance of the alleged notices and tender of money. The Munsif found that the notices and tender of money had been duly proved, and that the defendants were not liable for costs of the suit or for interest after the date of tender of the money. He further found that if tender were held to be not proved, defendant should not be liable for interest after the date of the second notice. Upto which date he actually paid interest is not clear. He passed a preliminary decree declaring the amount due on mortgage to be Rs. 80-8-0. The plaintiff has appealed.

It appears to me that the alleged tender of the mortgage money to Sewaram must be regarded as a mere invention. The amount said to have been taken to Sewaram's shop exceeded the sum then due on the mortgage. As Sewaram had in his reply to defendant No. 4's first notice said that the money due should be sent by money order or brought to his shop, his refusal to accept it when offered would appear inexplicable. Defendant No. 4, as D. W. No. 2, admits that he was on bad terms with Sewaram, and that he did not know what amount was due on the mortgage and for all he knew nothing was due, yet he did not enquire particulars of the mortgage from the mortgagor or in the registration office. He merely sent Rs. 100 to Sewaram's shop and was apparently prepared to accept Sewaram's statement as to the amount due without farther enquiry. Again if he actually sent the money and the mortgagee refused to accept it, the natural course for him to take was to ascertain the amount due by enquiry in the registration office and from the mortgagor and deposit the sum in Court under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act. The story of the defendant No. 4 is thus so inherently improbable that the evidence adduced in support of it must be scrutinized with some care.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. B. Kinkhede, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are clearly given in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court and need not be here repeated.

It is urged that a presumption should have been made by the lower Appellate Court against the plaintiff on account of his not having produced the notice which his agent, as D. W. No. 1, admitted. The lower Appellate Court refers to this witness and says it finds no admission in his deposition that the alleged notice was received and I fully agree with it. Moreover, the defendant did not ask the plaintiff to produce the notice either before or after the deposition of D. W. No. 1, nor has he produced the plaintiff's postal acknowledgment. The alleged second notice not being proved we are only left with the first notice dated 14th July 1910 and the plaintiff's reply thereto Exhibit 4 D 2. It is urged that the plaintiff's reply is evasive, and amounts to a refusal to render accounts which deprives him of his rights to costs.

The first notice to which Exhibit 4 D 2 is a reply is not on the record and from the reply Exhibit 4 D 2 all that can be gathered regarding the contents of the notice is that it told the plaintiff that the defendant No. 4 had purchased Ithu Manher's house in auction following a simple money-decree. There is no ground for holding that the notice did not ask for an account. As a matter of fact defendant No. 4 seems really to have relied upon the 2nd notice for proof of his demand of an account. No misconduct thus appears to have been proved.

Lastly it is said that no actual offer of money was necessary to constitute a tender but it was sufficient that the defendant No. 4 showed his readiness and willingness to pay, and reliance is placed upon Shriram Rupram v. Madanogopal Gowardhan (1). This was a decision with reference to section 51 of the Indian Contract Act, which has no application to the present case. A mere readiness and willingness to pay, not communicated to the creditor, and without the accompanying circumstance of the debtor being in a position to pay immediately if the offer was accepted, does not amount to a valid tender.

There is, however, no plea that the appellant expressed his readiness and willingness to pay, apart from the alleged tender which has been found not proved.

Civil Procedure Code (Act I of 1908), s. 73—Rateable distribution—Sale-proceeds of moveables realised by Nazir, whether assets received by Court.

Moveables belonging to a judgment-debtor were sold by auction by the Civil Nazir on different dates, and on each of these dates the Nazir drew up a list of the goods sold and of the prices realised showing the total receipts for each date separately:

Held, that the sale-proceeds realised on each date became assets received by the Court within the meaning of section 73 of the Civil Procedure Code, so that an application for rateable distribution could take effect only in respect of the sale-proceeds realised after the date of such application. [p. 108, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 6th April 1916.

Lala Durga Das, for the Appellant.

Lala Bindrahan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are correctly stated by the Senior Subordinate Judge in his judgment, dated the 24th July 1915, and it is unnecessary to repeat them here. The District Judge has confused the two firms Prag Das-Mangal Sain of Delhi and Surjan Singh-Budh Singh of Amritsar, and has in several places in his judgment mentioned the name of the former in place of the latter firm. The suit out of which the present appeal has arisen was brought by the firm of Prag Das-Mangal Sain and not by that of Surjan Singh-Budh Singh, as has been erroneously stated by the District Judge; the Senior Subordinate Judge gave a decree to the plaintiff firm, and an appeal from that decree was preferred to the District Judge, not by Prag Das-Mangal Sain, but by Surjan Singh-Budh Singh. The confusion between the names of the two firms and the wrong statement of some of the facts of the case by the District Judge has not, however, affected the decision of the case on the merits, as the District Judge has concurred with the Senior Subordinate Judge in holding that on the 5th December 1914, when the plaintiff firm Prag Das-Mangal Sain made an application for execution in the Court of the District Judge, Ludhiana, the sale-proceeds of the property of the judgment-debtors (the firm of Atma Ram-Ram Kishan) were not "assets" that had been "received" by the Court within the meaning of section 73, Civil Procedure Code.

The sole question for decision in this appeal is whether the view of the Courts below on this point is correct. A reference to the execution record shows that "moveables" belonging to the judgment-debtors were sold by auction by the Civil Nazir on different dates from the 13th November to 1st December 1914 or, to be more precise, the auction-sales were held on the 13th, 14th, 16th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 23rd and 30th November and on the 1st December, and on each of these dates the Civil Nazir drew up a list of the goods sold and of the prices realised showing the total receipts for each date separately. Now, it is quite clear that since the property sold consisted exclusively of "moveables," which were sold separately on each of the dates mentioned above and the price realised for each lot was received and entered separately in the lists prepared by the Civil Nazir on each date, the total receipts realised at the auction sales of the 13th November to 1st December 1914 and before the 5th December 1914, on which date the firm of Prag Das-Mangal Sain made their application for execution in the Court of the District Judge, Ludhiana, were "assets held by the Court" within the meaning of section 73, Civil Procedure Code. The plaintiff firm is only entitled to a rateable distribution of the assets of the judgment-debtors, if such assets were received by the Court after the said plaintiff firm had applied for execution of its decree. The District Judge has held, and held correctly, that the assets in the hands of the Civil Nazir must be regarded as assets held by the Court, for the simple reason that the Civil Nazir was in possession of the assets as an officer of the Court and not on his own account; and upon that view of the case, there can be no question that the total receipts realised by the Nazir before 5th December 1914 were assets to the rateable distribution of which the plaintiff firm can lay no claim Ramanathan Chettiar v. Subramania Sastrial (1) and Maharaja of Burdwan v. Apruba Krishna Roy (2), which are relied upon by the Pleader for the plaintiff firm, were cases in which the property sold in the Court-auction was "immoveable property," which, for reasons given in the judgments in those cases, is governed by a different set of considerations from those that would govern moveable property, consisting of shop goods, etc., that was sold in the present case.

I, therefore, hold that the plaintiff firm is not entitled to claim rateable distribution under section 73, Civil Procedure Code, in respect of the sale-proceeds which were in the hands of the Civil Nazir before the 5th December 1914. A reference to the lists prepared by the Civil Nazir from the 13th November to 1st December 1914 shows that on the latter date he had realised the whole of the sale moneys except a sum of Rs. 150; and it follows that the plaintiff firm has a right to a pro rata share in that amount only. I accordingly accept this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the District Judge and in lieu thereof give the plaintiff firm a decree for a pro rata share of Rs. 150. The exact amount due to the plaintiff firm will be calculated in execution. The defendant firm is entitled to costs throughout as it never objected to the plaintiff firm claiming a rateable distribution in regard to the sum of Rs. 150.

Appeal accepted.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The question before us is in its most general form, whether the plaintiff, a Court-sale purchaser, whose suit for possession of the property put up for sale has failed, is entitled to recover the purchase money by suit or whether, as the lower Appellate Court held, he can do so only by petition under Order XXI, rule 93, of the Civil Procedure Code.

Such a right of suit, in cases to which the present Code can be applied without reservation, was dismissed in Mohideen Ibrahim v. Mahamed Meerai (1), one learned Judge being unwilling to negative it, though expressing no decided opinion, and the other negating it directly, because the purchaser had no longer a substantive right to recover, but only a statutory right to do so by application in special circumstances; and the latter opinion was confirmed obiter in Parvathi Ammal v. Govindasmi Pillai (2). The contrary view, however, has been taken in Rustomji v. Vinayak Gangadhar Bhat (3), the purchaser's right of suit being based on the existence of a contractual relation between him and the decree-holder and of a warranty by the latter of some saleable interest to be implied from the provisions of the Code. With all respect I cannot follow the reasoning. Dorab Ally Khan v. Khajah Moheenoodeen (4) and Sundara Gopalan v. Venkatavarada Ayyangar (5) are referred to in the judgment, but they show that, in the absence of fraud (and none was referred to there or has been in the present case), the doctrine of warranty of title cannot be applied to Court sales or be the basis of proceedings except those which the processual law permits; and, if there is no warranty between the decree-holder and purchaser, there was no other basis for a contractual relation between them, since the former had no ownership of the property sold. In a Court sale nothing passes beyond the right, title and interest of the debtor, and, as there is no guarantee that it exists or is of any particular extent, the purchaser would have no cause of action apart from the Statute. The former Code accordingly conferred on him a special right, which the present Code has restricted and for the enforcement of which it provides special procedure. Taking this view I am against the plaintiff's general contention.

The plaintiff, however, has relied mainly on the special circumstances of his case, that he made his purchase and brought his suit for possession, impleading the defendant when his right was regulated by sections 313 and 315 of the Code then in force. In that suit he asked for delivery of the suit land and profits. It was decided against him in 1909, after the provisions referred to had been superseded by Order XXI, rule 93, under which, as I have held, his right is only to apply to the Court for refund. It is not disputed that he was originally entitled to sue. The argument for consideration is only that the change in the law did not deprive him of his right to do so.

The effect of the change in the law is to be ascertained, in the absence of special provision, in the new enactment (and section 154 of the present Code preserves only existing rights of appeal—not other remedies), by reference to section 6 (c) and (e), Act X of 1897, its material portion being that a repeal “shall not (c) affect any right or privilege acquired or accrued under the enactment repealed or (e) affect any legal proceeding or remedy in respect of such right or privilege and any such legal proceeding or remedy may be instituted, continued or enforced as if the repealing Act had not been passed."

The first question then is whether the plaintiff's right to re-payment of his purchase-money had accrued to him before the change in the law. Under the former law, section 315 of the former Code, he would have been entitled to receive back the money, when the sale was set aside under section 312 or 313, the contingency we are concerned with.

"When it was found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property and the purchaser (plaintiff) was, for that reason, deprived of it."

Was it so found and was the plaintiff deprived as the defendant contends, only when the former's suit failed in 1909, after the present Code came into force? In that event his right had not accrued and his remedy was affected, or did the right accrue earlier before his suit was filed in 1907?

To support the former view the defendant has relied on the decision in Nalakanta v. Imamsahib (6) and Mohideen Ibrahim v. Mahamed Meera Levvai (1), the latter approved in Siddheswari Prasad Narain Singh v. Mayanand Gir (7), in which it was held that the plaintiff's cause of action for the claim, such as that before us, accrues, when there has been a suit against the person in possession, on its determination against him. But though such determination may be part of plaintiff's cause of action in the sense in which the term is used in Read v. Brown (8) and subsequent Indian cases, it does not follow that it is necessary to the accrual of his 'right', the term used in the enactment under consideration. If it did, it would follow further that his right was dependent on and arose only on his becoming conscious of it in consequence of his discovery that the debtor had no saleable interest and of his deprivation of the property by reason thereof, although the title opposed to his own must have existed at the date of his purchase and could not have been affected by any proceedings subsequent to it. It is possible to avoid this anomaly only by holding that his 'right' dates from his purchase and is primarily to the property and secondarily in the alternative and contingently to re-payment, the latter branch of it becoming enforceable only on failure in respect of the former. If this view is correct, the plaintiff's right had accrued before the repeal of section 315 of the former Code. I refer next to authority for the position that such an alternative and contingent right will be preserved under section 6 (c).

In Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving (9) the question was to the effect on a right of appeal direct to the Privy Council of a change in the law pending the trial of an action, which would have interposed an appeal to the Local High Court. That right of appeal existed at the date of the change in the law, in the sense that it had been conferred by law on every suitor; it was suspended and contingent in the sense that it would be exerciseable only when and if the decision were given against him. It was held not only that the right was not one merely of procedure, but also that it had vested in the suitor, before the change took place. This case was followed in Kalinga Hebbara v. Narasima Hebbara (10) and Salimamma v. Valli Hussanabha Beari (11) with reference to the right of appeal, and in Mudurai Pillai v. Muthu Chetty (12) with reference to another consequential and contingent remedy. In Rajah of Pittapur v. Gani Venkat Subba Row (13) it was applied even more generally in a manner to which I return. On the other hand, Abbott v. Minister for Lands (14) was cited for the defendant, as deciding that a mere right to take advantage of the provisions of a repealed Statute is not a 'right accrued.' But the judgment runs:—

"The mere right (assuming it to be properly so called) existing in the members of the community or any class of them to take advantage of an enactment, without any act done by an individual towards availing himself of that right, cannot be properly deemed a 'right accrued' within the meaning of the enactment."

And the case can accordingly be distinguished on two grounds.

Firstly, if the doing of an act is necessary, the plaintiff before us had done one towards availing himself of his right, when he sued the person in possession. Secondly, the plaintiff's right differed essentially from the right (if it was properly so called) which the Judicial Committee was considering; for the latter was a mere option to take up land, enforceable against the Minister for the land only after it had been exercised by the making of an application with the necessary formalities and a specification of the land claimed, whilst the former was definite and enforceable from its origin. This case is, therefore, in no way opposed to the conclusion, which is otherwise adequately supported, that plaintiff's right, including the branch of it, which he is now enforcing, had accrued, before the former Code was repealed.

The conclusion has been reached on direct consideration of the law. But it can be supported also by reference to a rule of construction. Although the plaintiff was proceeding in a legal way towards recognition of his right to re-payment and could have been met by no objection, if the law had not changed, in terms the change made his further progress impossible; and in the absence of any specific provision or necessary implication the repealing Statute will, therefore, not be construed against him. His only course under the present Code would have been to move for the setting aside of the sale under Order XXI, rule 91, and Article 166, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act within 30 days of its confirmation and to apply for re-payment under Order XXI, rule 93, and Article 181 within 3 years from its being set aside. This course he could not take since his first application would have been out of time at the date of the repeal. A repealing enactment cannot impose an impossible condition on pain of forfeiture of a vested right or be applied to cases, in which its provisions cannot be obeyed, Gopeshwar Pal v. Jiban Chandra (15), and similarly it was held by a Full Bench of this Court in Rajah of Pittapur v. Gani Venkat Subba Row (13) that a new rule of limitation must be read subject to an implied exception in cases where its provisions would absolutely destroy the right of suit, which was in existence when that rule came into force. On this ground also the plaintiff is entitled to succeed.

Two other points have been referred to in argument. Firstly, the defendant contended in his written statement that the judgment-debtor should be made a party. This cannot be considered since it was not pressed at the trial. Secondly, the Sub-Judge awarded interest up to date of suit at 12 per cent., the rate claimed in the plaint. The interest at the usual Court rate is, however, all that plaintiff is entitled to in accordance with the authorities, Rodger v. Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris (16), Ayyavayyar v. Shastram Ayyar (17) and Arunachellam v. Arunachellam (18).

The result is that the Sub-Judge's decree is restored, subject to the modification that the plaintiff will be entitled to interest at 6 per cent. instead of 12 per cent. to date of that decree and subsequent interest at 6 per cent. on the amount so decreed. The parties will give and receive proportionate costs.

PHILLIPS, J.—I agree.

KANKU C. MATHRA DAS.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

CRIMINAL PETITION No. 1060 OF 1916.

August 9, 1916.

Present:—Mr. Justice Shah Din.Musammut KANKU—ACCUSED—

PETITIONER

MATHRA DAS AND OTHERS—COMPLAINANTS

—RESPONDENTS.

Punjab Municipal Act (III of 1911), ss. 152, 153—Brothel and house of public prostitute, distinction between—Notice, necessity of, to constitute offence—Summary trial—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 260.

No offence can be said to be committed under section 153 of the Punjab Municipal Act until the owner or tenant of the house summoned by the Magistrate fails to comply within five days with the Magistrate's order to discontinue the use of the house as a brothel, and as no offence can be said to be committed by the owner of a brothel at the time when the complaint is made to the Magistrate, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to hold a summary trial under section 260 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

In view of the distinction drawn by the Legislature itself in section 152 of the Punjab Municipal Act between a brothel and the house of a public prostitute, the latter does not become a brothel within the meaning of section 153 of the Municipal Act merely because the owner plies the trade of a prostitute therein.

Petition under sections 435 and 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Ambala, dated the 31st May 1916, affirming that of the Magistrate, 1st class, Simla, dated the 22nd May 1916, directing the petitioner to discontinue the use of her house as a brothel, under section 153, Municipal Act (III of 1911).

FACTS.—On 22nd May 1916, the learned Magistrate passed the following order in a summary trial register kept under section 260, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898:—

"It appears that accused uses house 23/4 as a brothel. That this house is by her own admission 200 feet only from a mosque. I accordingly direct her to discontinue such use."

Mr. Obbard, for the Petitioner.

The Government Advocate, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This revision and Criminal Revision No. 1061 of 1916 are connected and both will be disposed of by one order.

The learned Government Advocate admits that the first ground for revision in each case has force, and must prevail, viz., that the Magistrate erred in law in trying the case summarily, inasmuch as no offence can be said to be committed under section 153 of the Municipal Act until the owner or tenant of the house summoned by the Magistrate should fail to comply within five days with the Magistrate's order to discontinue the use of it as a brothel. It is clear that since no offence was committed by the petitioner in each case at the time when the complaint was made to the Magistrate, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to hold a summary trial under section 260, Criminal Procedure Code. The Magistrate's order was, therefore, bad in law and is hereby set aside.

Apart from the above flaw in the Magistrate's proceedings, it seems clear that in view of the distinction drawn by the Legislature itself in section 152 of the Municipal Act between a brothel and the house of a public prostitute, the petitioner's house in which she plied the trade of a prostitute was not a "brothel" within the meaning of section 153 of the Municipal Act [Emperor v. Versimal Bahagiomal (1)].

I accept both these revisions and set aside the Magistrate's order in each case.

Revision allowed.

summary for contempt—Advertisement for demonstration against Judge, whether contempt—Apology, effect of.

Per Peacock, C. J.—An advertisement published in a newspaper for a demonstration against a Judge for acts done in Court may be a contempt of Court as well as defamation, although it cannot be said that in every case a demonstration got up in order to obtain an expression of public opinion concerning the acts of a Judge would be a contempt. [p. 125, col. 1.]

If anonymous letters are sent to the press containing false statements, the press is responsible for them if the name of the author is not given up. [p. 144, col. 2.]

To say that a sentence is 'cruel' may be a contempt of Court, though it would be no contempt if the remark is merely that the sentence is a severe one. [p. 142, col. 2; p. 143, col. 1.]

Per Macpherson, J.—The High Court has power to proceed by way of contempt even when the contempt is not committed in Court or during the pendency of a suit. [p. 145, col. 2.]

Per Curiam.—The fact of his making an apology does not entitle the person charged with contempt of Court to his discharge as a matter of right. [p. 137, col. 1.]

Charges of contempt against the Printer and Publisher of the 'Englishman, Calcutta.'

Upon this case being called on—

Mr. Kennedy stated that he appeared for Mr. Banks, Printer of the Englishman, with Mr. Evans and Mr. Paul. There was one point in which a little difficulty had occurred with respect to the form in which the affidavit of Mr. Banks was to be drawn up. It was stated that the Court was sitting in its original jurisdiction, but it did not appear which jurisdiction, whether civil or criminal.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—The Court is sitting in its original civil jurisdiction, The matter is not on the Crown side of the Court.]

Mr. Kennedy stated he would then proceed to put in the affidavit of Mr. Banks.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—I suppose there is no doubt as to the signature of Mr. Banks to that document.]

I believe the affidavit has been sworn before an officer of the Court. I will read the affidavit.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—An office copy of Mr. Banks' declaration has been put in under the seal of the Court, but there is no evidence to show whose signature it is.]

The first paragraph of the affidavit removes all difficulty about that, wherein he states:—

"I am the printer and publisher of the 'Englishman.'"

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Very well; but there is one other matter which I wish to mention before going on to the affidavits. I want to see the subscription list which Mr. Clarke has been subpoenaed to produce. I do not wish to see the names of the persons who have subscribed, but I wish to see for what purpose the subscription was raised. If the gentlemen who subscribed preferred that their names should not be known, I have no wish to make them known, but I want to know whether they subscribed to that fund in order to assist Mr. Tayler, or whether it was with the view of denouncing the judgment of the Court.]

Mr. Kennedy stated that the subscription list had no particular heading stating for what purpose the subscription was being raised.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—I want to know whether they came in in pursuance to the advertisement or whether they were accompanied by letters stating the reason for which the money was sent.]

In many cases letters accompanied the subscription.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—If the gentlemen who have subscribed will come forward and acknowledge having done so, they may do so with perfect freedom so far as any proceedings against them are concerned. If they like to avow having subscribed, they may do so; if not, I have no wish to enquire into the matter.]

I have a copy of a list headed, 'List of subscribers to the Tayler fund who agree to their names being given up.' Application was made to the subscribers of the fund, and every one applied to consent to give up his name. I don't know whether there was any particular heading to the list when it was first started, but there are many gentlemen in Court who are prepared to state the circumstances under which they sent in their subscription.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—I do not wish to press for the names of those gentlemen, but if they like to give them up themselves they may do so.]

Captain Fenwick (Editor of the Englishman) is in this position. He is not justified in refusing to produce the list of subscribers which he has been required to produce by a subpoena of the

In the matter of BANKS AND FENWICK.

Court, and it could not be any breach of faith on his part, as it was originally intended to publish the names. After, however, the observations of your Lordships, it was considered that to publish their names would be to place them in a somewhat invidious position, and they were accordingly written to and requested to be allowed to give up their names, and to which all who have replied have consented. As I understand, it was not merely their rupees that these gentlemen were sending in, but an expression of the opinion.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—I propose to put in the "Englishman" newspaper of the 21st instant merely to show a report of what took place with regard to Mr. Tayler's case, and merely for the purpose of the proceedings. I do not propose to treat this as a contempt of Court, but merely as explanatory of other parts of the proceedings. There is another paper of April 16, which contains an article with reference to an article which has appeared in the "Pioneer." I do not wish to put this as forming part of the contempt, as I have already expressed in my judgment in Mr. Tayler's case my willingness to allow this to pass, and I will not now go back from what I before stated, and treat it as a contempt. I merely put this paper in for the purpose of showing, with reference to the subsequent articles, what was the object of those subsequent articles. The words: "We suspect that Sir Barnes, if he attempts to carry out his dictum too far, will raise a storm not easy to quell. There are many people who do not care for the grievances of Mr. Tayler, but who will not brook an encroachment upon their right of appeal to the press concerning the public acts of public men. A Judge's acts are no more exempt from public criticism than those of a Chairman of the Justices" were merely to be read as introductory to and explanatory of the other articles.]

I will read the affidavit of Mr. Banks in the first instance, and probably after reading it, your Lordships may be induced to take another course in the matter.

Mr. Kennedy, then read Mr. Banks' affidavit as follows:—

"In the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal.

(In the matter of Alexander Banks.)

I, Alexander Banks, of Hare Street, in Calcutta, Printer, make oath and say:—

First.—I am the printer and publisher of the "Englishman" newspaper.

Second.—That George Roe Fenwick is the Editor of the said newspaper, and without his orders and directions no articles are inserted therein.

Third.—That the said George Roe Fenwick has signified to me his intention to appear before this Hon'ble Court and admit that the articles and advertisements, referred to in the Rule nisi herein, were inserted in the said newspaper by his directions.

Fourth.—That I exercise no control whatever over the contents of the said newspaper.

Fifth.—That, although I read some of the said articles when handed to me for publication as aforesaid, I did not in any way consider their meaning or purport, but inserted the same simply on the direction of the said George Roe Fenwick, as is my habit.

Sixth.—That in inserting the said articles, notices and advertisements, I did so bona fide not actuated from any improper feeling or motives towards the Hon'ble The Chief Justice or any of the Judges of this Hon'ble Court, nor did I intend by such insertion in any way to excite contempt against the proceedings of this Hon'ble Court.

A. Banks.

Sworn this third day of May 1869 before me.

Commissioner."

Mr. Kennedy.—Captain Fenwick is now present in Court. Of course, if, in the strict principle of law, Mr. Banks has been guilty of contempt in what he has done, I do not put this forward as any ground for his discharge, but Captain Fenwick is in Court, ready to bear the brunt of what was in reality done by him, or by his order, and not leave it to others to bear.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Captain Fenwick, in doing that, has only done that which every honourable gentleman who fills an editor's chair would do, in not allowing a publisher of a paper to take the consequence of articles written and published by his orders, by not coming forward to avow the authorship. Sir Barnes went on to state that he was prepared to withdraw the Rule as against the printer, and treat Captain Fenwick as the person against whom the Rule was issued. The argument might go on, however, on the printer's Rule.]

Mr. Kennedy said that what he thought the Court might do, would be to make a fresh order returnable immediately in order that there might be no delay. Captain Fenwick was in Court and the case might be allowed to proceed as against him, but there would be this difficulty, that Captain Fenwick wished to explain some matters and had expected to have the opportunity of doing so as he had been called on a subpoena.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Captain Fenwick might put in an affidavit for any purpose he pleased, the arguments might be proceeded with and the affidavit put in at some future time.]

Mr. Kennedy remarked that, as he would probably have to occupy the Court for a long time, the affidavit could be sworn in the meantime. Captain Fenwick authorised him to say that he admitted having published the articles in question.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Then a new order for a Rule can be made out, similar to the one made in the case of Mr. Banks. (To Captain Fenwick) I believe I understand that you admit your responsibility.]

[Captain Fenwick.—Certainly, my Lord.]

Mr. Kennedy in proceeding to address the Court against the Rule spoke as follows:—This is a case in which I appear with very great pain and anxiety, because it is hardly possible to conduct it properly without appearing to be guilty of a thing—contempt of your Lordship—which would be the last I should wish.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—I shall, of course, understand all you say, Mr. Kennedy, as only said in the discharge of your duty as an Advocate.]

Thank you, my Lord; but at the same time I would wish it to be understood that in any remarks that may fall from me, I do not desire that they should appear to be addressed to the same Chief Justice as the Chief Justice of whom I speak.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—I think, Mr. Kennedy, that it is a pity to resort to any fiction in the case (a laugh).]

I shall be obliged, then, to criticise the judgment of the Chief Justice, I hope, without exceeding the limits of discretion. The first question is whether, whatever the former state of the law was with respect to contempts of Court or matters of defamation of Judges or their judgment, it now applies, or can be applicable, to your Lordships. I understand this Rule to be issued under the civil jurisdiction of the Court and yet it appears to me that a case of contempt of Court should be tried under the criminal jurisdiction.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—I am quite ready to admit that, if you please; it is quite indifferent and immaterial at which side of the Court the case is tried.]

I submit, my Lord, that you have only the power of committing a prisoner for contempt of Court under the criminal jurisdiction. In the case of Wellesley v. Duke of Beaufort (1), it is clearly shown that contempts of this class are criminal offences and are so dealt with by the Court. By this, it is quite clear that, by trying contempt under the criminal jurisdiction, your Lordships are only exercising jurisdiction under the Indian Penal Code, Act XLV of 1860. No Court can exercise jurisdiction with respect to contempt, except it is contempt by that Code. Cases, if they amount to infraction of that Code, must be tried and punished by that Code, as is mentioned in the 50th section of the Letters Patent:—"All persons brought for trial before the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, either in the exercise of its original jurisdiction or in the exercise of its jurisdiction as a Court of appeal, reference or revision, under the Indian Penal Code, charged with any offence, for which provision is made by Act XLV of 1860, called the Indian Penal Code, or by any Act amending or extending the said Act which may have been passed prior to the publication of these presents, shall be liable to punishment under the said Act or Acts and not otherwise."

I think, my Lord, this must be a misprint as to the word extended, which should be "excluded". Chapter 10 defines the offences which shall be deemed contempts of Court. As a general rule the heading is not part of an Act, but in this case it is different, inasmuch as the body of the chapter acknowledges and incorporates the different headings as in section 6—"Throughout this Code every definition of an offence, every penal provision, and every illustration of every such definition or penal provision, shall be understood subject to the exceptions contained in the chapter entitled 'general exceptions', though those exceptions are not repeated in such definition, penal provision or illustration." I think that this marks intention to include the headings or titles in legislation as part of the Act. Not the same is the case of the marginal notes, which are added afterwards, subsequently to the Act being passed. Then we find in that chapter certain definitions most important here. In section 21 we find that "public servants" include a Judge, and the whole of Chapter 10 is a code to guide the Court in breaches of duty to public servants, and provides for that class of contempt most generally dealt with by the Courts; that is, for the most part known in Chancery and Common Law. There it is stated that contempt consists in disobedience to the laws of the Court, obstruction of its business or interference with, or prejudice to, its decisions and judgments.

Those are the classes of acts, which are punishable as contempts under the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and none of these come up to, or in any way near, the matter in respect of which Mr. Fenwick is now charged. There is an additional provision in this matter in the 225th section of the Penal Code, which enacts as follows:—

"Whoever intentionally offers any insult or causes any interruption to any public servant, while such public servant is sitting in any stage of a judicial proceeding, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees, or with both."

And in the 499th section of the Code the following words occur:—

"Whoever, by words either spoken or intended to be read, or by signs or by visible representations, makes or publishes any imputation concerning any person, intending to harm, or knowing or having reason to believe that such imputation will harm, the reputation of such person, is said, except in the cases hereinafter accepted, to defame that person". Now, as far as I understand it, the accusation which is made against Captain Fenwick—the contempt of Court which he is now called upon to answer—is a contempt of having defamed a person, but there is an exception with respect to that class of defamations.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—You must not understand that we assent to all you are saying, Mr. Kennedy.]

No, my Lord, I don't assume assent from your Lordships' silence. I am grateful for that silence for the case is one of peculiar difficulty, and which might be rendered more so if I were to be interrupted.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Pray don't understand that because the Court is silent, it agrees with all you are saying.]

No, my Lord. I perfectly understand that.

Mr. Kennedy then went on to say that the second exception to the 499th section of the Indian Penal Code was as follows:—

"It is not defamation to express in good faith any opinion whatever respecting the conduct of a public servant in the discharge of his public functions, or respecting his character, so far as his character appears in that conduct, and no farther."

Now, what I submit is this, that a case having occurred, in which certain matter published amounted to defamation—and defamation of acts done in the capacity of a Judge—that defamation, being a defamation on the acts of a Judge, becomes of itself included in the exception which I have just read. It must be defamation within the terms of the Penal Code, and no defamation which was not punishable under the provisions of the Penal Code as defamation is punishable by this Court in any other way; for it is clearly laid down in the 2nd section of the Code, as well as by the 30th clause of the Charter, that

In the matter of BANKS AND FENWICK.

"every person shall be liable to punishment under this Code, and not otherwise, for every act or omission contrary to the provisions thereof, of which he shall be guilty within the said territories on or after the said 1st day of May, 1861."

It is clearly stated in the Penal Code what is punishable as defamation, and with regard to the exception to which I have referred, your Lordships are bound to read it as if the word "Judge" is substituted, for "public servant"; and nothing expressed in good faith on the public functions of a Judge could be punishable as defamation. It seems to me that it is impossible, without destroying the utility of the Penal Code—without making it a trap—to hold that the license of Legislature has been given to the Court, empowering it to say that though this charge against Captain Fenwick may not be tried in the ordinary course of law by an indictment for defamation, yet that it may be dealt with in an extraordinary way, and under a course which does not give him the ordinary protection of a Jury—the protection of the ordinary Tribunals—and a scale of ascending Tribunals, with an appeal from each, but leaves him wholly at the mercy of the person on whom the defamation has been uttered. I do not contend that any defamation which does not come within the 499th section, as explained and limited by the exception to which I have just referred, can be such an offence as to empower the Courts to deal with it either by its ordinary procedure or in an extraordinary way, by treating it as a contempt of Court. That explanation must be given by your Lordships to the language of the Legislature in its description of what it calls and deems to be contempt of a public servant—among whom are included Judges—and that of itself would limit the operation of the Court dealing with such contempts as would come within that part of the Statute, as offences punishable only as defamation under the ordinary provisions of law.

Therefore, my Lord, if jurisdiction can be exercised, it can only be exercised when the Court comes to the conclusion as to the expression. I mean when that expression is not in good faith. Even so I would submit that the power to punish summarily, in a case under the former law, for contempt has been taken away by the express language of the Legislature. Whether that jurisdiction ever existed or whether it be taken away, I contend that it was never imperative for the Court to exercise it, even in those worst of times when newspapers were considered as vermin, to be hunted down as pests, and marks for scorn; instead of, as they are now considered, members of society, important members to be protected instead of arraigned before a Tribunal, considered as the 4th estate of the realm. Even then it was a discretionary matter with the Court how to deal with libels which were likely to bring into contempt the proceedings or judgments of that Court. Your Lordship has recently delivered a judgment [William Tayler, In the matter of (2)] in respect of the same question. No doubt that any authority that could be produced from the proceedings of any English Court would not be unknown to your Lordship, yet no exercise of such a power is in that judgment shown to have occurred. I have also carefully searched the reports and text books, but am unable to find a single instance of a Court in England having exercised such a jurisdiction, by way of trying or punishing contempts of Court, which were merely defamatory libels on the Court or the Judges, when no proceedings were pending and which, therefore, could in no way prejudice or influence the Court in such proceedings. The observations with which your Lordship finds fault, were published by Captain Fenwick subsequent to the proceedings against Mr. Tayler. These proceedings were concluded on the 23rd April, Saturday, and, as I understand, your Lordship is not now proceeding against Captain Fenwick for those articles published on or before the 16th April. Even in those, I am sure, you do not attribute to Captain Fenwick the folly of supposing you weak or wicked enough to alter your judgment in the pending case for fear of an article in the newspaper.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Although it is not so material to the present portion of your argument, I want to call attention to the explanation in section 52. You must, I think, import that explanation of "good faith" into the construction of this exception—where it speaks of opinions in good faith, it must mean, in order to express an opinion in good faith the person who holds it must have taken care and attention in forming it.)

(2) 44 Ind. Cas. 930; 26 C. L. J. 345; 19 Cr. L. J. 402.

In the matter of BANKS AND FENWICK.

I think, my Lord, that if he truly holds the opinion he is justified in expressing it. Care and attention in expressing an opinion are different from the care and attention demanded in forming that opinion, and the words "good faith" are only connected with the expression.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—I understand you to say that a person may express an opinion in good faith, though care and attention have not been taken in forming that opinion.]

That is the only construction which can reasonably be given to the language. The power of proceeding by summary powers for contempt, even if vested in the Court, is a discretionary one. There are other courses, than the one now adopted, open for vindicating the integrity of the Courts and the honour of the Judges, and I submit that the discretion which is vested in your Lordships is not properly exercised by proceeding in a summary way for contempt of Court. The discretion, properly exercised by the Court, would be to fall back on the long list of precedents brought forward in the judgment in William Tayler's case (2) and if the dignity of the Court has been in any way brought into contempt, to direct an officer of the Court to file a criminal information. In every case in England which I have been able to discover since the earliest period of any reference respecting contempts of this class, that course has always been adopted. No doubt the Courts in England are vested with a summary power to treat certain cases of contempt, without which, indeed, it would be impossible for the ordinary course of justice to be proceeded with—without which no regularity could be observed—and to shield the officers of the Court in the execution of their duty. The power even went so far that where contemptuous words were used towards the Court, or the writ of the Court, at the time the writ was being served, punishment for contempt was inflicted; but from the earliest time down to the present, I am not aware of one single case where a person has been punished, as for a contempt of Court, for a libel referring not to a suit then pending, but subsequent to its termination. It is stated by Chief Justice Campbell in a well-known book—but I could hardly call it an authority, "Campbell's Lives of the Chief Justices, Vol. II, page 293, note", that "if a prosecution for a libel on Judges be necessary, the preferable course is to proceed by information or indictment so as to avoid placing them in the invidious situation of deciding when they may be supposed to be parties". He says, this is in reference to a judgment written but not delivered, in which Chief Justice Wilmet had laid down the existence of this power, but it would seem that this only states that there may be cases where it may be necessary to exercise this summary jurisdiction in order for the safety of the Courts.

Mr. Kennedy then referred to the case of the King v. Faulkner (3) and continued:—I do so merely to show that there has been, so far as the memory of the Courts at home reaches, no exercise of its jurisdiction in this manner. Baron Park, whose name stands as high as any who have ever worn the ermine in the Courts of Westminster, in the course of the argument in King v. Faulkner (3), was unable to refer to any case of it save that of Reg. v. Almon (4), but in that case of Reg. v. Almon (4) referred to there, no judgment was ever given, and in no case can it be shown that, when the Courts proceeded for contempt against a person subsequent to the termination of the proceedings, they did so summarily; but there are many such cases cited, and they have all been proceeded against by information.

I would submit that there is no analogy between this case and the cases where a person brought himself into contempt by direct communication, whether oral or written, with the Court, or an officer, as in the case of Mr. Lechmere Charlton's case (5). I submit there is a great difference between writing outside the Court and coming into the presence of the Court and insulting it, or using improper language, or being guilty of improper behaviour there. There is no case in England where contempt has been noticed after the close of the proceedings. As to the propriety of your Lordships exercising a jurisdiction which Courts in England have never exercised for the last 100 years, I may refer to the case of Birch v. Walsh (6).

Here was clearly a case of contempt, yet the Court exercised a discretionary power. There is an enormous difference between proceedings pending in a Court, such as the Court of Chancery, and a Court where a Jury might be influenced, or witnesses deterred, or the course of justice paralysed by the publication of such libels. The jurisdiction is given for the purpose of protecting the Court, parties, and suitors when the ordinary remedy might be too slow. This difference is, as I say, most material, and in the enormous lapse of time there is not one case, like the present, in which the English Courts have proceeded as for a contempt. There have, however, been cases in which the smaller Courts in the Colonies have adopted severe measures with regard to contempts, and in which this summary jurisdiction has been exercised. In a case which came before the Privy Council in 1866 reported as McDermott, In re (7), an appeal by one Lawrence Macdermott, the Court which had punished him, gave him leave to appeal against the sentence of six months' imprisonment and a fine, for an article inserted in a local journal. When McDermott's case (7) came before the Privy Council, it was held that there was no jurisdiction to interfere with the decision of the Colonial Court, but the permission to appeal marked the disapprobation of the Privy Council.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—I believe another case is reported as Riviny v. Justices of Sierra Leone (8), where the Privy Council, although deciding that they could not interfere in such a matter, yet reduced the amount of fine from £ 150 to £50, not as an Appeal Court, but as a mere matter of finance. I looked into McDermott's case (7) before passing sentence in William Taylor's case (2) in order that the fine might be below that which the Court allowed in that case.]

In McDermott's case (7) one of the contempts for which he was charged was with reference to matters past and gone. It appears from the report that on the 2nd April an ex parte order was obtained against MacDermott for publishing certain scandalous articles reflecting on the administration of justice in the Colony of British Guiana. On the 5th April another article appeared which was also treated as a contempt which might be held to refer to a pending proceeding, but the first article, which appeared to be one of a highly defamatory nature, wholly referred to past proceedings. The ultimate decision of the Privy Council on appeal was that it had no power to interfere. The mere fact that there is no appeal to the Privy Council against an order for contempt, ought to itself make your Lordships feel that it is not exercising a proper discretion on your part in proceeding in the matter of an article defamatory of your Lordship the Chief Justice himself by a summary jurisdiction in a Court from whose decision there is no appeal, and in a Court in which the Chief Justice's opinion, even if differing from the rest of the Court, must prevail. Unless it appeared that there was likely to be the gravest possible consequences to the administration of justice, the proper course to be adopted would be, not to have proceeded by a summary process for contempt, but by proceeding, if the Court came to the conclusion that this case is one which calls for animadversion, against Captain Fenwick in a constitutional way, when Captain Fenwick would be brought before a Jury, and if any questions of law arose, they might be reserved for the consideration of a higher Court. That is a point which I have felt in duty bound to bring before your Lordships' notice, and no doubt it would have due weight. Here, in this Court, Captain Fenwick is brought forward to answer a charge of contempt, the nature of which is that he is likely to bring the administration of justice in this country into contempt—that he is likely to weaken the faith of the people in the due and true administration of justice. This case is one which must go to the public as a matter of fact. I am unable to see any reasons which lead to the conclusion that a summary proceeding should be used instead of the constitutional one. There may be such reasons, but it will be difficult to induce the mass of the people to believe in them. If the Court were to exercise this jurisdiction, it will go forth to the world that a Court, from whose decision there is no appeal, has held that these articles of Captain Fenwick were not written in good faith. Would that be satisfactory to the public? Will a decision like this strengthen the faith of the public in the administration of justice in the same way as a decision of a Jury will. The Courts of law in this country are held in too high estimation by the people for any newspaper article to have any damaging effect on that estimation. Whether a Jury convicted or acquitted Captain Fenwick of defamation, or of not having written those articles in good faith, would have very little effect upon the public mind, but the case of a Judge, from whose decision there is no appeal, deciding a case in which he is a person interested, must have the effect of shaking the confidence of the public in the Tribunals of the country. I much regret that it should have this effect, but I fear that it is an almost necessary consequence. If no other course was open to the Court, if it was imperatively necessary for the Court to proceed in the manner it had done, I would be the first to say, regardless of any outside opinion which might be entertained outside,—“Go on, and exercise your jurisdiction”. The jurisdiction is vested in the Court for the benefit of the mass of the subjects and must be exercised. It is, however, not a necessary jurisdiction, but a discretionary one, and one which should be exercised with the greatest care, especially when in the course of upwards of 100 years not a single case can be cited to show that the Court at Westminster had exercised this jurisdiction. That is the most elementary feeling and principle that has been engrained into the minds of all people which prevents Judges from deciding in cases in which they are directly interested. In the case of Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal (9) Lord Cottenham's judgment was held by the House of Lords not capable of being supported, merely because he had an infinitesimal interest as a shareholder.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—The same thing would apply if the same were said to the Judge in Court.]

No, my Lord, I think not. I do not think so; for when an insult is offered in Court, it calls for summary proceedings and instant animadversion, in order to preserve order and regularity, but even then discretionary power is used. What can the Judge do but use summary administration; but even then the offender is in general only put in prison until he submits, or until the rising of the Court. Cases of contempt of this character pertain more to disturbance than defamation, as in case of mad people in the presence of the Court who use insulting and defamatory language. They are not cases in which the Judge is seeking to vindicate his own character; they are not personal matters, but are analogous to cases of writ serving, where the served occasionally use bad language. Could the Judge have personal motives there in punishing such an offender? I think not. I would ask now, what reason can there be in not using criminal information or to what reasons will the adoption of this course be attributed. The Court cannot wish to punish Captain Fenwick if he has not done wrong. Has the Court no confidence in the administration of justice by a Jury who have taken an oath of impartiality? Is it impossible to obtain a Jury from among the community of Calcutta, who are to be relied on when they have taken a solemn oath to convict the offender, should they find him guilty? Surely their verdict would be satisfactory to the ends of justice. On the other hand, the fact of the Court trying a case in which the Judges were personally interested, would have a more important effect on the mind of the public than could be possibly produced by any newspaper articles or writings. In the case of a great personage in Her Majesty's dominions, which I dare say your Lordships remember, when he tried a person against whom he had brought accusation, the case created a sensation not easily forgotten. I cannot forget the expression of public opinion on that occasion. When your Lordship wishes to preserve the dignity and character of the Court, I conceive that in the wording of the Rule the words "to be dealt with in such other way" mean criminal information and trial by a Jury.

(9) (1852 3 H. L. C. 759; 17 Jur. 73; 10 E. R. 301; 88 R. R. 330.

Mr. Kennedy quoted the case of Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal (9) as to the undesirability of a Judge trying his own case. In the case of the Rex v. Justices of Tyrone (10) Judge Fitzgerald made some very strong observations as to the impropriety of Judges trying cases in which they had the slightest interest.

This is an undoubted and an unquestioned principle. This is not a case like that of Lord Cottenham and Grand Junction Company (9), in which it was supposed that an animus existed in the mind of the Judge from the trivial interest he held in the matter as a shareholder in the Company. There are two cases which I have discovered, in which it is laid down that a Judge cannot take part in the trial of any case in which he was an interested party. One of these cases is reported in Coke upon Littleton, page 377b, in which a Judge named Richel wished to decide a case in his own favour, but was overruled by three other Judges. And so the case was dismissed "ex assensu omnium iudiciariorum prætor querentem Richel." Leaving then this Judge, who had tried his own case, to be a warning to others, as Coke puts it, he came to a very interesting case, if authentic, but he got it from a high authority, (8th Henry VI, page 18). That was an action against one Chase, the Chancellor of Oxford, for trespass, where the defendant pleaded in abatement that he was Chancellor of Oxford, and Clerk of Oxford, and that by Letters Patent the case could only be tried in his own Court. Upon demurrer the plea of abatement was overruled. In that case the Counsel for the defence, being much pressed by the Court to produce a precedent for a man sitting as Judge in his own case and giving judgment against himself, replied he knew of but one. It was that of a Pope, who had committed a grievous crime, and the Cardinals came and said to him "Peccasti," and he answered "Judicate me" and they said, "Non possumus: tu es caput ecclesie. Judica teipsum." And the Pope gave judgment "Judico me ipsum cremari et fuit combustus." So having sentenced himself to be burnt, he was burnt and became a saint, and so it clearly appears that a man may be a just judge in his own case. In the present case there certainly is that enormous objection—which I have tried to impress upon the Court—that, however it may be, it will be impossible for the public to divest its mind of the fact, that where a course like this has been adopted from the wish that the trial might be withdrawn from that more proper tribunal—the consideration of a Jury.

There was another point of jurisdiction to which he wished to draw the Court's attention, and that was that the whole law of commitment for contempts had arisen antecedent to what he might call the Magna Charta of the English Press. Sometime ago it made little difference whether a person charged with libel was tried by a Judge alone, or by a Judge and Jury, as it was the Judge alone who was to determine whether the article was defamatory or not, and the Jury were obliged to confine themselves to the simple issue as to whether the person charged did or did not publish the defamatory matter. That, however, was not the law now. One must look to the present state of the law with respect to libels, and must consider that the whole jurisdiction has been withdrawn from the Court. To the Jury, and the Jury alone, is submitted the power, but the Court may interfere if the Jury decides to be libel that which is clearly not libel, or it can mitigate, but not increase, the punishment with which the Jury visits such libel. Newspapers are now-a-days looked upon as the natural and proper correctors of those who are high in power. All hold that in England we have one broad principle on which, in a great measure, rests our superiority. I mean the liberty of the press, which does not exist elsewhere. In England the press acts as the hand and eye to the public and to the executive. I refer now to Wason v. Walter (11).

Lord Chief Justice Cockburn there says:—
“The law of libel has only gradually developed itself into a satisfactory state: for the liberty of a public writer to comment upon the conduct and motives of public men has only recently been recognised. Comments on Government, on Ministers and Officers of State on Members of both Houses of Parliament, on Judges and other public functionaries are now made every day, which, half a century ago, would have been the object of ex officio informations, and would have brought down fine and imprisonment on publishers and authors. Yet who can doubt that the public are gainers by the change, and that though injustice may often be done, and though public men may often have to smart under the keen sense of wrong inflicted by hostile criticism, the nation profits by public opinion being thus freely brought to bear on the discharge of public duties?”

This shows what a change has taken place in the state of the law and public opinion. Lately the Governor-General or Lieutenant Governor, whose conduct has been subjected to severe and even hostile criticism, especially on the subject of the Orissa famine, took no notice of such criticism. Had they done so, the writers of such criticism would have been equally liable with the present offenders on a criminal information. Is it wise for the High Court to object to criminal information, and to claim for itself a higher prerogative, when it is perfectly clear that other functionaries had not that right? These are all the observations I wish to make on this part of the case, and I will now shortly proceed to call your Lordships' attention to another point, and ask whether there is sufficient authority for saying—especially having regard to the then state of the law with regard to indictments for libels,—that the Court has ever had jurisdiction to treat as contempts of Court matters which have occurred outside the Court after the termination of the case, which brought no one into personal collision with the Court, and which are in no way injurious except in being in some way defamatory. All the cases cited on the point are cases which have been actually decided in England, and in all these cases criminal informations have been issued. I have not been able to discover a case in which an English Judge has exercised this jurisdiction, although there have been cases of Colonial Judges having done so. In the case of King v. Faulkner (3) alluded to before, and reported in Montague and Ayrton, it is held that, whatever might be the right or the power of attachment, the Judge who professed to exercise the power had not the power. In examining the law in this matter, it strongly recalls to my mind the observation of Lord Denman in the case of O'Connell v. Reg. (12):—

“That there were three kinds of law: Common Law, Law by Statute, and Law taken for granted and that the amount of accepted legal opinion which fell under the last head far exceeded the amount comprised under the two first heads.”

The law could not be better expressed than it was there, in one of the greatest judgments which have ever been delivered by any member of the House of Lords.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—But it was proved that the law taken for granted was not good law.]

It was proved to be irreconcilable to clear legal principles.

The Court then adjourned for a quarter of an hour for refreshment. Upon its re-assembling—

Mr. Kennedy proceeded with his argument.—I refer the Court to the judgment of the Lord Chancellor in St. James's Evening Post case (13) and will now ask your Lordships to direct your attention to the case of Birch v. Walsh (6), in which the Master of the Rolls in Ireland adopted the language of Lord Hardwicke and went through the whole of the classes of contempts punishable by the Court in its high prerogative power.

Mr. Kennedy again quoted the class of contempts referred to, and proceeded to speak with regard to the third point—that of an inference of an intention to obstruct the course of justice. This, I submit, could not be called scandalising the Court. The term

"scandalising," as I understand it, is a part of the class of contempt in which, when the process of the Court was served, opprobrious language of some description was used. It does seem to me that in cases of this description, where the contempt consists of an attack on the Judges, that the Court invariably ought to proceed on criminal information.

Mr. Kennedy then quoted the case of the King v. Watson (14) and went on to say.—I do not think that any Court at this day would proceed against a man for expressing an opinion even if it were expressed without forethought. There are several cases in which criminal informations have been brought against persons for libels upon persons filling high judicial positions, but if a shorter and more simple remedy had been open to them, that course would certainly have been pursued. In your judgment your Lordship starts with that case—St. James's Evening Post case (13)—which lays down three different kinds of contempt. That is exhaustive of contempts which are liable to punishment, and yet the Judge is not in favour of public rights to the exclusion of rights of the Court. It is hardly possible to put any other construction on that judgment. I think the only other case having any bearing on the present is Van Sandan's case (15)—which is alluded to in the course of Mr. William Taylor's case (2)—in which the contempt was actually committed in the presence of the Court, and the summary jurisdiction was resorted to for the purpose of preserving order.

The two cases referred to by Starkie, page 481, are stated to be libels on the Court of the Queen's Bench: whereas it would appear, on looking into them, that they had nothing to do with the Court of the Queen's Bench at all, but it was a libel on Dr. Middleton*. How it occurred that the King's Bench could be mixed up with a Doctor of Divinity I am at a loss to comprehend. We find in Fortescue 201, that the libel was a libel on a Doctor of Divinity, and that the libel was contained in the dedication of a book. I have heard that "divinity doth hedge a King" but here the "King's Bench" seems to hedge a Doctor of Divinity (a laugh). Then the only other case was in Starkie, 582. These are the only two cases which state that such jurisdiction has never existed. In more modern times we find a case in the Queen's Bench. Now in this case it appears on the face of the report, Crawford's case (16), that Crawford attended the Court as a spectator and auditor and that he commented in the Mona newspaper, and then it appears the Court was adjourned and the man was committed.

It does not appear that the suit was not still pending. It appears that the article was contemptuous, and that its publications were calculated to paralyse the proceedings of the Court. I believe your Lordship was personally present, but it appears to me that as it is reported that appears to be the gist of the affair. Next I come to Wallace's case (17), which was a letter directed to the Judge for the purpose of influencing him in the discharge of one of the duties of the Court. This letter was most insulting, and accused him of altering minutes of the Court (here Mr. Kennedy quoted the case). This was clearly during a pending suit. I forgot to remind your Lordships that in the Moffussil, except in those Courts established by Royal Charter, they would have no power to exercise such a jurisdiction as I mentioned before, as the administration has carefully withdrawn all such power—Act XXV of 1861, section 1863.

No Court except those established by Royal Charter has any jurisdiction, and when so established it has only that power to a similar extent of Rs. 200 fine. Yet they would want it more than this Court, in fact one would have thought it would have been necessary in those Courts. Assuming that your Lordships are not convinced on the points on which I have argued, I will go on to prove that your Lordships cannot treat this case as one of contempt, that is to say, as a case punishable summarily, but that you can only try it by Jury as a case of defamation under the Penal Code.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—If the contempt is one which does not come under the provisions of the Penal Code, there is nothing to prevent the Court dealing with it as a contempt and if it is contempt punishable under the Penal Code, the Court can try it itself, but upon the understanding that the punishment to be inflicted will in no case exceed that provided in the Penal Code.]

What is the charge against Captain Fenwick in the present case?

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—He is charged with having published certain letters and advertisement in the newspaper, and that in doing so he has been guilty of a contempt of Court.]

What I want to know is whether I am to direct myself to the question as to whether the articles in question were calculated to do harm or to injure the reputation of the Judge.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Not alone that. The advertisement for a demonstration against a Judge for acts done in Court is, in my view, a contempt.]

[MACPHERSON, J.—I think, Mr. Kennedy, you may argue first as to whether the letters, etc., written come within the meaning of the word defamation according to the Penal Code, and then whether they are a contempt of Court.]

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—I put it that the advertisement calls for a demonstration of public opinion, and is a defamation as well.]

With respect to the defamation, I want to understand what your Lordships hold.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—If it is a criticism for which, within the meaning of the Penal Code, he could not be indicted, it is not a contempt. Any fair criticism is justifiable and is not a contempt, if expressed in good faith. According to the 52nd section of the Penal Code, a bona fide criticism is not a contempt.]

There may be some difference between the words "expression of opinion" and the word "criticism", although perhaps the simple meaning of the word "criticism" is nothing but an expression of opinion, but if any person were to say, "So and So's judgment was wrong", that could hardly be called a fair criticism.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—I call an expression of opinion in good faith a criticism.]

If writers in the discharge of their public duty were to be obliged to support every portion of what they wrote with reasons, they would be in a hard case.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—I don't mean with their own reasons, but it would not do for a writer, in the case of a man convicted of murder, to say, without giving the evidence, that Judge and Jury had convicted an innocent man.]

Suppose it was not in a newspaper, but an ordinary person had said so.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—If he said so in Court that would be a contempt of Court. I am willing to hear you if you wish to argue that would be an expression in good faith on the conduct of a public servant. Suppose in a case in which there was a conflict of evidence, a newspaper was to say that "the Judge and Jury have convicted an innocent man; the man has been hanged and it is a cruel injustice", would that be justifiable?

If made in good faith, it would. Suppose the case of a person who had been in Court and paid great attention to the case and came to that conclusion, or suppose that one of a minority of a Jury, as in the Moffussil, where a unanimous verdict is not required, differed from the other jurors, and the man tried was condemned to death, could it be said that, although he did not give his reasons, yet that if he said, "in my opinion that man is as innocent as any in Court, and yet he has been sentenced to death," that the statement was not made in good faith?

Mr. Kennedy continued.—The offences charged against Captain Fenwick are two; first, in having consented to act as treasurer to the fund, and in having given notice of the formation of a fund, intended to offer an opportunity to people who entertained an adverse opinion to the Court in William Tayler, In the matter of (2) of giving an expression of their opinion by paying their rupee. Possibly the law of conspiracy still prevails in the country, and after the case of O'Connell v. Reg. (12) it is hard to say what is not conspiracy.

In the matter of BANKS AND FENWICK.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—But those counts were held to be bad.]

I will not state what is and what is not of the nature of a conspiracy, as that is an offence not triable under this particular jurisdiction; and since the introduction of the Penal Code I doubt whether it is triable at all in India. The paragraph which I presume to take as the contempt of Court was this :—

“During the whole of Sunday and yesterday great excitement prevailed throughout Calcutta at the severe sentence pronounced by the Chief Justice on Mr. W. Tayler. We understand that a public subscription has been opened to pay the amount of the fine, subscriptions being limited to one rupee each. We shall be happy to take charge of any subscriptions to such a fund,—the demonstration not being at all intended to express any justification of Mr. Tayler's conduct, but to show rather the sentiment which exists in the breasts of all Englishmen against a too severe use of power. Precedents in law and the forms of justice may be cited in favour of Sir Barnes Peacock's action in the matter, but the universal shout of indignation with which His Lordship's sentence, sitting as he was as [Prosecutor, Judge and Jury upon his own wrong, has been received, sufficiently justifies an appeal to the public. Five hundred men having the pluck to put down their rupee each, in proof of their protest against the cruel sentence awarded by the Chief Justice, and as an earnest of their determination to support their right of appeal to a free press, will be a lesson which Sir Barnes Peacock will not be likely soon to forget.”

I confess that I can find nothing there that amounts to a contempt of Court. I find a desire rather to find out what public feeling really was in the matter. In your judgment your Lordship said, “I am a servant of the public. If public opinion is unmistakeably expressed I will bow to it. But I will not take the voice of a few papers for the voice of the public.” It really seems difficult to ascertain how public opinion could be better expressed than by this rupee subscription. It was your Lordship's and not Captain Fenwick's suggestion as to the expression. The proposal for subscription did not come from Captain Fenwick, as I learn; on the contrary, he has been led into it. This appears on the face of the notice itself.

From this it is clear that the suggestion was made to him, as he had taken great interest in William Tayler's case (2), and surely this could not be taken as a contempt of Court, when his action was merely the result of your Lordship's challenge of the public opinion of the community in Calcutta fortified by a threat.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—I used no threat. I said I shall be happy to lay down.]

Yes, my Lord, it is a threat when you speak of depriving the community of your deep learning and the brilliancy and impartiality so long the brightest ornament of the Bench. This subscription may be regarded as an indication that public opinion thought your Lordship was in error. This public opinion may be very wrong, but still the feeling existed, as it would amongst all Englishmen and I believe it also existed here amongst the members of the Bar, that it would have been better had Mr. Tayler been tried by a Jury. In one word, there was a feeling of dissatisfaction at the proceedings against Mr. Tayler and the severity of his punishment. Your Lordship thought that the sentence of the Court was a fit award, and this judgment had been to some extent challenged by an expression of public opinion on the subject, and it was difficult, under the circumstances, to see how else that expression of public opinion could have been conveyed. Calling a public meeting for the purpose would have been a much graver offence as well as more insulting, and was a course which I would have been very sorry to have seen adopted. The way of enabling the people to come forward and give their opinion as expressed by their rupee was about as mild a form of expressing an opinion as could well be adopted. I have known of many such similar cases, but have never known of one in which any particular proceedings were taken as in this case.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—This subscription was not intended for the purpose of paying off Mr. Tayler's fine.]

Cases of paying off a person's fine for charity are never noticed by the Court, and indeed are very seldom done; but in most cases where subscriptions are raised for the purpose of paying off fines, it is in order to mark public disapprobation at the course adopted. It will doubtless be remembered that when the Nil Durpan prosecution* was successfully carried out, a wealthy native, named Kali Prosunno Singh, actually threw the amount of the fine on the table of the Court. In McDermott's case (7) there was also a fine, and this was also raised by subscription.

[MACPHERSON, J., said that it must be remembered that the article in the paper of the 16th April was to be read in connection with the other articles, although there was no charge of contempt in respect of that particular article.]

It appears to me that this is a mere expression of opinion if it has been given bona fide and with reasonable care, and if there is no reason why the expression of opinion should not be given in this way, and why persons who really have been challenged to come forward and give an expression of their opinion should not do so, then it would seem a monstrous thing that it should be made a matter of contempt on the part of Mr. Fenwick to give them an opportunity to do so. Another paragraph states as follows:—

"Notwithstanding yesterday having been mail day and a day of considerable business in Calcutta, subscriptions towards the fine imposed upon Mr. Tayler have been pouring in. Our notice yesterday must have been carelessly read by many, as individual subscriptions of 100 rupees and upwards have been offered. The limit proposed was one rupee. Again we have to remark that the demonstration is in no way intended as a vindication or approval of Mr. Tayler's conduct, but as an independent expression of opinion regarding an overexercise of power on the part of Sir Barnes Peacock, and as a legitimate protest against undue interference with the right of appeal to the Press."

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Mr. Tayler's second apology had been put in the day before the second notification.]

Mr. Tayler, in his second apology, admitted himself to be altogether in the wrong, and the article in the Englishman does not vindicate Mr. Tayler's conduct, but merely says:—

"There are many people who do not care for the grievances of Mr. Tayler, but who will not brook an encroachment upon their right of appeal to the Press concerning the public acts of public men."

I confess my belief that, on investigation, that these proceedings are an encroachment on the liberty of the Press, the opinion would be discovered to prevail extensively among the members of the Bar. This prevails also among Captain Fenwick and many others who are not at all defective in intelligence, who were present and read the proceedings without reference to Mr. Tayler, whom many think to have acted in a very shabby way. Many also entertained an opinion against Mr. Justice Mitter. I will here read the letters that were sent with these subscriptions.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Are these all the names, or are they only of those who consented to have their names published?]

These are all the names, my Lord, except those of some ladies and those who are in the Moffussil, and have, therefore, been unable to send in their consent as yet.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—I see here "Inigo or Jingo and three friends, H. B. and 10 others, residents of—"]

Those are all ladies, my Lord (laughter).

Here Mr. Kennedy read the letters which caused much amusement. One letter being anonymous and of a libellous nature was not read.

Mr. Kennedy continued.—Although, after your Lordship issuing the Rule, Captain Fenwick published a statement to the effect that he would receive no more subscriptions, yet many further subscriptions came in. There were also many other subscribers who have not sent letters, but who are men of high education and strong feelings as to the rights of Englishmen, which they feel in the present case have been infringed and attacked. I don't know how it was that the subscription came to take place. It has been shown that Captain Fenwick was not the originator of it, but merely agreed to act as treasurer, and the part he has taken was done by no means with the intention of committing a contempt of Court. One of the advantages we enjoy from a free press is that the expression of public opinion which it allows, prevents the breaking out of conspiracies. The greatest means of keeping our country free from outbreaks is that every person is able to bring his opinion before the public, when it can be confirmed or refuted by those who have the power and ability to show what is right and what is wrong. The preventing of the expression of public opinion such as this, by the dread of being punished for contempt of Court, appears to me to be about as wise as placing a weight on a safety valve to keep a boiler from explosion. Captain Fenwick has probably high ideas of the press and the duties of an editor, they may be erroneous ideas, and he may perhaps have gone beyond what he ought to have done in the matter of criticism. The first of the incriminated articles seems to me to be one of the 26th April and with regard to the first passage which states:—

* (1862) 1 Celebrated Trials 86.

In the matter of BANKS AND FENWICK.

"The extraordinary severity of the sentence was much commented on in and out of Court." That I take it, my Lord, is a mere matter of fact. I believe Captain Fenwick in his affidavit states it as such and I will be able to procure other viva voce evidence of persons who were present to verify that statement, that there was much comment on the sentence and that the public expected that after what had occurred on Tuesday morning, they understood that Mr. Tayler would be, to use a Police Court phrase, warned and discharged upon his making an apology. The letter went on:—"There was not a listener in Court on Tuesday last to Mr. Tayler's offer of apology, who did not consider, from what fell from the Chief Justice, that his Lordship was prepared to accept his apology, provided it obtained the same publicity as had been afforded to the letters complained of."

The words "there was not a listener in Court", etc., might be difficult to prove, but what I am prepared to prove, is that a large number of persons in Court did come to the conclusion that your Lordship did not intend to proceed to punish Mr. Tayler in case he published an apology, and included in it a retraction suggested by your Lordship. The article goes on to say that the Ranees of Tigraee's "unprotected position was feelingly dwelt upon, and Mr.

Dwarkanath Mitter was extolled in such a manner that he must have blushed, although like Gray's flower, it was 'unseen.' "

That may perhaps be a somewhat irreverent joke at the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Mitter, but I cannot think it amounts to anything like a contempt, or calls for any necessity for measures such as have been adopted.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—No proceedings would have been taken for anything like that.]

Then the letter goes on—

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—There is a quotation at the commencement of the articles which you have not read, Mr. Kennedy.]

Mr. Kennedy read the following:—

"Calendaro.—Will he be punished?

Bertuccio.—Yes.

Calendaro.—With what? a mulct or an arrest?

Bertuccio.—With both;—

Calendaro.—Now you rave, or must intend revenge."

Slightly altered from Marion Faliero.

I do not see how that can be considered as applying to the Court. I suppose your Lordship remembers the original quotation, and you will see that the alteration is a very slight one. The joke may not be a very good one, but it is hard to see how it could be applied to the Court. The word in the original quotation is "death". I take it that quotation is only meant as a sort of expression of opinion, that the imposition of both fine and imprisonment for such an offence was a singularly severe one. Now surely that is a matter in which a journalist is capable of forming a bona fide opinion, having seen Mr. Tayler in Court and heard the proceedings. What he says of your Lordship, if it is not in good faith, then it is not justifiable. Your Lordship's judgment was one of singular power and of deep research, most clearly bringing before the public that which to other Judges would not have occurred. Your Lordship in exercising your real powers did bring an enormous amount of evidence to bear against Mr. Tayler, against whose acts you had formed a very strong opinion. So, surely, there is no dispraise in saying that you had turned every point against Mr. Tayler. The word "bitterness" cannot be construed into contempt of Court. It merely applied to your Lordship's manner. It may not be fair to criticise your Lordship's manner, nor perhaps in good taste, but really your Lordship's manner is sometimes very forcible, very forcible indeed. You did say that Mr. Tayler's apology did aggravate his offence, for the apology in the affidavit was but an echo of the other. Yet when it was read in Court you did not intimate that it was improper or objectionable. Your Lordship intimated that it was insufficient, because it contained no retraction. The general opinion then was, that your Lordship had no further intention to punish, but that as the affidavit contained no retraction it was insufficient. Yet, surely, pity for Mr. Tayler would not overrule the anxiety in the minds of the public for the honour of the Court.

The case was then adjourned till the following day.

Mr. Kennedy resumed his argument on May 4th. He said I shall again draw your Lordship's attention to the exceptions contained in the Penal Code. Your Lordship seemed to think that the expression of opinion was equivalent to criticism. I confess I hardly think that is the true construction. Expression of opinion is a much wider phrase than criticism. The framers of the law evidently held that fair criticism was certainly not libel. When they used such a wide term as expression of opinion, they must have meant something very different from the existing state of the law, or they would not have gone to the trouble of defining what good faith was. I think here that there is an invitation in the Statute for the expression of opinion in good faith, which is totally exempt from punishment, otherwise the Legislature is merely laying a trap. I cannot think this to be the case. In a recent calamity, public opinion ran very strongly against the highest officials; in fact, it was said that they were indifferent about the death of thousands of people at the time of the Orissa famine which was attributed to their negligence and want of knowledge. The same opinions prevailed at home, although I understand that human means would have been totally unavailing to prevent the calamity, but yet a strong opinion was expressed that this was caused by the culpable neglect of the officials. There was even a suggestion, that this province should have a separate Governor from home, as the existing Lieutenant Governor was the cause of the evil. I think that was singularly unjust. Yet there was no explanation, no giving of reasons; still it was not punishable because it was in good faith. The case put yesterday of a Judge and Jury finding a man guilty of murder, and thereupon being accused of having condemned an innocent man, would be an expression of opinion. Might not that be perhaps in good faith, although the reasons did not appear? Perhaps they might be very weak. But yet that would not imply a doubt as to the speaker's good faith. The 52nd section does not imply that every one must be completely master of his subject, or that his reasons must be sufficient and good, and that else he is liable to punishment, although such expression was made in good faith. Again, the publication of defamatory words is extended towards words "either spoken, or intended to be spoken or said." It is not at all an unfrequent occurrence to hear defeated Counsel expressing strong opinions against the judgment which has overthrown them. Yet, surely, that cannot be defamation, though perhaps erroneous and not fulfilling such demands as "care and attention." Surely the 52nd section does not say that good faith must be applied in forming opinions, but only in expressing such opinions. Of course, if a man has no opinion, if he knows nothing whatever of the case, what he expresses cannot be in good faith. On the other hand, if he has an opinion, this section gives him the liberty of expressing it. The intention of the Penal Code is to extend this liberty of expression, yet if no opinion may be expressed save after careful study, it only misleads the public and contracts their liberty. I now think it right to read Captain Fenwick's affidavit (Here Mr. Kennedy put in and read the affidavit, which stated that the articles complained of were inserted bona fide, and as a fair expression of public opinion. Then an article from the Friend of Indian, April 29). Here the writer appears to have been in Court and seen the reports, and he says that the opinion was shared by all in Court, that nothing further than the apology, which Mr. Tayler afterwards published in the newspaper, would be required of him.

In the matter of BAKER AND FENWICK.

And now this brings me to a very painful portion of my subject. I must say that your Lordship's language on that occasion would naturally lead to the supposition that if Mr. Tayler made the apology required by your Lordship, your Lordship would be satisfied, and that no further proceedings would be taken against him. Mr. Tayler did make an affidavit which he read to your Lordship and he also read the case of Fletcher, Ex parte (18), a very gross contempt, when the Court intimated that they would be satisfied with an apology. This was read to your Lordship, and yet you expressed no dissent from such an opinion. Of course that was a matter for your Lordship's discretion, but still I submit that many would think that, as you expressed no dissent, you consented to the contents of that affidavit. I presume myself that the apology you referred to was that incorporated in the affidavit. The affidavit was then before your Lordship. Any one might think that you meant the apology contained in this affidavit. You further said:—"I leave this remark to Mr. Tayler's consideration."

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE—I did mean the affidavit.]

Under those circumstances, my Lord, it does seem that it was not natural to presume that upon a retraction published as the letters were published, it would be accepted as sufficient, for although your Lordship did not pledge yourself [having Van Sandau's case (15) in your mind] that if Mr. Tayler published his apology and retraction it would be sufficient, yet the supposition was that nothing further would be wanted. Of course you did not say so; and people may be to blame for thinking so; still that was their opinion. This is what Captain Fenwick says in his affidavit, and if that is not sufficient, I can give the evidence of several most respectable gentlemen whose opinions were identically the same, and who will testify that that was the state of public opinion. I mean that if Mr. Tayler published the apology as he had published the offence, he would be visited with no other punishment. I don't myself like to give evidence, but really there was a great discussion here amongst the members of the Bar, and here that was the general opinion as is also in the outside world. The reflections on your Lordship in "Bystander's" letter are very strong, but then what you have to consider is, whether that was the prevalent opinion caused by what you said or by what you did not say. Of course, if it had been brought to your Lordship's notice you would have spoken more fully upon the matter. But with that we have now nothing to do. What did occur did very naturally give rise to the general belief that the publication of the apology was all your Lordship required. I submit, my Lord, that the thing for you to consider is, whether such opinion might not be held bonafide. The question is whether the course taken in Court may not have induced people in Court, who had not the same means as we had of forming an opinion of your Lordship's judgment, to have taken such a view perfectly bona fide. I can't help impressing upon your Lordship the opinion, which could most naturally occur to the minds of such persons, was that a gentleman of your Lordship's ability would not allow such an impression to arise without intending that it should arise. I know that your Lordship did not intend such an impression to arise, but the question is whether it did not arise bona fide and that this letter was the bona fide and legitimate expression of the opinion of the person who wrote it. If so, I submit the subsequent remarks were not beyond the limits of free expression, even though the opinion was founded in error. The latter part of the letter is written in a sort of flourishing style and is to me quite unintelligible and I am unable to put any construction upon it. In that part of the letter he says:—"there is a marked difference between the dulcet though powerful tones of the British lion and the avriere pensee gamut of the Bengal tiger." What the meaning of these words is, or what construction is to be put upon them, I certainly cannot understand. The other inculpatory letter is, I take it one published in the Englishman of the 25th April, in which a short extract is given from Sutherland's Weekly Reporter, showing that Mr. Justice Dwarkanath Mitter appeared as Counsel for the Ranees in a case against Mr. Tayler, Ranees Usmut Koonwar v. Tayler

In the matter of BANKS AND FENWICK.

{19, and the last part of the letter stated what was erroneous as well as ungrammatical. The sentence is as follows:—"By this you will perceive that Mr. Justice Dwarkanath Mitter, who held a brief for the Ranees in this case, afterwards sat as a Judge in a cause between the same parties." This is erroneous, because Mr. Justice Mitter did not sit as a Judge in a cause between the same parties. But of what consequence is it? Is it unprofessional or contrary to precedent that a gentleman of the Bar holding a brief should afterwards sit as Judge in a different suit between the same parties? It is only a rule of etiquette and nothing more that where an Advocate taking part in a suit, which afterwards comes before the Court when he is on the Bench, takes no part in the case. Certainly, the suggestion that he sat as Judge in a different suit between the same parties was no imputation on Mr. Justice Dwarkanath Mitter.

MACPHERSON, J.—The whole point of the letter is that Mr. Justice Mitter, having been Counsel for one of the parties, had been guilty of unfair and improper conduct in taking part in the case. That was the innuendo contained in the letter—or why was it published?

Well, I don't see why it was published.

MACPHERSON, J.—There is a misstatement in the letter, which any one may see.]

Yes, and it carries its contradiction on the face of it.

[MACPHERSON, J.—But the letter is nonetheless an offence for all that, when the manifest object with which it was written is considered.]

It is hard to see how the letter can amount to defamation. There had been a great deal of excitement about the matter and —

[MACPHERSON, J.—The letter itself is of no value one way or the other, except that it goes to show the object with which it was written, in imputing improper conduct to Mr. Justice Dwarkanath Mitter.]

There had been a good deal of excitement about this matter, and this letter came to Captain Fenwick's hands, and he published it with a perfectly innocent intention. It is a very foolish letter, but nothing more. It does not implicate Mr. Justice Dwarkanath Mitter or any other person and is perfectly immaterial one way or the other. That there was and is a great deal of excitement about these cases, can hardly be doubted. These cases have excited a great deal of interest, and your Lordships need hardly have looked around the Court yesterday or to-day to see that this is the case. In spite of the heat of the weather the Court has been much crowded during the last two days, and this shows the enormous interest and excitement felt about this case as a sequel to the case of Mr. Tayler. The public of Calcutta, not only Europeans but natives, had become impressed with the value of the principles of English Jurisprudence, and an idea had been engendered that some of these principles were endangered by the action taken by the Court in Mr. Tayler's case (2). In times long gone by a very summary course was adopted towards the public in matters which affected the dignity of the Courts. In times long gone by, the person of the Crown was protected with equally stringent prerogatives. The same with regard to Ministers of State, and remarks upon persons holding high offices of State were prosecuted and dealt with almost as treason. He would remind the Court of a case in the reign of Edward IV, where a man's deer was killed, and he wished that the horns of the deer were in the belly of the man who advised the King to do this. That was held to be high treason. Those days, however, have gone by, and the rights of free speech and free discussion have been gradually widened down to the present day. The greatest change is that in the free discussions on the doings of public men public men have now learned to view their safety, and men now see that it is good for the commonwealth and for the good of all that there should be free discussion, and that if it overstepped the proper bounds it should be punished by constitutional means. As I have shown, the discretionary power of exercising a summary jurisdiction in the case of libels upon the Court published out of Court, and after the termination of a case, has never for the last 100 years been exercised in England, it was a power to be exercised with the most guarded discretion—a discretion which has been so guarded in England, that in the whole history of English Law, not one case could be found in which English Judges had used this power. The only cases in which this power is shown to have been used are cases from the Colonies and the Isle of Man. Under these circumstances it is not astonishing that it has caused great public excitement, and it is not astonishing that the Court should have been crowded as it was yesterday and to-day. I have now, my Lords, only to close by repeating what I said before, that I can hardly feel the administration of justice and the respect felt for this Court could receive a heavier blow than they have received by these proceedings of your Lordships, when it is remembered that these proceedings of your Lordships may give rise to an impression that your Lordships consider a Jury cannot be safely entrusted with the administration of the law.

Mr. Paul then rose to address the Court. He said:—May it please your Lordships. The duty of showing cause against the Rule made by your Lordships which devolves upon me, imposes on me a task at once painful, delicate, difficult and embarrassing.

Painful, because I shall have to offer remarks upon the conduct of the Chief Justice, who is entitled, by his well known services and immense talents, to a respect which is acknowledged and felt by all who know him.

Delicate, because in my duty to the Court and my client I must be careful not to overstep the bounds of propriety on the one hand and must yet push every argument to the utmost limits on the other.

Difficult, because I have to contend against what may be considered to some extent a foregone conclusion in the minds of your Lordships, based upon mature judgment and reflection.

Embarrassing, because it is clear that whatever arguments I may take up, have already been considered and weighed beforehand by your Lordships, besides which no specific grounds are laid down against which I have to combat.

The learned Counsel then proceeded to show how greatly indebted the community was and should be to the Chief Justice for having swept aside the cobwebs of confusion, and for having substituted clear grounds of law in laying down the Penal Code, which existed only in this country.

Whatever accusation might be made against Captain Fenwick surely everybody would acquit him of malice, or of deliberately bad intentions. Whatever faults he had committed were errors of judgment. Steady justice was to be considered as much the indication of public liberty as the freedom of the press. From the earliest records of civilisation, authority and liberty had always been in contest. In order that the two may act in conjunction and harmony a line of definition must be drawn, a very difficult problem indeed, if it was to be governed by the precedent of cases which occurred in England 40 or 50 years ago. Some Judges have held very singular opinions on the subject, and, therefore, in that necessary definition one should rather be guided by the principles than the conclusions of those cases. It would, therefore, be better to confine the argument to the question of the law, as to whether the Court had the right to try a case in which it was itself interested. Nothing published after the termination of proceedings could be held practically as contempt. Mr. Justice Wilmut's opinions are often commented on, but they are not sound, because they will not accommodate themselves to the present times. He, however, was not, according to Lord Campbell, a very bright genius, and his opinions must be regarded as speculative opinions.

Whenever cases have come up of libels after the termination of proceedings the Judges have always refrained from exercising their rights of punishing. Sir Samuel Romilly at one time held a strong opinion on the existence of this power, but found he had gone too far, and he afterwards retracted. This retraction is a matter worthy of consideration, considering the eminence of his position, his learning, and the benefit he conferred on society (13, Adolphus and Ellis). No case in England had gone to the extent that a contempt after proceedings could be punished summarily [Oswald's case (16)]. In that case it was considered there was no question to go to the Jury, for the publisher had admitted publication, and in those days before Fox's Bill, the question of construction was one for the Judge.

Here was a manner of proceeding in which the whole argument was one of law. Therefore, trial by a Jury was absurd, as the fact of the publication and authorship was admitted, if the construction to be placed on a libel was for the Court to decide. In the judgment of Mr. Justice Patterson, it was stated that a case might be conceived, which would have the effect of paralysing the proceedings of the Court. I can conceive such a case, but I thought it must be more than mere defamatory matter. If a threat were made that your Lordships would be resisted in going to Court, that would be a proceeding which would be likely to have the effect of paralysing the action of the Court, as it would be actively impeding the administration of justice. If the world did believe your Lordship's judgment to be severe, and Captain Fenwick said so, it would have no effect in paralysing the action of the Court, and the equanimity with which your Lordships sat there would not be disturbed in the least. In no case in England had the Judges gone the length contended for. It was said that the Court could not properly punish as contempt anything which would not interfere with the working of the Court, and I can imagine many cases in which the Court might well exercise this power. In the case of the King v. Faulkner (3) it was held that a Commissioner of Bankruptcy had not the power to punish for contempt. I contend that the letter reflecting upon the sentence of his Lordship as severe was not an obstruction in any way. In the case of Reg. v. Almon (4), Lord Campbell's Lives of the Chief Justices, Volume 2, page 297, the judgment of the Chief Justice Wilmut begs the question which it proceeds to prove. It says the Court has power because it has the power, but shows no instance of its exercise.

It is for the Court to say if they are satisfied with this judgment. The Judge does not know where the power comes from. Thought is here lost in language. (Here Mr. Paul read the note of Lord Campbell, to the effect that it was inexpedient for a Judge to exercise this power, and that the proper way to proceed was by criminal information).

The matters here complained of are not scandalising to the Court. To think so would be to give the words too wide an interpretation. That is a question for a Jury. Van Sandau's case (15) does not come within that class. Where the Court sees a direct attempt to obstruct the proceedings, then they are justified, but in Captain Fenwick's case, the supposed obstruction is from some reasoning or some argument; and then the Chief Justice says the Courts had better be shut up, it is the inference of intention.

Times have changed and the severity of the law is now much mitigated. With regard to this, whole pages of legal literature teemed with cases of great injustice done by Judges under colour of law. I need go no farther than to instance the judgment of Sir John Finch in the case of Hampden (20), in which everything was exhausted to show that in that case the right way of proceeding had been adopted, and to uphold in the strongest manner the divine rights of Kings. I understand your Lordship to say that if the misrepresentations had been confined to misstatements without anything being based on them, no notice would have been taken of them. I understand that your Lordship considers the letter of "Bystander" to be a contempt as reflecting upon your Lordship's character and also that the advertisement calling for subscriptions was also a contempt of Court, as being intended as a demonstration against the Court. I have already submitted, on the authority of a number of cases, that in cases of libel of this sort on a Judge, after proceedings had ended, the Court had no greater powers than an ordinary individual. There were other ways than the present course of proceedings by which the honour of the Court might be protected, and the mental capacity of a Judge ought to be of such a nature as to prevent him from placing himself in the position of Prosecutor and Judge in the same case. With regard to the animadversions in the letter of "Bystander", no doubt the word "ruse" is one calculated to annoy your Lordship, but I hope to be able to show to the Court, although the word was not one which I can approve of, that it was really intended to express an impression which had gone abroad that your Lordship had given Mr. Tayler to understand that his apology would be accepted, and had thus punished him severely without even mentioning the apology.

With regard to what was said to be the grossest libel—the opening of the subscription as demonstration against the Court—Mr. Paul mentioned that in olden times, the Judges had very curious ideas upon the liberty of the subject and the firmness of the British constitution. If almost anything was done, it was given out that the constitution was in danger. Even in later times a great deal of unenlightenment clung to Judges of high standing. In Lord Ellenborough's speech on Sir Samuel Romilly's Bill, reported in the 233rd page of the 3rd Volume of Campbell's Lives of the Chief Justices, he strongly recommended that the punishment of death for felony to the amount of five shillings should not be abolished and so late as 1830, Lord Tenterden strongly opposed the abolishment of capital punishment for the offence of forgery. Mr. Paul then proceeded to read Sir A. Cockburn's remarks in the case of Wason v. Walter (11) already cited by Mr. Kennedy.

In modern days Judges do not go on the acts of their predecessors, they do not deliver judgments in such and such a manner, because others have been of a similar character (here Mr. Paul cited several cases of overruling). The law as it is written is adamant and immovable, but the unwritten law is so elastic that it adapts itself to the present time and judgment can, therefore, be guided by proper discretion. If a dissent of opinion be contempt, then it is impossible to know what is not contempt, and one is at a loss to discover what and where the bounds of contempt exist. The Earl of Macclesfield was fined £3,000 and because the King dissented from the opinion of the House of Lords, he ordered the fine to be paid from the Privy Purse. Suppose a case of a man who had been fined, and that fine were to be paid off by any one in Court, is this a case of contempt? There is the case of the Corporation of Yarmouth, in Dunsford and East, on which the present case is judged. But surely that is carrying the law too far. When a man expresses his opinion that a verdict is wrong, or declares it to be so, it does not follow that he says it is infamously so or that he even thinks so. In the present case there has been no obstruction of justice, and he was at a loss to conceive how it could be construed into a contempt of Court except by a process of harsh reasoning. There are wrong verdicts every day. In times past perhaps Juries were more subservient to the Judges, and perhaps that was the reason there are so few cases on record of reversal of sentences, but that does not say that they were not unjust. Provided that they are deserved, animadversions on wrong judgments or on any public acts of any public men were of benefit to themselves and useful to the general community. If there were no liberty of the Press, then a Justice could say whatever he liked or pleased.

Even if their Lordships considered that Captain Fenwick ought to be punished, even then they would surely acquit him of any endeavour to sap the administration of justice. But it was submitted that the present case was one for a Jury who were uninterested.

(Court adjourned.) Upon the re-assembling of the Court after a short adjournment for tiffin, Mr. Paul resumed his argument. He said that in the judgment of Mr. Justice Buller, that learned Judge seemed disposed to consider that all animadversions on the proceedings of Courts should be prevented. He (Mr. Paul) submitted that an opinion pronounced adverse to the judgment of a Judge and Jury is perfectly justifiable if not of a calumnious nature.

[MACPHERSON, J.—Surely that is not disputed.]

Mr. Paul said that was the decision of Mr. Justice Buller in the case he had referred to. He (Mr. Paul) would only say that he was one of those who, when occasion required, expressed himself strongly in cases where he felt strongly. There had been cases of Judges of the High Court expressing themselves in strong language. Mr. Paul submitted that if an article was written and published bona fide, the reasons ought not to be taxed by the severest logic, for if so, the Government of the world would rest in the hands of two or three persons. If that were, so, his Lordship the Chief Justice's decisions could be never assailed, if the reasons of anything which was alleged against them were to be put to the severe test of logic. Mr. Paul then quoted the case of Hurro Chunder Roy Chowdry v. Shoorodhoney Debia (21), where the present Chief Justice had made use of strong language in expressing his opinion, and had said that to come to the conclusion come to by the majority of the Judges in that case would bring discredit upon the law and upon the administration of justice. Mr. Paul continued and contended that in cases of this kind it was necessary that not only the words but their intent should be calumnious before it could be made an offence. Mr. Paul maintained that these articles did not come within the meaning of the word contempt, as the judgment of the Court in the case referred to was gone and final. He would now proceed to interpret the law with regard to the liberties of the press. It was a noble example that Lord Brougham showed when in trying a question relating to the privilege of members of the House of Commons, he did not hesitate to cast aside certain decided cases, when it behoved him to do so. He (Mr. Paul) asked their Lordships to do the same. Mr. Paul also read some passages from Mill on Liberty defining the right of criticism of public men.

In the matter of BANKS AND FENWICK.

He then summed up this portion of his argument by submitting that he was right in stating that with the exception of two Colonial cases, one of which was Crawford's case (16), in which the details led him to believe that although the Court was not sitting, yet the proceedings were still pending, for in that case Mr. Justice Earle said that it was quite possible to conceive cases of contempt calculated to paralyse justice and, therefore, the Court would vindicate its administration, and that it was for the Court in each case to decide whether it amounted to that. If the suit had been terminated these observations would not have been applicable.

Sir Samuel Romilly, a great man and one who had done very much for the good of the country, and who was a great authority, gives an account of certain proceedings before Lord Erskine. They are stated in 6 Lord Campbell's Lives of the Chancellors, page 565. He states the facts and arguments in a case in which he had endeavoured to persuade Lord Erskine to exercise this jurisdiction, but Lord Erskine had declined to commit. Sir Samuel Romilly made some very harsh comments on Lord Erskine's conduct but eventually he had himself retracted his arguments, and said he believed that a contempt of this kind ought to be prosecuted as a libel. And in McDermott's case (7), the facts were open when leave to appeal was applied for. Lord Westbury saw the necessity and gave the leave to appeal, thus marking his disapprobation of the committal, and although subsequently that was rescinded, that proved nothing, because it was merely refused as there was no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal in the case.

In the case of Wallace, In re (17), gross charges were made against the Chief Justice by letters sent to him, and before the proceedings were terminated, and that of course came within the class of direct contempts, because the letters containing the insults were sent direct to the Chief Justice.

Therefore, the case was narrowed down to the case in Wilmot and a case which occurred in the Isle of Man, which shows that the power was doubtful and did not prove satisfactorily that a man could be punished for remarks made after the conclusion of the proceedings. The question seemed to be an open question, which, if properly considered, would show that no such power really did exist. The next subject was the mode of proceeding to be adopted, supposing this to be a case in which the Court still retains of the opinion that they have a right to punish. In order to show cases where that power clearly existed, Stockdale v. Hansard (22) shows the general opinion that such cases ought to go before an impartial Jury. Then as regards Birch v. Walsh (6), no grosser case could be conceived that this, and yet the Court thought that the safety of its honour was not impeached, and that the futile attempts would but recoil on the authors. Letters Patent, 1865, section 30, is already before the Court, and here if the offence does not come under the second exception, then it is plainly defamatory and consequently triable under the Penal Code. In Long Wellesley's case (1) Lord Brougham considers that the proceedings for contempt are criminal proceedings.

Here in the present case was no specific charge.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—The charge is for publishing those letters and notices which are in themselves contempts of Court.]

Yes, but there is no specific charge.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Then how would it be in the case of an indictment which would only say:—"That on a certain day he did publish and set forth certain articles?"]

Then, my Lord, there would be an innuendo.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—If you are ignorant as to what I complain of I will tell you.]

In the case of indictment there would be a Prosecuting Counsel.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—But if there were none?]

Then the defendant should be told.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—The substance of the letters and the advertisement was to get up a demonstration to teach the Chief Justice a lesson, and the article stated that the Chief Justice would raise a storm which he would not find it easy to quell. Those were the letters which formed the contempt. Do you wish an adjournment, Mr. Paul, to consider the charges as now explained?]

No, my Lord, but I submit that my client is prejudiced in not knowing the precise charge brought against him, and which he is expected to meet.

Mr. Paul went on to state that the course adopted by the Court had prejudiced his client, and was a course which ought not to be resorted to except where it was imperatively necessary. There was a definite punishment provided for defamation in the Penal Code, and a definite way of trial provided for such cases. It was never intended that offences of this description should be dealt with in a summary manner. Mr. Paul then referred to the jurisdiction of the Sudder Court in cases of contempt, the punishment for which could not exceed a fine of Rs. 200, or a month's imprisonment where the fine was not paid. In America, it was stated in Kent's Commentaries, Vol. 1, page 321, that the Courts could only summarily punish in those cases where the contempt was committed in the face of the Court, or was such as to obstruct the course of justice. This Court was precluded from punishing except by the Penal Code, and the Penal Code can only punish such offences as come under the sections in that Code. The question was whether what was printed as bona fide criticism might be a better kind of opinion but not necessarily more bona fide than the mere expression of opinion. The well-known case of a Judge in the Colonies who was told to give his opinions but not his reasons for those opinions is a matter of history.

On the 13th April a warrant was issued, and Mr. Tayler appeared in answer and admitted the authorship of those letters. In commenting on Mr. Tayler's case (2) his audacity and his carelessness were certainly indefensible. The Chief Justice, therefore, brought a strong artillery of argument to bear against him. On the other hand Mr. Tayler had some reasons for complaining, although not sufficient to justify him, but still he felt mortified against Mr. Justice Mitter. Yet this did not warrant his careless way and the style in which those letters were written. Mr. Justice Mitter might have retracted what he had said as to Mr. Tayler being directly guilty of fraud, a statement which there was not a tittle of evidence to prove so far as it meant personal fraud. Therefore, Mr. Tayler had a grievance which might have been some extenuation of his conduct and have mitigated his offence and on those grounds his sentence might have been less severe, yet not one observation, not one remark, appeared in the long and carefully considered judgment pronounced upon him, to show that there was a single point in his favour. It did not say that he was galled or that he submitted at once—which he did without complaining of his arrest. His submission and his apology might have been sufficient and could have been accepted. In the outside world his wrong was supposed to be true. Yet the Chief Justice went to work with all the zeal and labour for which his judgments are conspicuous to turn every point against Mr. Tayler. It would be no compliment were one to say that the Chief Justice had been careful in preparing his judgment. Yet that judgment shows in no way that Mr. Tayler was suffering under irritation which might have given him some cause for his conduct. Mr. Paul then proceeded to refer to the 3rd occasion when Mr. Tayler was brought up, when he presented a petition and made a further apology.

[MACPHERSON, J. — The fact of his making an apology did not entitle him to his discharge as a matter of right.]

Mr. Paul said that it was a matter of expectation that if he did apologise he would not be subjected to any further punishment. In the case * in which Mr. Piffard and Captain Francis were tried for contempt of Court, the Court was satisfied with an apology expressing sorrow for what had occurred in lieu of all punishment.

[MACPHERSON, J. — All I meant is that a man cannot claim immunity from punishment from the fact of having made an apology for his offences.]

THE CHIEF JUSTICE. — Suppose a man were to knock another person down in the street, and on being arrested, make an apology. Would he be entitled to consider that sufficient amends ?]

Mr. Paul said that in Van Sandau's case (15), which was a very gross one, a simple apology was held to be sufficient and quoted Sir George Rowe's remarks in that case, wherein he said he would be unwilling to inflict punishment if he could find a single expression of regret. Mr. Paul said that he considered Mr. Tayler's first apology to have been a sufficient one, and that when he expressed his sorrow, that implied all retractions and he did not think it was necessary for him to retract everything, and say in so many words that what he had said was false. That apology appeared to him (Mr. Paul) to have been a sufficient and ample one and this formed one of the grounds for the writing of the letter of "Bystander", which had been referred to. When it was pointed out to Mr. Tayler that his apology contained no retraction, he made the only retraction he could. Under the circumstances, nothing had been said to Mr. Tayler but that his letters were a contempt, and his apology was therefore a general one. He was not told of any particular contempt in any of the letters and when he begged to be allowed to retract everything which the Court considered to be a contempt, he (Mr. Paul) considered that to be quite sufficient. Another fact was that his Lordship in his judgment on Mr. Tayler did not mention one word of his published apology, but after passing his sentence he said something about it. It might very naturally have happened that in a long and elaborate judgment like that, his Lordship might have forgotten to mention it, but outside people had criticised the omission; and it had been mentioned that although the published apology was one which emanated from the suggestion of the Chief Justice, yet that his Lordship had not once mentioned it in his judgment nor taken it into consideration in mitigation of punishment.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE said that after the delivery of his judgment he told Mr. Tayler that if he made certain additions to his apology which had been already published, his punishment would be mitigated.]

Mr. Paul said that the apology which Mr. Tayler had been required to make was a most abject one, and he was surprised that that gentleman did not consider his reputation to be worth more than a month's imprisonment.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE. — I do not consider the apology was an abject one.]

Mr. Paul said that it appeared to him the apology was a most abject one, as Mr. Tayler stated that what he said was unwarranted and wholly without foundation. He (Mr. Paul) would have suffered six months' imprisonment, no matter how much in the wrong he might have been, rather than make such an apology as that. However much sympathy Mr. Tayler might have had at first, he had since altogether lost it by such conduct. He did not blame his Lordship for demanding the apology, as it seemed to have been fixed in his mind that such an apology was necessary. Mr. Paul mentioned the fact that Mr. Tayler's final apology was not to be received till a week after the judgment had been pronounced, so that it was seen that his Lordship had fully made up his mind, no matter what apology was given, to sentence Mr. Tayler to a fine of Rs. 500 and a week's imprisonment. He only referred to this in order to show a reason for the misunderstanding which had arisen. As regards the law of the case of Wellesley v. Duke of Beaufort (1), that was a case in which upon only an apology being made the order was discharged, which shows that an apology is sufficient sometimes. And further, the Chief Justice expressed no opinion that the affidavit, or rather the apology to the affidavit, was an aggravation of the offence, until he delivered his judgment, yet that affidavit was before him.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE. — I was not advising Mr. Tayler.]

No, my Lord, but you gave the impression that if the affidavit was rectified and the apology published, Mr. Tayler would be discharged.

He then continued.—There was nothing in the character of the Chief Justice to induce the editor to calumniate and attack him. In fact he only said that in case he carried his dictum too far he would raise a storm. There is surely no contempt in that. The only dictum was that the printer and publisher would be proceeded against; naturally the editor took offence at this. This did not refer to anything the Pioneer had said. The Pioneer contained no dictum. It was the Friend of India that contained the dictum which the editor thought was going too far. Since the Court has signified its disapprobation, the newspaper has been silent on the subject and in no way endeavoured to prejudice proceedings.

[MACPHERSON, J.—The article of the 26th April states or at least imputes that the Chief Justice acted wrongfully and attacked and turned everything against Mr. Tayler that he possibly could, and then protests against the cruelty (not the severity) of the sentence. There is a vast difference between cruelty and severity. The poetry must be taken as part of the article.]

Mr. Paul said that this was merely an expression of what the public opinion was.

Surely an editor is not responsible for an opinion that prevails or for expressing it. The Friend of India had done the same thing. He himself thought that Mr. Tayler would have been discharged. In fact from what the Chief Justice had said on Tuesday, he (Mr. Paul) did not attend on Saturday although he was watching the case for Mr. Tayler—for in fact he thought that nothing further would be done. Many people thought that the public apology was not fairly treated and, therefore, they thought the sentence a cruel one. Exception should not be taken at that one word "cruel" here, which merely meant harsh, and nothing more. The editor had never had a wish to impute malice to the Chief Justice, or he would not have paid the tribute he did to the Chief Justice's talents, etc., which he did in the lines directly preceding the word "cruel." Surely the Chief Justice was a little too sensitive. There was not one misstatement, not one hostile criticism even, and could that article be called mala fide? It was difficult to convince a Judge who himself had to put what construction he pleased on the sentences he found offensive and to judge of their meaning himself. Did the Chief Justice think that a Judge who thought he had done right should not be told he had delivered a cruel judgment (meaning a harsh judgment) if that judgment had been unnecessarily severe? After all the Chief Justice did go unnecessarily into the past life of Mr. Tayler and the hearers upon that thought the judgment cruel.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—The object of that judgment was to justify the Court and not to attack Mr. Tayler.]

Mr. Paul here mentioned the very strong remarks which had been made on Mr. Justice Shee and the Jury who had tried Toomer when almost every newspaper in England denounced both the verdict and the sentence. He continued: Mr. Tayler had a grievance and in consequence of that he did very unwisely insult Mr. Justice Mitter. The Chief Justice's high and exalted position prevents him from seeing disappointed suitors, and from witnessing what such men feel. Mr. Tayler knew that he was not in the country when the fraud was committed, so that at the most he could only be accounted guilty of a constructive fraud, not of any moral fraud. Had Mr. Justice Mitter said that the fraud was perpetrated by Mr. Tayler's agent all would have been well, but he did not do so.

Mr. Paul then proceeded to comment upon the judgment, showing that Mr. Tayler really had been aggrieved. The Chief Justice in his judgment in the case of Zuhooroonissa against Mr. Tayler said that it was unnecessary to consider the question whether there had been any fraud or concealment. To this judgment the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Mitter said, "I entirely concur," and when the Chief Justice said that it was unnecessary to enter into the question, Mr. Justice Mitter held that it was not necessary to decide, for that was part of the Chief Justice's judgment, and then he went on and found that Mr. Tayler had been guilty of both fraud and concealment. There was no evidence before the Court in that case to justify Mr. Justice Mitter in saying that Mr. Tayler had committed fraud. All that could by any means have been said upon the evidence was that a fraud had been constructively committed on behalf of Mr. Tayler, but not by him, because all the transactions with Ahmedollah were conducted by Enayut Hossein, who was acting as agent for both parties.

The Court then adjourned to the following day.

Mr. Paul in resuming his argument the next morning said that when the Court rose the day before he was still on the subject of the article of the 26th April, with reference to that part of it which stated that every possible point had been turned against the accused. He (Mr. Paul) had also endeavoured to show that Mr. Tayler had good grounds for complaint against the decision of Mr. Justice Dwarkanath Mitter, and concluded by showing that although the Chief Justice had declared it to be unnecessary to decide whether there had been any fraud or concealment on the part of Mr. Tayler, Mr. Justice Dwarkanath Mitter, after declaring his concurrence in the judgment of the Chief Justice, went further, and expressed what he (Mr. Paul) could not help thinking was a dissent from the judgment of the Chief Justice, that it was unnecessary to decide that fraud had been committed. Mr. Justice

Mitter's judgment was as follows:—"I entirely concur. I feel no hesitation in holding that the plaintiff is entitled to recover both upon the ground that she has paid a debt due from Mr. Tayler to Ranees Usmedh Koer when she was under no obligation to pay it, as also upon the ground that a fraud has been perpetrated against her by Mr. Tayler in concealing from her the fact that the estate sold by him to her was under attachment in execution of a decree of Court. I should have been extremely sorry if the state of the law were otherwise." As to the duty of the Judges, he (Mr. Paul) must refer to the Bench as it must know better what its duties were than any of the outside world, but it struck him that it behoved Judges to be particularly careful in the expressions used in their judgments, that the ordinary meaning was to be given to the words used. If a Junior Judge thought that the judgment of his senior required to be made stronger by further remarks, it was his duty to make them and to give his reason for doing so. But in this case no reason was given as to why, when the Chief Justice had declared it was unnecessary to go into the question of whether there had been fraud or not, the Junior Judge should have considered it to be his imperative duty to come to a finding directly opposite, without assigning any reason. He (Mr. Paul) would assume, as indeed the judgment showed, that the bargain for the sale of the estate was altogether carried on between Enayut Hossein and Ahmedollah and that Enayut Hossein acted in the matter as the agent of both parties. Enayut Hossein stated that Ahmedollah knew of the attachment, and that he had told him of it. Mr. Tayler was at a distance at the time and took no part in the proceedings, and how therefore was he to know that Enayut Hossein, who was acting as agent for both parties, had kept concealed a fact, which was in his knowledge, from his other principal? Justice Dwarkanath Mitter did not say in his judgment that the agent of Mr. Tayler had committed fraud, and that Mr. Tayler was constructively responsible for the acts of his agent, but he said that Mr. Tayler had committed a fraud himself, and he (Mr. Paul) contended that that conclusion was arrived at without there being a tittle of evidence to support it. Mr. Tayler never took any part in the contract with Ahmedoollah from beginning to end, but left it all to his agent, and an amount of moral obloquy had been thrown upon him which there was not a tittle of evidence to support. The Chief Justice in his judgment had expressed his disbelief in the evidence of Enayut Hossein and his belief in that of Ahmedoollah, not from the fact that the evidence of one was preferable to the other by reason of character, but from a chain of circumstances. His Lordship had shown in his judgment that if Enayut Hossein was to be believed, there would have been something done which had not been done. He would ask his Lordship to bear in mind these facts. The judgment on the original case was tantamount—perhaps not to a direct charge of perjury against Enayut Hossein, but sufficiently so for Mr. Tayler to hold and express the opinion that the Court had considered he had been guilty of perjury. He would now refer to Mr. Tayler's petition for a review of judgment. In that petition Mr. Tayler said as follows:—"All your petitioner now desires to do is to inform the Court that the statement put in and the evidence given by Enayut Hossein and his creatures are totally false". This was a statement of fact and was nothing more than what the Court had already decided in its judgment. Mr. Tayler's petition went on—"and was made and given without the approval, concurrence or knowledge of your petitioner, and in direct opposition to the instructions given by your petitioner to Enayut Hossein before his departure from India". Mr. Tayler said that the fabric of the defence set up by Enayut Hossein was directly contrary to the instructions he gave him before leaving for India. Mr. Tayler never disputed nor wished to dispute his liability for the money and when the action was brought against him, the defence set up by his agent was directly contrary to the written instructions which he had left behind him. Mr. Tayler, as far as he was aggrieved, was satisfied by the statement that the Chief Justice had not made any imputation of moral fraud against him, and he accordingly bowed to the judgment. The Court allowed the proceedings for review of judgment to go on and Mr. Tayler fully believed that some justice would be done him in that way. He had put in a petition which he had verified by affidavit, praying that the words used in the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Dwarkanath Mitter might be in some way retracted or modified. This might have been done without detracting from the gravity of the judgment in any way. The course of justice did not require that the words should be repeated and though the Court was right when it said that it could not go on to a review of judgment in a case where the party applying to the Court did not express himself aggrieved at the decree, the Court might have done something for the reputation of Mr. Tayler by retracting or modifying the remarks which had been made against him. That might be done by stating that the fraud imputed to Mr. Tayler was fraud committed by Mr. Tayler's agent in his absence. In the judgment of Messrs. Norman and Loch, in the Ticaree case, words which were used in the judgment were afterwards modified, and the same might very well have been done in this case. Mr. Tayler could not be considered to be an active party to the perpetration of the fraud as he was absent in England at the time, and when the negotiations were going on with Ahmedoollah, Mr. Tayler was only constructively negotiating with him through his agent Enayut Hossein and not actively. Mr. Paul then submitted that in order to correct what was found to be an error in a judgment it was not necessary that there should be a review of judgment, and the Court, in the case of an error in a judgment which was admitted in itself to be a correct judgment, had power to rectify the error, by retracting or modifying the expression to which exception had been taken. If a date in judgment was found to be wrong or the names of parties were declared wrongly or a genealogical tree was not properly placed in the judgment, it would not be necessary to apply for a review of judgment in order to correct them. His Lordship the Chief Justice in refusing the application for a review of judgment said: "It appears to me that there is no ground for reviewing the judgment. I have read very carefully the judgment which I delivered in this case, and see nothing in it which I can retract. I did remark upon the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, but abstained from expressing any opinion as to whether there was any fraudulent concealment on the part of Mr. Tayler". In the course of Mr. Justice Mitter's judgment on the same application, he said:—"I wish to add, however, that I should not be justified in withdrawing the remarks in question upon an ex parte proceeding of this kind. Enayut Hossein is not before the Court, and so far as the the plaintiff is concerned she is in no way interested in opposing this application, inasmuch as the petitioner is not seeking for any interference with the decree which had been passed in her favour." If this were to be the case, it would be impossible for a person to obtain redress for injuries of this kind, if the other person were out of the jurisdiction of the Court or transported beyond the seas. Why was Mr. Justice Mitter so careful of the reputation of Enayut Hossein? If these proceedings were ex parte there were no grounds to affect Enayut Hossein's character; why should he reject the petition? Why should the Court express no opinion on evidence before it? Nobody asked Mr. Justice Mitter to hold Enayut Hossein guilty of the serious offence. How could a prosecution have benefited Tayler when the Chief Justice had already stigmatised Enayut Hossein as guilty of a falsehood, and when Enayut Hossein was at that very time undergoing a sentence of imprisonment for frauds perpetrated against Mr. Tayler? Why should he be put to these great expenses? Surely it would have been sufficient for Mr. Justice Mitter to have said that during Mr. Tayler's absence this fraud was committed by his agent. It does not matter whether Mr. Justice Mitter believed Kelly or not; it is sufficient that Kelly took the responsibility himself; he admitted that Mr. Tayler had had no hand in the fraud; this was evidence prima facie. Many European gentlemen had to rely on their agents for native contracts. It was very good advice of Mr. Justice Mitter's that Mr. Kelly should have known what was in the statement, but that advice was impracticable. Mr. Tayler was deeply aggrieved. The reasons of Mr. Justice Mitter were not satisfactory; if it was intended to charge Mr. Tayler with personal fraud, there was not a tittle of evidence to support the accusation. Had he put his grievance in a short, clear, logical way he might have cleared his character; but he went into the hyperboles censured by the Chief Justice. Mr. Tayler was more sensitive on account of the Chief Justice's observations. The Chief Justice had delivered the judgment from an attacking point of view. He felt that a colleague had been attacked. Here is a proof of the evil of the prosecutor being the Judge. The Chief Justice considered Mr. Tayler's insolence and the insult offered to Mr. Justice Mitter, but he forgot Mr. Tayler's grievance. Mr. Tayler, being a man of some historic reputation, perhaps an unfortunate man, but a man of some accomplishments, though from the time he took to being Vakil, he acted very unfortunately, felt deeply the attack on his character, having descended from his high position; there was, therefore, some extenuation for his offence, not perhaps sufficient to stop the Chief Justice's judgment, but sufficient to mitigate the blame and lessen his degradation.

Mr. Paul then turned to the subject of the opinion which had been formed as to the severity of his Lordship's sentence, and went on to say that he submitted, with all due respect for Mr. Justice Mitter, and to the Court, that in his view the reasons which had been given for the view which had been expressed of Mr. Tayler's conduct by Mr. Justice Mitter were not correct, and that gentleman had every right and reason to complain of having been adjudged guilty of fraud without any evidence to support that view, and he also had a right to complain that when he presented his petition for a review of judgment, the Judge refused to retract or modify one single word which he had used. All these circumstances might be urged in extenuation of the conduct of Mr. Tayler. Mr. Tayler had committed a very foolish act, doubtless, in appealing to the papers, but the Court must look to the provocation he had received. There was no doubt that Mr. Tayler had a grievance, and if he had proceeded to vindicate his character in a proper way, it was not impossible to say that public sympathy might not have gone with him.

With regard to the second point of the same subject, the allegation that the Chief Justice had turned every point that could be turned against Mr. Tayler with great severity and bitterness, Mr.

In the matter of BANKS AND FENWICK.

Paul proceeded to justify these remarks. With regard to the judgment itself if the Chief Justice thinks that the two cases of the Rupee of Tekaree and of Zahooroonissa had such connection as to make it proper to introduce the point into his judgment respecting the maid, there is some reason, for "Curiosity" in his letter deeming them to be connected cases.

As to the observation made by your Lordship on the statement in the 1st letter and the petition of review and Mr. Tayler's oral explanation, I cannot help thinking your Lordship has misapprehended Mr. Tayler's meaning. I believe Mr. Tayler meant to say that if Mr. Justice Mitter had based his judgment on the hypothetical case of fraud he would have had nothing to say, and not that if the Chief Justice had agreed with Mr. Justice Mitter then he would have had no ground of complaint. The plea as to whether there was a fraud is one thing, that Mr. Tayler was the author of it is quite another. Mr. Tayler did not attack at all the judgment of Judges Norman and Loch. I think the attribution of degraded cowardice conveyed by your Lordship was not founded on the facts of the case. Tayler had no ground of complaint against your Lordship, and that was the reason he did not attack you. It was not because your position rendered you unassailable.

[MACPHERSON, J.—Why are you arguing on Mr. Tayler's case? Is it with the view of showing that the article in the Englishman of the 26th April is correct in facts.]

Yes, my Lord.

[MACPHERSON, J.—That the judgment of the Chief Justice was a vindictive judgment.]

No, not with that view, but that it was an unnecessarily severe judgment.

[MACPHERSON, J.—The imputation in the article is that the sentence was a vindictive one. The wording of the paragraph is not that the sentence was severe, but that it was cruel.]

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE said that the word "cruel" imputed a wish to cause pain.]

That, I submit, is not the meaning which the word is intended to convey.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—If the remark was merely that the judgment was a severe one, it would be no contempt. That would only be fair criticism.]

Mr. Paul said that he was placed in a very peculiar position. There was not the slightest intention to cast an imputation on his Lordship, but the whole case had turned on a misunderstanding which had unfortunately arisen. Where the word "cruel" was used, it only meant to express harshness and severity and nothing more.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—The article says that I knew of Mr. Tayler's bad state of health. That I did not know; all that I did know was that he was suffering from gout, and as I had shortly before that seen him in society and knew that he was able to make a journey to Patna, I did not know he was suffering from anything else than a simple attack of gout. I knew nothing of what was stated in the medical certificate until after the judgment had been delivered.]

Your Lordship comes to the conclusion that this article is intended to charge you with cruelty.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—If the word only means severe I do not complain.]

Mr. Paul said that the word "cruel" in the articles must be taken in connection with the words which followed it. In one part of the article the sentence is called a cruel one, in the next paragraph the words "the harshness of the sentence" occur, and a little lower down there are the words "cruel severity". Captain Fenwick never intended that the word "cruel" should be used in the bad sense which had been imputed to the words and he said so now publicly through him (Mr. Paul). He hoped the Court would not construe the word "cruel" in that bad sense.

[MACPHERSON, J.—That is the ordinary meaning of the word.]

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—The meaning of the word cruel is a pleasure to inflict pain.]

How could it be imputed that your Lordship would take pleasure in inflicting punishment?

[MACPHERSON, J.—The question is whether that was not imputed.]

I submit it was not. All that it was meant to express was that the sentence was a severe one—a very severe one.

In the matter of BANKS AND FENWICK.

[MACPHERSON, J.—There could be no objection to having it said that the sentence passed was a very severe one.]

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—If it is said that the word was not intended to be used in any bad sense, I am willing to accept that statement.]

I now state on behalf of Captain Fenwick that the word was not intended to be so construed.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—I am ready to hear the rest of your argument, and will accept Captain Fenwick's statement. If the charge had been only that my sentence was a severe one, none of these proceedings would have been taken.]

Your Lordship's mind was so imbued with indignation that the other matters did not strike you. If it were not the intention of Captain Fenwick to say that you were guilty of deliberate cruelty, you will be satisfied then? I think I can prove that the use of the word all through the articles would be inconsistent with such an intention. He does not call you cruel, which might have the sense imputed, but calls the sentence cruel when the word could only mean, at the most, extremely harsh and severe.

To go on with Mr. Tayler's case. No charge was made, merely an inference. I don't think the charge is fair that he attempted to put aside former judgments, because it does not arise out of the case, and that after Messrs. Norman and Loch had acquitted him; but to add a sting you urge that the affidavit was irregularly taken. Surely that did not fairly arise. That was very severe and should not have been adverted to. I hope I do not give offence, but I must express my opinion.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—I do not look upon anything you say as an offence. I give you full liberty and I hope you will not restrict yourself from the fear of offending.]

Mr. Paul then resumed and again ran over the arguments as to the Chief Justice's judgment having been very severe. In that judgment Mr. Tayler was identified with all the acts of Enayut Hossein; he was actively guilty of fraud and taunted with having tried a new way to pay old debts, though he was absent from the country at the time and denied all knowledge of the matter. He said that no one had ever yet come into Court without one scrap of anything, without one scintilla of extenuation in his favour. Yet none appeared in the judgment, and on those grounds it was very severe. The Chief Justice had no right to go back into Mr. Tayler's previous history which was not in this case. That was another reason why it was severe. The Chief Justice knew Mr. Tayler was suffering from gout, which at his advanced age was very virulent, and that again made the judgment most severe or cruel in its least offensive sense. That word must be taken with the subsequent context, which shows what the animus was, "We do not defend what Mr. Tayler wrote, but we do protest," etc. If the editor did not defend Mr. Tayler he could not mean that the judgment was cruel in its worst sense.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—If he meant that the object of the Judge was to give pain and not to administer justice, then I understand the word cruel.]

No, my Lord, Captain Fenwick imputed no facts to show there were private feelings.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—What does "Now you rave or must intend revenge" mean?]

[MACPHERSON, J.—This would appear to be vindictive.]

Inasmuch as the article professes to be bona fide the word "cruel" cannot bear that character.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Then why was the quotation altered in one instance to suit Mr. Tayler's case and not in the word "revenge."]

You see, my Lords, were this case before a Jury then we could see how ordinary minds would construe the word. As to me I do not know what it meant; I would ask how many men would have known what it meant. I will, however, submit that no facts are mentioned from which malice could be imputed. When flattering eulogiums precede, why should such imputations of malice be made? They are wholly inconsistent with such an imputation.

Mr. Paul then read the following paragraph from the Chief Justice's judgment: "I am an unflinching advocate of the liberty of the press. I believe that its freedom is one of the main bulwarks of the rights of the people. I claim no exemption as regards my public acts from the most rigid scrutiny and the most unsparing criticism. All I claim is that there shall be no misrepresentation and no wilful or unfair concealment of facts; and that those who deny infallibility, to the Judges shall not claim infallibility for themselves. I have had no cause to complain of the public press since I have been in this country. Speaking generally, I believe it to be fair, independent and impartial. There has not, I believe, been a single criminal prosecution against a newspaper since I have had the honour to hold the office of Chief Justice, and there have been only one or two private actions for libel. The press in this country addresses itself for the most part to readers of education and intelligence, men who judge and form opinions for themselves. The press is fair, it is not scurrilous; the public are not captious; and public men do not object to have their public acts freely discussed and fairly criticised. Our Courts, therefore, are generally free from complaints against the press, either civil or criminal, on the ground of defamation".

He continued: Captain Fenwick had not sinned in any way against that statement. No false facts had been stated in the article in the newspaper, and the only thing to be regretted was the use of an unfortunate word in it, to which a meaning had been given which it was never intended that word should convey and which it did not and could not properly convey. It was a very gratifying circumstance that, throughout all these proceedings, his Lordship's general opinion of the press was favourable and also, as would be seen from this very article, the general opinion of the press with regard to his Lordship was also favourable. When the press, as his Lordship said, "addressed itself for the most part to readers of education and intelligence, men who judge and form opinions for themselves," it could not be said that his Lordship's reputation would suffer one iota from anything it might contain. He would mention that, since Captain Fenwick had assumed charge of the Englishman, a manifest change for the better had been observed in the conduct of the paper. And the scurrility with which some people had charged it had altogether disappeared. It was unfortunate that Mr. Tayler's wrongs should have been ventilated through the newspaper. Mr. Paul read other portions of the article of the 26th, and contended that there was nothing which could be objected to. He submitted that if Captain Fenwick was punished for contempt, that would not alter the opinion of the public as to the sentence on Mr. Tayler, but would only serve to cause Captain Fenwick to be considered a martyr in a cause of public benefit.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—My object is not punishment but to vindicate the action taken by the Court. In showing these articles to be a contempt of Court, I do not mean that there is any moral delinquency on the part of Captain Fenwick, as I thought there was in Mr. Tayler's case.]

Mr. Kennedy.—Under these circumstances, I don't think we should be justified in further taking up the time of the Court.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—This is not an attack upon the liberty of the press. All I want to show is that, if anonymous letters are sent to the press containing false statements, the press is responsible for them, if the name of the author is not given up.]

Mr. Kennedy.—Your Lordship has said that it is not your intention to punish Captain Fenwick.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—No, not after what Mr. Paul has said. All I want is to explain my reasons for the course which has been adopted.]

Mr. Paul.—With regard to the word "raise" in the letter of "Bystander"—

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—I don't think Captain Fenwick was the author of that anonymous letter.]

Mr. Paul.—No, my Lord, he was not.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—He has, however, taken the responsibility upon himself, but the letter is written in a style which I do not think would come from Captain Fenwick.]

Captain Fenwick very properly submitted to the Court, when the Court first expressed its opinion that receiving subscriptions was a contempt, by declining to receive any more, and he has now very properly explained that the language which was supposed to cast imputations on the motives of the Chief Justice was not so intended.

In the matter of BANKS AND FENWICK.

All I mean to contend is that false statements published in newspapers are not fair criticisms. I have no intention of interfering with the right of appeal to the press, but no one has a right of appeal to the press by bringing false accusations founded on wilful mis-statements.

Mr. Kennedy.—As your Lordship had expressed your intention not to punish, I have no right to take up the time of the Court any longer.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—I will hear you on the point as to whether the articles are contempts. If I had waited to proceed by indictment before proceedings were taken, all the mischief, which I wished to prevent, would have been done; and in Mr. Tayler's case, he would have gone to England if instant and summary measures had not been taken, and would have left the printer and publisher of the paper to be alone responsible.]

Mr. Paul asked whether their Lordships held that in any case it would not be right to open a subscription for the purpose of obtaining a demonstration of public opinion.

[MACPHERSON, J.—That depends very much on the way in which it is done. It is just as easy to write pointedly without being defamatory. If, however, you wish to hear the decision of the Court you had better resume your argument.]

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—And let everything which has been said be withdrawn.]

Mr. Paul.—As I understand, any further argument on the matter would be of no use. If the Court is satisfied that no imputations were intended, I do not see the good of any further argument.

Mr. Kennedy.—I don't understand the Court to say that in every case a demonstration, got up in order to obtain an expression of public opinion, would be a contempt.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—No.]

Mr. Kennedy.—Suppose in a case of an encroachment on the liberty of a subject by a Judge, it could not be said that it would be unjustifiable, for those who thought their liberties had been encroached upon, to come forward and give a public expression of their opinion or to support it by subscription.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—No; but I hold this to be a contempt as it contained a threat.]

Mr. Paul said there was nothing to be gained by going on any further. He begged to thank the Court, on behalf of Mr. Kennedy and himself for the patient hearing that had been given.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—The Court would have been prepared to decide that these articles are a contempt, but under all the circumstances, and as all imputations of motives have been disclaimed, and Captain Fenwick having submitted to the Court when the Rule was issued, the Rule will not be carried any farther, but will be discharged.]

MACPHERSON, J.—I also, as far as the case has gone, was prepared to decide that the Court has power to proceed in this matter by way of contempt, and also that there have been two contempts of Court. As regards the power of the Court to proceed by way of contempt, even when the contempt is not committed in Court or during the pendency of a suit, that point was fully settled in the case of *Mr. Piffard and Captain Francis which was tried before a Bench of eleven Judges. In that case Captain Francis, who was a stranger to the Court, was brought up for contempt which consisted in delivering or attempting to deliver at a Judge's house a message relating to what had occurred in Court between a Judge and Mr. Piffard. In that case Mr. Bell argued that the Court had no power to deal with the matter which took place out of Court, but out of the eleven Judges sitting, nine held that to proceed by way of contempt was a proper way of dealing with the case. A decision of such a number of Judges quite settles the question as far as a Division Bench of two Judges is concerned. Mr. Piffard's case was quite different, as he was an Advocate of the Court.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—I may say that, in my opinion, Captain Fenwick has adopted a very honourable and proper course in this matter by avowing himself to be responsible for the articles which have appeared, and thus taking the responsibility off the shoulders of the printer and publisher who had nothing to do with it. It would have given me much pain if I had been obliged to proceed against the printer and publisher. I also think that Captain Fenwick has adopted a very proper course in having, through Mr. Paul, withdrawn all imputations of improper motives on the part of the Chief Justice, and in having explained that the word "cruelty" was not intended in any bad sense, but merely as meaning severity. Captain Fenwick not having any such intention, although the word was susceptible of bearing such a meaning, has done himself honour by expressing that he had no such intention. I repeat that the only object I had in taking summary measures against Mr. Tayler, was that he was about to leave for England, and if he had been allowed to go away, the printer and publisher of the paper would have been left responsible for his letters. I have already stated that I am an unflinching Advocate for the liberty of the Press, and I repeat what I said before, that I do not claim for myself any immunity from unsparring criticism for any of my public acts, but all I claim is that there shall be no wilful misrepresentation or concealment of facts which the person criticising knows to be altogether unfounded. It appears to me that the public Press as well as the Judges of the Court are all instruments for the public good, and, in my opinion, the more public men are submitted to public criticism the better for the public, provided that the criticism contains no misrepresentations of facts or undue concealment. With this explanation, I order the Rule to be discharged.

* (1863) 1 Hydr 72; 2 Celebrated Trials 1.

Rule discharged.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.
CRIMINAL REVISION NO. 158 OF 1918.
March 16, 1918.

*Present:—*Mr. Justice Piggott.

EMPEROR—APPELLANT

versus

BHAGWANI ACCUSED—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 423, 438, 439—Trial of two accused for kidnapping—Appeal by one—Conviction set aside and commitment to Sessions ordered—Commitment of non-appealing accused by Trial Magistrate, legality of—Reference to High Court—Revision.

Two persons were tried and convicted by a Magistrate for an offence under section 363 of the Penal Code. On an appeal by one of them, the Sessions Judge set aside the conviction and sentence and ordered the appellant to be committed for trial on a properly framed charge under section 366 of the Penal Code. The case of the other accused was referred to the High Court for the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction. While the reference was pending before the High Court, the Trial Magistrate proceeded to pass an order of commitment against both the accused.

Held, that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to pass the order of commitment while the conviction and sentence against one of the accused on his trial under section 366 of the Penal Code remained standing, and that the order was, therefore, illegal and must be set aside. [p. 146, col. 2; p. 147, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Gorakhpur.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Sessions Judge has been quite right to refer this case. The proceedings in the Magistrate's Court have been distinctly irregular. Two persons were sent up for trial, Achuta and Musammatt Bhagwani, in connection with an alleged offence of kidnapping under section 363 of the Indian Penal Code. The Magistrate framed the charge under that section, convicted both accused and sentenced them to rigorous imprisonment for eighteen months. Achuta appealed against his conviction, but Musammatt Bhagwani did not. The learned Sessions Judge had jurisdiction to deal with the case of Achuta under section 423 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and he accordingly set aside the conviction and sentence and ordered Achuta to be committed for trial on a properly framed charge under section 366 of the Indian Penal Code; he being of opinion that the offence disclosed by the evidence, if committed, fell under that section and was exclusively triable by the Court of Session. The case of Musammatt Bhagwani, who had not appealed, could only be referred to this Court for the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction. In the meantime, while the reference of the learned Sessions Judge was pending before this Court, the Magistrate has proceeded to pass an order of commitment against both Achuta and Musammatt Bhagwani which he had not jurisdiction to do while the conviction and sentence against that accused person on her trial under section 363 of the Indian Penal Code remained standing. Taking up the matter now in revision I set aside the conviction and sentence against Musamat Bhagwani under section 363 of the Indian Penal Code; I also set aside as irregular the commitment order which has been passed against this accused but I direct that, she be committed to the Sessions Court for trial so that she may be tried along with the other accused Achuta on a properly framed charge under section 366 or 366/109 of the Indian Penal Code.

Commitment ordered.

CRIMINAL MISCELLANEOUS PETITION NO. 466
OF 1917.

February 14, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim and Mr. Justice Napier.

KOMPELLA ANANTARAMAYYA—COUNTER-PETITIONER

versus

CHIKKATLA TUKKADU—PETITIONER—
RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction for prosecution for perjury—Appellate Court, power of, to accord sanction as for offence committed before it—'In relation to any proceeding in any Court', meaning of—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 193—Sub-Magistrate, Court of, whether 'subordinate' to Court of Joint Magistrate.

A Sub-Magistrate is 'subordinate' to the District Magistrate within the meaning of section 195, Criminal Procedure Code, and is not subordinate to a Joint Magistrate who hears appeals from orders of Sub-Magistrates only in such cases as are made over to him by the District Magistrate. [p. 147, col. 2.]

Broma Variar v. Emperor, 26 M. 656; 2 Weir 202 (F. B.), followed.

An Appellate Court cannot accord sanction for prosecution of a person for false statements made in his deposition before the Trial Court on the ground that the offence of perjury was again committed before the Appellate Court with reference to that very deposition. The offence is complete when the evidence is given and it cannot be said to be repeated afterwards because there is an appeal. [p. 148, col. 2.]

The words 'in relation to any proceeding in any Court' have reference to the original trial of the suit or the criminal case. [p. 148, col. 2.]

Bhadesar Tewari v. Kamta Prasad, 18 Ind. Cas. 271; 35 A. 90, 11 A. L. J. 11; 14 Cr. L. J. 47, dissented from.

Petition praying that in the circumstances stated therein, the High Court will be pleased to revise the order of the Court of Session of Godavari Division at Rajahmundry, in Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 23 of 1917, confirming the order of sanction granted by the Joint Magistrate, Rajahmundry, in Miscellaneous Petition No. 1 of 1917 on his file.

Mr. G. Venkataramiah, for the Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor and Mr. K. Ramanatha Shenai, for the Crown.

ORDER.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—It is unnecessary in this matter to repeat the entire history. When the application for sanction for perjury was made to the Sub-Magistrate before whom the petitioners had given evidence, he granted the sanction with reference to a particular statement made by the petitioner. That order was set aside by the Joint Magistrate, as in his opinion, the order granting sanction was wanting in definiteness. But he granted sanction with reference to another statement made by the petitioner before the same Sub-Magistrate. It appears that the respondent had applied for sanction with reference to the very statement with respect to which sanction was ultimately granted by the Joint Magistrate, Mr. Fotheringham; but the Sub-Magistrate instead of granting sanction with reference to that statement, granted sanction with reference to another statement; and Mr. Fotheringham, as already stated, set aside that order on the ground that it was vague.

The question of law arises whether the Joint Magistrate had jurisdiction to grant sanction when he did not try the case himself and whether his Court was a superior Court within the meaning of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It has been ruled in this Court that a Sub-Magistrate is subordinate to the District Magistrate, and is not subordinate to a Joint Magistrate who hears appeals from orders of Sub-Magistrates only in such cases as are made over to him by the District Magistrate. [Broma Variar v. Emperor (1).]

(1) 26 M. 656; 2 Weir 202 (F. B.).

KOMPELLA ANANTARAMAYYA v. CHIKKATLA TUKKADU.

The Joint Magistrate in this case no doubt heard the appeal. The question for decision, however, is whether it could be said that the offence of perjury was committed in his Court or in relation to a proceeding in his Court; for section 195, clause (b), Criminal Procedure Code, says: "No Court shall take cognisance of any offence punishable under sections 193, 194 etc., of the Penal Code when such offence is committed in, or in relation to, any proceeding in any Court, except with the previous sanction, or on the complaint of such Court, or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate." The Joint Magistrate argues that the application was not made to him as "an appellate authority for evidence given before the Sub-Magistrate;" but "as the original authority for evidence in the appeal before his Court." That is practically the view of the law which has been taken by Banerji, J. of the Allahabad High Court in Bhadesar Tewari v. Kamta Prasad (2). But with all respect to that learned Judge, I am absolutely unable to agree with him. The case before him was not under clause (b) but under clause (c) which deals with offences of forgery and using forged documents, but its language, so far as the present question is concerned, is not substantially different from that of clause (b). Banerji, J., argues that though it could not be said that the document with respect to which sanction was applied for, was produced in the Appellate Court i.e., of the Additional Judge of Basti, it was given in evidence in the proceedings, that is, the appeal—before that Judge. If this interpretation was correct, then the offence of perjury or using a forged document would be committed, first in the Original Court and thereafter again, though the deponent or the party concerned did nothing fresh, excepting that appeal was filed against the judgment of lower Court before the Appellate Court—again in second appeal supposing that a second appeal was preferred in the case. Prima facie, dealing with clause (b), it seems to me to be straining the language of the Code too far to say that a witness commits perjury not only in the Court where he give his evidence but also in the Appellate Court where he did not give any evidence and where all that could be said, was that the evidence given by him was relied upon by the party interested. Neither he nor the party who called him, might even use that evidence but might impeach the decree of the lower Court on other grounds.

As regards the words "in relation to any proceeding in any Court," a man giving evidence cannot be said to have any proceeding other than the one in which he is giving evidence in contemplation. When a man gives evidence in a suit or in a criminal case, that evidence is given with reference to the original trial of that suit or criminal case. Then, as is pointed out by the learned Pleader for the petitioner, if the intention of the Legislature were that any Court hearing the appeal, whether it is a superior Court or not, could grant sanction because of the words "where such offence is committed in, or in relation to any proceeding in any Court," then it would have been superfluous on the part of the Legislature to add the words 'or to some other Court to which such Court is subordinate'. It seems to me that it would be going much further than the language of the section warrants to say that an offence like that of perjury or using false evidence is committed once in the Court of trial, afterwards in appeal with reference to that very evidence. The offence is complete when the evidence is given or the document is produced or put in evidence. It cannot be said to be repeated afterwards because there has been an appeal. It may be that the person who committed the offence, does not appeal at all. It is difficult to see how an offence committed in the Court of first instance can be said to be multiplied with the number of appeals that are filed.

I would, therefore, dissent from the judgment in Bhadesar Tewari v. Kamta Prasad (2). In this case the Sub-Magistrate's Court before which the offence is alleged to have been committed, was not a Court subordinate to that of a Joint Magistrate although the latter Court heard the appeal. For these reasons, I set aside the order of the Joint Magistrate dated 2nd June 1917 granting sanction.

ISHWAR PRASAD V. EMPEROR.

NAPIER, J.—I agree. I think that Banerji, J. in the case of Bhudesar Tewari v. Kamta Prasad (2) has been misled owing to his not having given due weight to the language of the section. His reasoning is as follows:—‘Similarly, the false evidence was given in a proceeding which was pending in the stage of appeal in the Additional Judge’s Court’. In a broad sense of the words this is true, because at the hearing of the appeal the false evidence would be read. But this is not what is required by the section. The section requires that such offence should be committed in, or in relation to, any proceeding in any Court and that the sanction should be granted by that Court or some other Court to which that Court is subordinate. So that, what is to be ascertained is not whether false evidence was given in a proceeding, but whether the offence was committed in a proceeding. Now as my learned brother has pointed out, the offence of giving false evidence is complete by the statement on oath or affirmation in a Court of facts which the Court finds to be false. And the fact that subsequently such a statement, having become part of the record, comes before an Appellate Court, cannot make this a second offence. The offence is complete when the evidence has been given and it seems to me impossible to say that however the proceedings came before the Appellate Court, whether by the appeal of the party who has himself given false evidence or by the appeal of a person in whose favour he gave false evidence or by the appeal of the opposite party or whether the person who gave false evidence in his appeal expresses through his Counselor, it might possibly be, himself has desire to withdraw that story, however it comes and whatever his attitude before the Appellate Court, the offence is re-committed in that Court. It seems to me that this contention must fail on the language of the section and that, therefore, the objection raised by the learned Vakil before us, must prevail. For these reasons I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 423, et. (b)—Appeal—Evidence omitted by lower Court—Re-trial, whether should be ordered—Procedure.

Where the only defect in the procedure of the Court of first instance is that certain evidence has not been brought upon the record which ought to have been there, it is quite unnecessary to do anything more than to have that evidence taken and brought upon the record. It is unnecessary to worry all the witnesses a second time and to waste public time in having them re-examined. [p. 149, col. 2; p. 150, col. 1.]

Criminal revision, from an order of the District Magistrate, Allahabad.

Mr. Satya Chandra Mukerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Ishwar Prasad has been convicted of an offence under section 411 of the Indian Penal Code and has been sentenced to a fine of Rs. 100 by a Magistrate of the second Class. He appealed against his conviction to the District Magistrate who has directed the case to be re-tried in another Court in accordance with law. It is within the Magistrate’s power to direct a re-trial under section 423, clause (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code. The grounds given by the District Magistrate for ordering a re-trial are as follows:—He says “that from its appearance the case would seem to have been hurriedly tried and one in which the evidence is deficient. In particular it is not clear why the evidence of the ekkawala who was present at the search, was not taken as he is one of the main witnesses whose evidence is intended by law to be of importance in a case of this type. The procedure adopted is open to criticism. It is necessary that the case should be re-tried.” If the only defect in the procedure of the Court of first instance is that certain evidence has not been brought upon the record which ought to have been there, then it seems to me it is quite unnecessary to do any more than to have that evidence taken and brought upon the record, It would be unnecessary to worry all the witnesses a second time and to waste public time in having them re-examined. It is not clear except for the above in what way the procedure of the first Court is open to criticism. There is no explanation by the District Magistrate in the matter. I, therefore, direct that the record be sent to him in order that he may point out in what way the procedure is open to criticism other than the fact that certain evidence has not been recorded.

[On receipt of the report of the District Magistrate his Lordship passed the following:]

ORDER—I have read the report of the District Magistrate. I do not think it is quite fair to the accused in the present case to direct his re-trial. There is only one witness left for examination and a few questions to be put to the Police Officer who conducted the case. I, therefore, allow the application to this extent that I set aside the order of the District Magistrate directing a re-trial. I direct the District Magistrate to summon the witnesses named by him in his report to examine them and after so doing, to decide the question of the applicant's innocence or guilt.

Application allowed.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 21 (9), 161—'Public servant', meaning of—Quarter Master's clerk, whether public servant—Taking illegal gratification in respect of official act—Offence.

The mere fact that a person is in the pay or service of Government is not enough to constitute him a public servant within the meaning of section 21 ninthly, of the Penal Code. He must also be an "officer" i. e., holder of some office. The office may be of dignity and importance or it may be humble; but whatever its nature, it is essential that the person holding the office should have in some degree delegated to him certain functions of Government. [p. 157, col. 1.]

A Quarter Master's clerk merely as such is not necessarily a public servant within the meaning of section 21 of the Penal Code, but a person who is otherwise an officer in the pay or service of Government, does not lose his status as a public servant if, while still such an officer, he is employed as a Quarter Master's clerk. [p. 157, col. 2.]

For the purposes of section 161 of the Penal Code, it is not necessary that at the time of the bribe-taking the accused person should be actually discharging the functions which constitute him a public servant; it is sufficient that he is a public servant and his act falls under one of the three clauses specified in the section. [p. 157, col. 2.]

Queen-Empress v. Zaharia, 9 P. R. 1898 Cr. app. proved.

Appeal from the order of the Special Magistrate, 1st Class at Ludhiana, dated the 8th November 1917, convicting the appellant.

FACTS of the case appear fully from the judgment.

The Hon'ble Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain, for the Appellant.—The appellant is charged with having sent out letters to Quarter Master's clerks offering to give them certain commissions in case they secured orders for his firm. The letter alleged to have been written by him is on the record but there is no proof of the receipt of that letter by the addressee; hence appellant cannot be said to have abetted the offence charged.

Even if the letter be held to have been received, no offence under section 161, Indian Penal Code, has been committed because a Quarter Master's clerk is not a "public servant" within the meaning of that term as defined in the Penal Code. The Quarter Master is given an allowance for getting his work done and employs some body to whom he pays the allowance. Bhagwati Sahai v. Emperor (1). The contract between the Quarter Master and his servants does not give the latter the status of public servants qua that particular office. (Army Regulations (1917) pages 52, 53.)

Mr. Herbert, (Assistant Legal Remembrancer), for the Crown—Appellant has been rightly convicted. Quarter Master's clerks are public servants as a matter of fact. Failing this appellant has committed an offence under another section. From the evidence it appears that the Quarter

AHAD SHAH v. EMPEROR.

Master's clerks are men in regiments and, therefore, public servants.

[RATTIGAN, C. J.—But is a rifleman a public servant within the meaning of the Penal Code?]

Mr. Herbert.—Yes, inasmuch as he is paid by Government.

[RATTIGAN, C. J.—Is that sufficient?]

Mr. Herbert.—Yes. (Section 21, Indian Penal Code: Nazamuddin v. Queen-Empress (2), and Army Regulations, Volume II, paragraph 676).

Section 161, Indian Penal Code, can be divided into 3 parts and the offence of the appellant falls within part 3, even if the argument advanced by his learned Counsel is correct. Queen-Empress v. Zaharia (3).

Bhagwati Sahai v. Emperor (1), does not lay down a sound proposition of law. Section 21, Indian Penal Code, does not require that the whole of the pay should be paid by Government.

If I have failed to convince your Lordships on either of these points, then I submit that appellant has committed an offence under section 163, Indian Penal Code, which does not require that the person should be a public servant. The bribe was given to the clerk to induce the Quarter Master who is admittedly a public servant. See section 21 (2) or (9).

The Hon'ble Mr. Fazl-i-Husain, in reply.—In order to come within the last 2 lines of section 21 (9), the person must be paid by Government. There should be a priority of contract between him and Government. If there is an intermediary who is employing the servant as his own, that servant would not be a Government servant. Quarter Master's clerks are sometimes designated enrolled clerks or as civilian clerks. The office need not necessarily be held by a soldier. The man is employed only temporarily if he agrees he may be enrolled, otherwise not.

Similar allowances are given to Quarter Masters for shoeing horses, repairs of saddles, etc. Has he in this case to refund the balance?

[RATTIGAN, C. J.—That would depend on the terms in which that allowance is given.]

Hon'ble Mr. Fazl-i-Husain.—I submit that on the materials before your Lordships a Quarter Master's clerk cannot be said to be a public servant. He is not entrusted with any public duty.

While a person in the unit draws his pay directly from Government, those men who get allowances do not—these allowances are paid to Adjutants and Quarter Masters who sign acknowledgments for them. Vide, Monthly Account Bill Form No. 7. Therefore, a person engaged by the Officer Commanding, is not a public servant. Modun Mohun, In the matter of the petition of (4), Queen v. Nachimuttu (5), Reg. v. Ramajirav Jirbajirav (6), cited in Nazamuddin v. Queen-Empress, (2). See Reg. v. Ramajirav Jirbajirav (6), for definition of "officer."

The learned Government Advocate assumes that Quarter Master's clerks are necessarily sepoys.

[LE ROSSIGNOL, J.—Is every sepoy an officer in service or pay of Government?]

Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain.—In case it is held that the Quarter Master's clerk is a sepoy, the question is in which capacity was he approached. Was it in his capacity as rifleman or as Quarter Master's clerk? Refers to Queen Empress v. Zaharia (3).

With regard to the 3rd alternative of the learned Government Advocate I submit that section 163, Indian Penal Code should be read along with section 161. No offence can be committed under section 163 unless by virtue of personal influence. It is essential to specify by whom is this personal influence exercised and on whom: Queen v. Setul Chunder Bagchee (7). It is not stated who was the particular official whom he wanted to influence who was the person who was asked to exercise the influence. (Dr. Gour's Commentary on the Penal Code, Volume I, paragraphs 1436, 1437.)

the best light, would he be using his personal influence ?

Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain.—Personal influence would only come in in the case of a friend as distinguished from official recommendation.

But whom was he influencing? It has been stated that the work of giving contracts is entrusted to the Officer Commanding. The charge must have stated who was the person sought to be influenced.

[LeROSSIGNOL, J.—At any rate your client thought the Quarter Master's clerk could influence the Quarter Master.]

Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain.—In order to bring the case under section 163 it would be necessary to frame a proper charge.

The Court having reserved judgment on the point, Counsel proceeded to discuss the case on the merits.

JUDGMENT.—Khwaja Ahad Shah, Managing Proprietor of the firm of "Ahad Shaw Muhammad Shaw and Company," described as Military and Police Contractors, Ludhiana, was tried by Mr. D. J. Boyd, Special Magistrate of the First Class at Ludhiana upon charges of abetting offences punishable under section 161, Indian Penal Code. There were three separate trials and each resulted in a conviction of the accused. In trial No. 6/2 he was sentenced under sections 161/116, Indian Penal Code to three months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500, or in default three months further rigorous imprisonment; in trial No. 7/2 he was sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000 or in default three months' rigorous imprisonment and in trial No. 8/2 he was sentenced on each of the two charges to six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000, or in default three months' rigorous imprisonment. It was directed by the Magistrate that the substantive terms of imprisonment in this case were to run concurrently and that the substantive term of imprisonment in trial No. 7/2 was to commence on the expiry of the sentence in trial No. 8/2 and that the substantive term of imprisonment in trial No. 6/2 was to commence after the expiry of the sentences in the other two trials.

Ahad Shah appealed from his convictions and sentences to the Sessions Judge of Ludhiana but his appeals were transferred to this Court by order of the Chief Judge and have been heard by this Bench. Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain appearing on behalf of the appellant and Mr. Herbert, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

The general features of the case for the prosecution are similar and the line of defence is identical in all three cases, and it will be convenient, therefore, in this judgment to dispose of all the appeals.

The principal witness in the case is Lachhman Das, late Head Clerk of the appellant's firm, and according to him, Ahad Shah early in 1917 suggested to him the idea of approaching Quarter Master's clerks in various regiments, with a view to securing from them, by tempting offers of commission orders for supplies of various articles required by the regiments to which they were attached. Lachhman Das says that he himself disapproved of the idea, but Ahad Shah reassured him and undertook to bear all responsibility. The result of this conversation was that about the middle of April a large number of typed circulars (of which Exhibit P. No 1 is a sample) were prepared by Lachhman Das from a vernacular draft given to him by Ahad Shah, were duly signed by the latter and issued broadcast to Quarter Master's clerks throughout the Punjab and elsewhere. Entries relating to the issue of these notices were made by Lachhman Das in the Despatch Register of the firm under dates 18th, 21st and 22nd April 1917 (Serial Nos. 2940, 2985 and 3009 of the said Register).

The circular letters were typed on paper bearing the name of the firm "Ahmad Shaw-Muhammad Shaw and Company" printed thereon in red ink: and after stating that "owing to the Great War we now consider it our bounden duty, much more compared with the peace time, to supply to the Indian Army all articles such as Water Bottles, Haversacks," etc., proceeded, "we beg to inform you that should you be so kind as to secure for us orders for your and other regiments for the supply of the above with your kind support and help, we shall be glad to pay you a commission of Rs. 2 per cent. in large orders and Rs. 3-2-0 per cent. on small orders, one-half in advance on receipt of orders and the remaining half on payment of our bill, as we are doing to some of our patrons. Hoping to be favoured with your kind reply which will greatly oblige.

"Your sincerely
(Signature said to be 'Ahad Shah')

The appellant would not in the Court below admit that the signature on such of these circular letters as were produced at the trial, was his but he admitted that it was "very like" his real signature and that he was not prepared to deny that it was his. There is evidence on the record to prove that he actually signed these letters, and a comparison of the signatures thereon with the signatures admitted by appellants can leave no doubt whatever that the former are not forgeries. At the hearing before us Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain made no attempt to dispute the genuineness of the signatures and his arguments were based on the assumption that the appellant had, in fact, signed the letters but that he had done so in ignorance of the contents of the letters and as a victim of a fraud practised upon him by Lachhman Das. Viewed in the light of these subsequent admissions, the original reluctance of the appellant to admit the genuineness of signatures which he had not the courage to disclaim as forgeries, must be regarded as a fact not without some significance.

The circular letter addressed to all and sundry Quarter Master's clerk, met with varying fortunes. Some reached the hands of the persons for whom they were intended, others fell into the hands of superior officers, with the result that the firm received indignant letters of remonstrance and protest. Thus on the 27th April 1917 Captain J. E. Waller of the 45th Rattray Sikhs, wrote to the firm informing them that he regarded their letter No. 3009, dated 22nd April 1917 and addressed to the Quarter Master's clerk, of his regiment "as an insult," that he retained their letter and intended to put it either into the hands of the Police or better still to send it round to various "Officers Commanding Depots," in order to ensure that any trade the firm had obtained, should be discontinued and that he could assure the firm that they would never obtain any further orders from the 45th Rattray Sikhs, (Exhibit P. 43B).

To this letter a reply in type (and on paper with the name and description of the firm printed on it in red ink) was despatched on the 1st May 1917 (Exhibit P. 43C). It is couched in very apologetic terms and strenuously disclaims any intention on the part of the firm to "bribe" the clerk and explains that as the firm had great difficulty now-a-days in finding out the addresses of various regiments "owing to the non-printing of the Army Lists" the letter in question "was written with a view that if any one requires any articles we can be ordered to supply or furnished with addresses and we shall be glad to pay for such addresses." This and similar letters of apology (see Exhibit P. 44) purport to bear the signature of appellant, and here again it was not contended before us that the signatures were not genuine. As a matter of fact this contention could hardly be put forward in the face of the evidence given by Lala Mangat Rai (defence witness No. 6) who asserts positively that the signatures on P. 43C and P. 44 are the appellant's.

Lachhman Das deposes that the circular letters and the letters of apology were typed by him under the instructions of appellant who supplied him with drafts to a similar purport, in Urdu which he translated into English, typed and placed before appellant for signature. As regards this part of the case, the defence as urged before us, is that appellant was duped into signing these letters by Lachhman Das who was acting in concert with appellant's bitter enemy, one Abdul Hai, a Ludhiana Barrister and Municipal Commissioner for the ruin of appellant and who was able to misrepresent the contents of the letters to appellant whose knowledge of English was of the very slightest. It is argued that appellant relied on the good faith of his Head Clerk and had at the time no one by him who could have been of assistance to him in translating for him the letters which that Head Clerk in betrayal of the confidence reposed in him by appellant, put up for the latter's signature.

So far as regards the general nature of the case for the prosecution and of the answer on behalf of the appellant. We shall now proceed to deal with the particular facts of each of the three cases to which we have referred at the commencement of our judgment.

(1) Trial No. 6/2 (Criminal Appeal No. 976 of 1917.)

In this case the charge against the Appellant was that "in or about the 21st April 1917 at Ludhiana you did send a letter No. £985, dated 21st April 1917, in which you offered a gratification to the Quarter Master's clerk, 26th Punjabis, a public servant, as a motive or reward for shewing to you favour in the exercise of his official functions and thereby committed an offence punishable under sections 161/116 of the Indian Penal Code."

Letter No. 2955 is Exhibit P. 1 on the record of this trial and is one of the circular typed letters purporting to be signed by appellant to which reference has been made above. It is not proved that this particular letter reached the addressee though it undoubtedly reached the hands of the latter's superior officers (see the evidence of Lieutenant Ravenhill, 23th Punjabis). Reserving for the moment other questions that arise in this and the other cases, we must accordingly hold that in any event the appellant cannot so far, as this case is concerned, be convicted of more than an attempt to commit an offence.

(2) Trial No. 7/2 (Criminal Appeal No. 974 of 1917.)

In this case the charge against the appellant runs as follows:—

"That you on or about the 12th day of May 1917 at Ludhiana did send the sum of rupees forty-one, annas eight to Hira Singh Thapar, Quarter Master's clerk, 2/9th Gurkha Rifles, Dehra Dun, a public servant as a motive or reward for shewing to you favour in the exercise of his official functions and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 161/109 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance."

The sum of Rs. 41-8 was sent by money-order (Exhibit P. 1 of this record) to Hira Singh on the 12th May 1917 and it is proved and not denied, that the amount was duly paid to him on the 14th May 1917. The name of the remitter is given in type as "Ahmed Shaw Muhammad Shaw and Company" and Lashh-man Das swears that he sent the money by this money-order under the instructions of the appellant. The latter admits that money-order issued by his firm used not to bear his signature but denies that he gave any instructions for this sum to be sent to Hira Singh. The prosecution allege that the said sum was sent to Hira Singh as a bribe (or commission) at the rate of Rs. 2 per cent. in respect of the order for 700 water-bottle at Rs. 3 each which appellant's firm received on the 19th April 1917 from the 2/9th Gurkha Rifles (Exhibit P. 8).

(3) Trial No. 8/2 (Criminal Appeal No. 975 of 1917.)

Appellant was in this case charged with two offences as follows:—

"First.—That you on or about the 11th day of April 1917 at Ludhiana did send the sum of rupees forty by money-order to Babu Piare Lal Sharma, Quarter Master's clerk 1/9th Gurkha Rifles, Dehra Dun, a public servant as a motive or reward for shewing to you favour in the exercise of his official functions and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 161/109 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance.

"Secondly.—That you on or about the 12th day of May 1917 at Ludhiana did send the sum of rupees sixty, annas five to Babu Piare Lal Sharma, Quarter Master's clerk, 1st Gurkha Rifles, a public servant as a motive or reward for shewing to you favour in the exercise of his official functions and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 161/109 of the Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance."

Here again it is amply proved and not now contested that these two sums of money were received by money-order by Piare Lal in April and May and that these money-orders bore in type as the name of the remitter the firm's designation "Ahad Shaw Muhammad Shaw and Company." It is alleged that the sum of Rs. 40 received in April was half the commission at 2 per cent. in an order of 1,000 water bottles at Rs. 4 each which had been sent to appellant's firm in January 1917 from 1/9th Gurkha Rifles and that the sum of Rs. 61 received in May represented the balance of the amount due as commission upon the said order and a sum of Rs. 21 due as commission at 1 per cent. on an order for 700 water bottles at Rs. 3 each received from the 2/9th Gurkha Rifles.

At the hearing before us the defence practically conceded all the facts as alleged by the prosecution and Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain for the appellant based his arguments on the assumption that circulars and letters had been issued to Quarter Master's clerks purporting to come from appellant's firm at Ludhiana and that sums of money had actually been sent by money orders also purporting to have been sent by the said firm to Piare Lal and Hira Singh. It was argued, however, that the appellant was the victim of a conspiracy between Abdul Hai, Lachhman Das, Muhammad Hussan and others whose object was to ruin appellant and his firm, that appellant owing to his ignorance of the English language fell into the trap which had been laid for him that the money order sent on the 12th May 1917 to Hira Singh and Piare Lal had been sent in reality by Abdul Hai through one Muhammadi, a menial servant employed by the Ludhiana Club, that in any event a Quarter Master's clerk is not "a public servant" as defined in section 21, Indian Penal Code, and that consequently no conviction could be had under section 161, Indian Penal Code, and finally that the mere sending of a circular through the post to the Quarter Master's clerk of the 26th Punjabis amounted to no more than a preparation to commit an offence and did not constitute an attempt to commit that offence. We proceed to deal with these points seriatim.

It is not denied by the learned Assistant Legal Remembrancer and amply established by the evidence that there has been much rivalry between Mr. Abdul Hai and the appellant and that they have for years past been on the worst possible terms. But the prosecution deny and we fail to find proof of any conspiracy between Abdul Hai and Lachhman Das of the kind suggested by the defence. The evidence adduced in proof of the conspiracy is of the flimsiest kind. It is referred to in detail in the judgment of the learned Magistrate and we have no hesitation in agreeing with him that it is "miserably poor evidence to prove a conspiracy between Abdul Hai and Lachhman Das". So far as we can see, Lachhman

Das was well treated by the appellant and had no motive for abetting an elaborate trap intended to ruin a man who had given him employment.

But even if such had been Lachhman Das' intention, we are not satisfied that he could have succeeded in effecting his object. Appellant may not be a man of much education and his knowledge of the English language may be limited, but it is evident that he knows his business and that he is not by any means so absolutely ignorant as not to be able to gather some sort of idea of a typed English letter dealing with matters connected with that business. We cannot, therefore, accept the argument that in the course of three days he affixed his signature to some 80 typed circular letters in blind ignorance of their contents and with simple child like confidence in the good faith of a clerk who (for some unknown reason) had suddenly developed an unusual thirst for correspondence. It is surely putting a premium on our credulity to ask us to believe that he signed these 80 circular letters in honest ignorance of their contents and without taking the trouble to find out the reason for this very unusual voluminous correspondence. As we have said, he is a practical man of business and we cannot believe that he would have signed some 80 letters, of the object of which he knew nothing, simply because he had some little difficulty in reading them. He has not pleaded that he asked Lachhman Das what those letters were about and that Lachhman Das misrepresented their contents to him. That might have been a plausible explanation, but it has not been put forward by the appellant and apparently his one hope of escaping responsibility for the issue of the letters lay in the half-hearted attempt he made to disown his signatures. But now that it has been admitted that he actually signed the letters, we have no doubt that he did so with full knowledge of their contents and that Lachhman Das' story is true that the letters were a mere translation into English of an Urdu draft prepared by the appellant. We are also satisfied that he was well aware of the nature and purport of the letters of apologies that were sent to the Commanding Officers who protested against the circular letters that had been addressed to the Quarter Master's clerks of their regiments.

The Magistrate has entirely disbelieved the evidence of Muhammadi, and the postal clerk, Ghulam Rasul, with regard to the issue of the money-orders to Piare Lal and Hira Singh on the 12th May and in our opinion their evidence was rightly discredited. It is improbable in itself and most unconvincing, and here again we see no reason to doubt the truth of Lachman Das' statement to the effect that these sums of money (as also the sum of Rs. 40 in April 1917) were sent with the knowledge and under the instructions of the appellant. Upon the merits, then we hold that the appellant authorised the issue of the circular letters to Quarter Master's clerks (including the issue of the letter to the Quarter Master's clerk of the 26th Punjabis) and of the money-orders of Rs. 40 and Rs. 60 5-0 to Piare Lal, and of Rs. 41 8-0 to Hira Singh and that these letters and sums of money were sent with the object of inducing the addressees and payees to do favour or service, or as a reward for having done such favour or service to appellant. But it has not been proved that the letter addressed to the Quarter Master's clerk of the 26th Punjabis ever reached the hands of the addressee or indeed that there is a Quarter Master's clerk attached to, or on the strength of that regiment. In these circumstances, we must hold that in this case the appellant cannot in any event be held guilty of anything more than an attempt to commit an offence. But we are clearly of opinion that by posting the letter to the Quarter Master's clerk of that regiment he did an act that amounted to an attempt to commit an offence and went beyond a mere preparation to commit an offence.

The question remains whether upon our findings the appellant has been guilty of any offence, and if so, of what? To answer this question we have first to consider whether a Quarter Master's clerk is a "public servant" within the meaning of section 21, Indian Penal Code. If he is, then undoubtedly the appellant abetted Hira Singh and Piare Lal in the commission of the offence punishable under section 161, Indian Penal Code, but as neither Hira Singh nor Piare Lal committed that offence, appellant would be punishable under sections 161/116, Indian Penal Code, and in respect of each such offence would be liable to nine months' rigorous imprisonment with or without fine in addition. In the third case (that relating to the letter addressed to the Quarter Master's clerk of the 26th Punjabis), the appellant would be guilty of an attempt to abet the offence under section 161, and as that offence was not actually committed, he would be liable under the combined effect of sections 116, 161 and 511, Indian Penal Code, to one-half of nine months' rigorous imprisonment with or without fine.

On the other hand if a Quarter Master's clerk is not a public servant as so defined, appellant would be guilty in the first two cases of offences punishable under sections 116/163, and in the third case of an offence punishable under sections 116/163/511, Indian Penal Code. In this latter event (i. e., if a Quarter Master's clerk is not himself a public servant) we are satisfied that appellant offered (and in the third case attempted to offer) a gratification to the Quarter Master's clerk in question as a motive or reward to him for inducing, by the exercise of the personal influence which he thought such clerk could exercise, a public servant (i. e., the Quarter Master of the particular regiment) in the exercise of official functions as such public servant to show favour to the appellant or to render or attempt to render the appellant any service with any public servant. In other words, he abetted, or (in the third case) attempted to abet the offence punishable under section 163, Indian Penal Code.

In the Magistrate's Court the question whether a Quarter Master's clerk was or was not a public servant, was not raised and it was assumed by the prosecution and the defence no less than by the Magistrate himself that he was a public servant, and we have no doubt that appellant when he authorised the issue of the circulars, regarded the addressees as public servants who were in a position to show him favour or do him a service. Before us, however, Mr. Fazl-i-Husain contends that a Quarter Master's clerk as such is nothing more than a mere personal assistant to the Quarter Master of the regiment and paid out of an allowance which the Quarter Master receives for the purpose of his office; that their appointment rests entirely with the Quarter Masters of regiments, and that civilians no less than soldiers and non commissioned Officers are eligible for appointment. Further, the learned Counsel has referred us to the evidence of Hira Singh, Piare Lal and Captain Duncan in support of his contention that a Quarter Master's clerk as such has no power to help or show favour to a contractor and that he is (in the word of Captain Duncan) "just a Babu," and has "no executive functions."

We are by no means satisfied that Mr. Fazl-i-Hussain's statement is correct that a Quarter Master's clerk is not paid by Government; that he is a mere supernumerary, not borne on the strength of a regiment and in the service of the Quarter Master rather than of the Government. Paragraph 676 of Volume II of the Army Regulations, India, seems to suggest the contrary. It provides that "soldiers will be employed as clerks in native cavalry and infantry regiments. If qualified soldiers are not forthcoming, suitable men to the number of six per regiment may be specially enrolled." But it is not enough that a person should be in the pay or service of Government to constitute him a public servant within the meaning of section 21 (ninthly) of the Indian Penal Code. He must also be an "Officer." That expression is not, of course, to be restricted to its colloquial meaning of a Commissioned or non-Commissioned Officer; it means a functionary or holder of some "officium" or office. The office may be one of dignity or importance; it may equally be humble. But whatever its nature, it is essential that the person holding the office, should have in some degree delegated to him certain functions of Government. As observed by West, J., in a case which is frequently cited in this connection, "an Officer is one to whom is delegated, by the supreme authority, some portion of its regulating and co-ercitive powers, or who is appointed to represent the State in its relations to individual subjects. This is the central idea; and applying it to the clause which we have to construe, we think that the word 'Officer' there means some person employed to exercise to some extent and in certain circumstances, a delegated function of Government. He is either himself armed with some authority or representative character, or his duties are immediately auxiliary to those of some one who is so armed." See Reg. v. Ramajirav Jivhajirav (6).

Can then a Quarter Master's clerk be said to be "an officer" as so defined? Captain Duncan in his evidence emphatically states that he has no executive functions, and Captain Waller, in his letter to appellant's firm (Exhibit P 43 B), asserts that "in no good Punjab Regiment has the Quarter Master's clerk the slightest say in the matter of advising or obtaining orders or contracts from any firm whatever." For the purposes of the case before us, then, we must assume that a Quarter Master's clerk as such, is just a Babu and no more "an officer" than a labourer or menial employed and paid by Government to do public work, see Queen v. Nachimuttu (5). But while upon the material before us we must hold that a Quarter Master's clerk merely as such is not necessarily a public servant within the meaning of section 21, Indian Penal Code, we are certainly not prepared to go further and hold that a person who is otherwise an officer in the pay or service of Government, loses his status as a public servant if, while still such an officer, he is employed as a Quarter Master's clerk. Hira Singh, for example, is a non-Commissioned Officer in the 2/9th Gurkha Rifles and as such in our opinion a public servant and nonetheless so, because for the time being he is employed as a Quarter Master's clerk. It has been held by this Court and we entirely agree, that for the purposes of section 161, Indian Penal Code, it is not necessary that at the time of the bribe-taking, the accused person should be actually discharging the functions which constitute him a public servant: it is sufficient that he is a public servant and his act falls under one of the three clauses specified in the section. [See Queen-Empress v. Zaharia (3).] So in the case of Hira Singh, though he was not at the time when the gratification was offered to him discharging the functions that constituted him a public servant he was nevertheless a public servant, whatever may have been the functions he was temporarily discharging at the time when the offence in respect of him was committed. In his case then (Trial No.

EMPEROR v. MAROTI TELI.

7/2, Criminal Appeal No. 974 of 1917) we must hold that the appellant in sending him Rs. 41-8-0 as a motive or reward for inducing him to do the appellant some favour in the exercise of his official functions or some service with a public servant (e.g., the Quarter Master of the Regiment) abetted the offence punishable under section 161, Indian Penal Code. As, however, the offence abetted was not committed, the appellant was guilty of the offence punishable under sections 116/161, Indian Penal Code. It may be urged that appellant was not aware that Hira Singh happened to be a non-Commissioned Officer and as such a public servant, and that he dealt with him merely as a Quarter Master's clerk. But it is to be remembered that appellant himself and his advisers were apparently under the impression that all Quarter Master's clerks were public servants, and that the objection that they are not, was not raised until the case came before this Court, and even then was not made one of the grounds of appeal. We cannot agree, therefore, that he has any cause of complaint because in one case his own impressions at the time when he committed the offence, have proved to be correct, though in the other cases the ingenuity of his learned Counsel in this Court has successfully discovered a belated technical plea in his favour. In Criminal Trial No. 8/2 (Criminal Appeal No. 975 of 1917) we must hold for the reasons given that the Quarter Master's clerk Piare Lal was not a public servant and that consequently the two offences which the appellant committed by sending money orders in April and May 1917 to Peare Lal fell within the purview of section 163, Indian Penal Code, and we accordingly convict the appellant under that section read with section 116.

In Criminal Trial No. 6/2 (Criminal Appeal No. 976 of 1917) the offence of which the appellant was guilty was one falling, under section 163 read with sections 116 and 511, Indian Penal Code, and it is under those sections that we convict him in this case.

Then remains the question of sentence. The offences of which the appellant has been found guilty, are exceedingly serious and their gravity is considerably enhanced when they are found to have been committed in critical times such as the present. On the other hand the appellant is an old man and in enfeebled health and though there is reason to believe that offences of this kind are by no means uncommon, it is to be remembered that this is the first case of the kind in which the person guilty of such offence has been prosecuted. Taking all the facts into consideration, we do not think it necessary on this occasion to impose a sentence of imprisonment upon the appellant and we think the ends of justice will be met if we direct as we hereby do that he pay a fine of Rs. 1,000 in respect of each of the four offences of which he has been convicted, viz., one offence in Criminal Appeal No. 974 of 1917; two offences in Criminal Appeal No. 975 of 1917 and one offence in Criminal Appeal No. 976 of 1917; and in default of payment of any one of the said fines, the appellant will have to undergo three months' simple imprisonment.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 19, cl. (xvii)—Petition of appeal by prisoner presented by his Pleader, whether requires to be stamped.

A petition of appeal presented by a prisoner not personally but through his Pleader is exempted from Court-fees under clause (xvii) of section 19 of the Court Fees Act.

Criminal revision on a report under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, made by the Sessions Judge, Wardha, dated the 30th October 1917.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference by the Sessions Judge under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, questioning the propriety of an order by the District Magistrate returning to the prisoner's Counsel an appeal presented on behalf of a prisoner in jail on the ground that the appeal petition was not stamped with a Court-fee stamp. The District Magistrate was called upon to show cause why his order should not be set aside and why he should not be directed to dispose of the appeal according to law with reference to clause XVII of section 19 of the Court Fees Act. The section and clause read together provide that "nothing contained in this Act shall render chargeable with any fee a petition by a prisoner or other person in duress or under restraint of any Court or of its officers." The District Magistrate supports his order as follows:—

"Interpreting the clause strictly I am of opinion that a petition by a Counsel on behalf of such a person is not a petition by him but one on his behalf." It is the practice of this Court to accept petitions, whether appeals or other applications, presented by Counsel on behalf of a prisoner without any Court fees stamp; on the authority of clause XVII of section 19 of the Court Fees Act. In Kali Frosad Banerji v. Gisborne and Co. (1), it was held that the clause applied to a petition presented by a prisoner not personally but by his Vakeel. This supports the practice of this Court, and the order of the District Magistrate was in my view erroneous. The order of the District Magistrate is set aside. He will admit the petition of appeal and dispose of it according to law.

Order set aside.

Factories Act (XII of 1911), ss. 34, 41, 42—"Occupier," meaning of—Separate sentences of fine on occupier and manager, legality of—Exemption of occupier or manager—Procedur.

An "occupier" of a factory within the meaning of section 41 of the Factories Act is the person entitled to the possession or use of the factory. He is the controller, for the time being, of the factory, the person entitled to use the factory for his own or another's profit. [p. 160, col. 1.]

He may be the owner, on the other hand, he may be only a lessee or a mortgagee with possession, but it is he who decides whether the factory is to work or to close down. The manager merely carries out the occupier's orders to work the factory and if the occupier designates no manager, the occupier himself shall be deemed to be the manager for the purposes of the Act. [p. 160, col. 1.]

Section 41 of the Factories Act authorises a Magistrate to impose on the occupier and manager jointly and severally a fine not exceeding Rs. 200. There can be only one fine and for the whole sum each delinquent is jointly and severally liable. Separate sentences of fine on the occupier and manager, under this section, therefore, are not legal. [p. 159, col. 2.]

Section 42 of the Factories Act provides the remedy for an occupier or manager who is the victim of some other person's neglect, but he must take the prescribed steps to assure the real culprit's conviction and not merely attempt to exculpate himself. [p. 159, col. 2.]

Revision from the order of the Sessions Judge, Hissar, dated the 25th August 1917.

Mr. Nanak Chand for the Petitioner.

Mr. C. Bevan-Petman, Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Petitioner, the owner of a factory, was prosecuted with his manager in one trial for failing to send notice to the District Authorities of an accident which occurred to one of his workmen and terminated fatally.

The objections are three:—

1. The petitioner is not an "occupier" of the factory, but one of the owners.

2. He is entitled to the benefit of section 42 of the Factories Act.

3. The Court below was not competent to pass separate fines aggregating a sum in excess of Rs. 200 on petitioner and his manager separately.

The order of fine is clearly not justified by the section which authorizes the Magistrate to impose on the occupier and manager jointly and severally a fine not exceeding Rs. 200. There can be only one fine and for the whole sum, each delinquent shall be liable jointly and severally.

Section 42 is the remedy provided for an occupier or manager who is the victim of some other person's neglect, but he must take a certain step to assure the culprit's conviction and not merely attempt to exculpate himself. That step the petitioner did not take, for he made no formal complaint against any other person; moreover section 42 does not appear to deal with the case of a charge against manager and occupier jointly nor to derogate from the provisions of section 41, which appear to aim at securing the recovery of the fine from the occupier, if the manager should prove to be a man of straw.

This objection is overruled.

An "occupier" is a person entitled to the possession or use of factory.

An old writ in cases of disseisin was termed "occupavit," and occupier has been used in the Factories Act to indicate the person who has the control of the factory. He may be the owner, on the other hand he may be only a lessee or a mortgagee with possession, but it is he who decides whether the factory is to work or to close down. The manager merely carries out the occupier's orders to work the factory, and if the occupier designates no manager, the occupier himself shall be deemed to be the manager for the purposes of the Act—section 33 (3).

The occupier is clearly the controller for the time being of the factory, the person entitled to use the factory for his own or other's profit, and I hold that petitioner was the occupier of the factory.

On these findings I accept the petition and modify the Magistrate's order by imposing a fine of Rs. two hundred on the petitioner and his manager jointly and severally, which sum, on recovery, shall be paid to Musammam Bhagwati.

Babus Dasurathi Sanyal and Kalikinkar Chakerbutty, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—In these two Rules the only question involved is, whether proceedings initiated by the District Magistrate under the special powers conferred upon him by section 107 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, must be continued to the end in this Court or whether they may be transferred by him to the Court of some subordinate Magistrate otherwise competent to deal with the matter. This question does not now come before this Court for the first time. In the case of Surjya Kanta Roy Chowdhry v. Emperor (1), the question was argued at the Bar and discussed at length, and the learned Judges who heard that case took the view that it was sufficient that the District Magistrate should initiate the proceedings. In taking that view they further relied upon the case decided in the High Court of Allahabad in King-Emperor v. Munna (2). In a subsequent case in this Court in 1909 a Divisional Bench took the contrary view. But from the report of that case, Nirbikar Chandra Mukherji v. Emperor (3), it is clear that that was a case not argued at the Bar and that consequently the prior decision of this Court in Surjya Kanta Roy Chowdhry v. Emperor (1) was not brought to the attention of the learned Judges. Under these circumstances we think that we ought to follow the earlier case [Surjya Kanta Roy Chowdhry v. Emperor (1)] decided in this Court in 1904.

For these reasons we discharge these Rules.

Held, that the vendor's protest amounted to a denial of execution of the document produced for registration within the meaning of section 35 (3) of the Registration Act.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 21st March 1917.

Dr. Muhammad Iqbal, for the Appellant.

Sneikh Umar Bakhsh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On 18th June 1896 Wazira plaintiff by written deed sold 9 kanals of land with shamilat to one Gandu.

The deed was presented for registration on the same day and before the Sub-Registrar Wazira stated that he had sold the land but without the shamilat.

The Sub-Registrar noted the statement of Wazira but registered the document.

The present suit is to recover the shamilat not from the original purchaser Gandu, but from third persons who are the second transferees from Gandu.

The trial Court decreed for plaintiff, but the District Judge dismissed the suit holding that only the document and not the Sub-Registrar's note could be looked at to determine the terms of the transaction.

Both parties agree that the learned District Judge is wrong in his ratio decidendi and has obviously overlooked the provisions of section 92 of the Evidence Act which allow an aggrieved person to establish by oral evidence that a document is invalidated by mistake or fraud.

The outstanding fact in the case is that Wazira as soon as the purport of the deed was explained to him, protested that he had not sold the shamilat and there can be no doubt that this protest of his amounted—as he is illiterate—to a denial of execution of the document produced for registration and the Sub Registrar would have been well advised to refuse registration,

The document, however, was registered and mutation took place according to the document. It is true that shamilat was not specially mentioned at the time of mutation, but Wazira although present before the attesting officer did not raise the point Nor did he take any other steps to right the wrong if indeed any had been done him.

The shamilat partition proceedings were started in 1910 and even then Wazira did not raise the point; in 1913 possession of the shamilat in dispute was given to defendants but it was only in 1916 or nearly three years later that Wazira launched this suit.

Equity aids the vigilant and it would at this stage be quite impossible to find on oral evidence that the shamilat was not sold; further the original vendee has disappeared and the present real defendants are bona fide purchasers whom Wazira has permitted to believe that their transferors had a good title to convey in the shamilat.

For these reasons I think the suit has been properly dismissed and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, by the District Judge of Tanjore, in Original Petition No. 5 of 1917, in Small Cause Suit No. 1300 of 1916 on the file of the Court of the Small Causes, Kumbakonam.

Mr. P. R. Narayanasami Ayyar, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in the suit executed a usufructuary mortgage in favour of the defendant for Rs. 300 of which he only received Rs. 50 and he has instituted this suit to recover the balance of Rs. 250 on the basis of the mortgage. The question is whether this is a suit for specific performance. The rulings of this Court in Anukaran Kusmi v. Saidamadath Avullu (1) and of the Calcutta High Court in Shaik Galim v. Sadarijan Bibi (2) make it clear that this is a suit for specific performance, that is to say, a suit to enforce an agreement to lend money on a mortgage, and such a suit has been held not to lie. This is the law in England and has been followed in this country. The suit will not lie at all and no question of jurisdiction then arises. It is clear, however, that a suit for specific performance can only be instituted on the original side and not on the Small Cause side. The reference will be answered accordingly.

Hindu Law—Will—Ancestral property—Manager of joint family, whether can distribute ancestral property by Will.

A Hindu proprietor or the manager of a joint Hindu family cannot make by Will any equal for unequal distribution of his ancestral property. [p. 163, col. 1.]

Kumalasani v. Doraisami Ayyar, 2 M. 317; 5 Ind. Jur. 352; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 491, distinguished.

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lahore, dated the 5th November 1914, decreeing the claim with costs.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff in this case is a son of one Shankar Das, and brings this suit against Shankar Das' grandson Nand Lal for a declaration that he (plaintiff) is the sole owner of two houses, according to the terms of his father's Will. The big house in suit was admittedly ancestral property and according to the Will one-half was given to the plaintiff, and the other half to his mother, on condition that it would fall to the share of the heir who incurred expenses in connection with the death of the testator and his wife. The second house which is also ancestral, was set apart for payment of debts of the testator. Plaintiff claims that he paid the funeral and other expenses and debts of his father and asks, therefore, for a declaratory decree in respect of both houses. The pedigree of the parties is shown by the lower Court and the other heirs of Shankar Das shown therein are said to have agreed to the Will. The defendant denied that any Will was executed and pleaded that under any circumstances Shankar Das had no power to devise his ancestral property by Will. He also contested plaintiff's statement regarding the expenses of the plaintiff on the obsequies of Shankar Das and his wife and his payment of debts. The lower Court found that the Will had been executed by Shankar Das and that it was valid. It also found that the plaintiff had spent money as stated by him. Plaintiff was, therefore, given a decree.

As for the execution of the Will by Shankar Das, some half-hearted arguments were addressed to us. It was suggested that subsequent interpolations had been made and some evidence to this effect was referred to. We need only state that we agree with the lower Court that the whole Will was in the hand of Shankar Das. It was next argued that part of the property being ancestral, Shankar Das had, at any rate, so far as that property was concerned, no power to distribute it among his descendants. The greater part of his property appears to have been acquired but the property now in suit is admittedly ancestral. We have no hesitation in holding that Shankar Das had no power, under Hindu Law, to make a division of his ancestral property by Will and this general proposition is not contested by the learned Counsel for the respondent. The lower Court, however, held that the manager of the family could make an equal distribution of his ancestral property among his sons and grandsons, and Counsel for the respondent relies on this argument in his favour. He has also quoted Kandasami v. Doraisami Ayyar (1) as an authority in his favour. There is, we may remark, no proof of the equality of the distribution and the authority quoted does not, in our opinion, assist the respondent's case as in that case a partition had been effected by the manager of the family during his lifetime, and we are not prepared to assent to the proposition that the manager of a Hindu family can make by Will any equal or unequal distribution of his ancestral property. This proposition is opposed to the basic principles of the Hindu Law of survivorship.

Counsel for the respondent also urged that all the descendants of Shankar Das had assented to the Will and that after such ratification of its terms, no objection by the defendant could be heard. There was some evidence of the calling of a Panchayat two years after the death of Shankar Das at which an attempt was made to secure the assent of all the survivors to the Will and to have a document executed to this effect. It is clear, however, specially from the evidence of Lala Bilas Ram, that no definite conclusion was arrived at. We do not consider, therefore, that the defendant ever assented to the terms of the Will.

For the above reasons, although the present litigation appears to be of a somewhat vexatious character, as the share of the defendant in the property is a small one and as before obtaining this share he may have to make some payments to the plaintiff, we have no alternative but to dismiss the plaintiff's suit and leave the parties to make their own arrangements. As, however, the defendant unnecessarily contested the execution of the Will on which the main contest concentrated, and as this point was found against him, we order the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

JUDGMENT.—This application for revision arises out of an action brought by the plaintiff-respondent for the restitution of conjugal rights, and the question for determination is whether the Munsif was right in delegating the decision of the entire suit to the persons appointed by the parties as their arbitrators. Now, the rule of law is firmly established that it is entirely within the discretion of the Court to grant or refuse a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, and it has been held by a Division Bench in Hira v. Dina (1) that this function cannot be delegated to arbitrators, who as a Tribunal are not subject to the ordinary rules of procedure, and whose decisions are under the law final. I do not say that it is not open to the Court to refer to arbitration any particular matter, eg., the factum or the validity of the marriage between the parties, which matter does not involve the exercise of a judicial discretion; but, as pointed out above, in the case before me the whole of the suit was referred to arbitration, and upon the authority cited above, I must hold that the Court was not entitled to make the reference.

It is true that in Hira v. Dina (1) there was this additional fact that both the parties to the suit were minors, but the decision of the Court did not depend entirely upon that peculiar feature. Some of the observations of the learned Judges, at page 156 of the report are fully applicable to a case for the restitution of conjugal rights brought by an adult person against another adult person. Following the rule laid down in that judgment I accept the application for revision, and annulling the reference to arbitration return the case to the Munsif for trial on the merits. The costs incurred by the parties shall be costs in the cause.

Revision allowed.

PETITIONER—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIII, rr. 1, 2, 5—Companies, right of, to sue in forma pauperis —'Person', meaning of—Explanation to rule, scope of—Liquidator of Company, right of, to appear for Company, though personally not a pauper—Commission, payment of, to liquidator, whether disqualification—General Clauses Act (X of 1897), s. 3.

Order XXXIII of the Civil Procedure Code applies to suits by Companies and Nidhis and the latter can take advantage of its provisions if they are paupers. [p. 166, col. 1.]

The word 'person' in the Order has the same meaning as in the General Clauses Act unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context and includes any Company or Association or body of individuals, whether incorporated or not. [p. 166, col. 1.]

The explanation to rule 1 of the Order simply allows deduction of the value of wearing apparel where the applicant has such apparel. It cannot be construed to mean that only persons who, in law, can possess wearing apparel, can sue as paupers. [p. 166, col. 1.]

Under rule 3 of the Order, the liquidator can fulfil all the obligations of a pauper petitioner required under the Order and can appear for the Company and present the petition in person. [p. 166, col. 1.]

The real question for the purpose of Order XXXIII being who is the actual plaintiff and whether he is a pauper within the meaning of the explanation to rule 1 of the Order, a liquidator can act for a pauper Company though he is not personally a pauper. [p. 166, col. 2.]

The payment of commission to the liquidator does not make him a person interested in the subject-matter of the suit within the meaning of Order XXXIII, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code. The provision only applies to agreements between a pauper and a third person with reference to the subject-matter of the suit. [p. 166, col. 2.]

Petition, under sections 115 of Act V of 1908, and 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Madura in Original Petition No. 303 of 1916.

JUDGMENT.—The Tirumalrayapuram Jananukoola Dhanasekhara Sanka Nidhi, Ltd., which was a Company registered under the Companies Act went into liquidation and an official liquidator was appointed. He as liquidator, applied under Order XXXIII of the Civil Procedure Code to file a suit on behalf of the Nidhi in forma pauperis against the petitioners before us who are alleged to owe the Nidhi about Rs. 8,524 under a promissory note. The allegations in the petition show that the Nidhi was bankrupt and that the only properties it had (except the subject of the suit) were worth Rs. 12. The Subordinate Judge allowed the Nidhi to sue in forma pauperis and the respondents have filed this petition against the order.

The chief contention raised before us is that Order XXXIII of the Civil Procedure Code, does not apply to Companies, Corporations or other associations. It is argued that as the explanation to Order XXXIII, rule 1 refers to necessary wearing apparel and rule 3 requires presentation of the petition by the 'applicant in person' the Order necessarily excludes petitioners who are not human beings.

We are unable to accept this contention. The word 'person' is not defined in the Code of Civil Procedure and consequently the definition of the word 'person' as including any Company or Association or body of individuals whether incorporated or not, in the General Clauses Act (X of 1897) would apply unless there is something repugnant to the subject or context. Order XXXIII of the Civil Procedure Code refers to suits by paupers and rule 1 enacts that any suit may, subject to the provisions of the Order, be instituted by a pauper and does not exclude the official persons. Now a registered Company or any other Association may be unable to pay the Court fee payable like any ordinary person and there is no reason to suppose that the Legislature did not intend Order XXXIII to apply to such cases especially when it is remembered that the effect would be to allow debtors to escape payment and defeat or defraud the creditors and shareholders of the Company. The explanation to rule 1 no doubt states that where no Court-fee is prescribed, the petitioner should not be entitled to property more than Rs. 100, 'other than his necessary wearing apparel'. The explanation simply allows deduction of the value of wearing apparel and can only mean that if the applicant has necessary wearing apparel he can deduct its value. We do not think it can be construed to mean that only persons who in law can possess wearing apparel, can sue as paupers. In Curtis v.

Kent Water Works Co. (1), the argument that an enactment (47 Geo. 3, C. 111 did not apply to Corporations as it allowed a person to appeal on entering into a recognizance which a corporation was not competent to do, was negatived by Bayley, J., who observed as follows:—"But assuming that they cannot enter into a recognizance, yet if they are persons capable of being aggrieved by and appealing against a rate, I should say that that part of the clause which gives the appeal applies to all persons capable of appealing, and that the other part of the clause which requires a recognizance to be entered into, applies only to those persons who are capable of entering into a recognizance, but is inapplicable to those who are not."

The word used in the explanation is 'person' and there is nothing repugnant in applying the definition given in the General Clauses Act. Where the applicant is a Company which ex hypothesi can have no wearing apparel, then it will not be entitled to deduct anything on account of wearing apparel and will not be a pauper if it has property worth Rs. 100 and the suit is one for which no fee is prescribed.

As regards rule 3 which requires personal presentation of the application to sue in forma pauperis it seems to us that where the law in consequence of personal appearance in Court being impossible either by reason of the party being a Company or an infant or lunatic, allows appearance by somebody else, appearance by such person would be sufficient. For example Order XXXII of the Civil Procedure Code which relates to minors and persons of unsound mind, authorises appearance by the next friend and guardian ad litem and it cannot be said that where the minor or lunatic is a pauper, the presentation of a petition to sue in forma pauperis by the next friend, would be invalid or contravene the provisions of Order XXXIII, rule 3. So far as Companies are concerned, the Companies Act provides for the mode in which the Company is to be represented. Under section 179 of the Indian Companies Act the liquidator may institute any suit or other legal proceedings in the name and on behalf of the Company and under Order XXIX of the Civil Procedure Code the principal officer of the Company may act in legal proceedings on behalf of the Company and may be required to appear when personal appearance is necessary. The liquidator can, therefore, fulfil all the obligations required of a pauper petitioner under Order XXXIII, Rule 3 of Order XXXIII of the Civil Procedure Code in our opinion only prohibits a pauper who is competent in law to appear in person from taking advantage of rule 1, Order III of the Civil Procedure Code and appearing by a Pleader or recognised agent instead of being present personally. It does not cover cases in which from the nature of the case, physical presence is impossible or where the law owing to any disability, directs that all acts required by the Code should be performed by a next friend. We are of opinion that there is nothing in rule 3 to prevent an official liquidator from appearing and presenting the petition. A Company or other Association being a 'person' within the meaning of the definition of the General Clauses Act which applies to the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, could prima facie apply for leave to sue in forma pauperis and as we see nothing in Order XXXIII, rules 1 and 3, which will be repugnant to the application of the definition, we think a Company can take advantage of the provisions of Order XXXIII if it is a pauper.

(1) (1827) 7 B. & C. 314; 5 L. J. M. C. (o. s.) 106; 108 E. R. 741.

JOVIND LAL V. MUNI LAL.

It is next argued that as the liquidator is not a pauper though the Company may be so, Order XXXIII would not apply. The suit is really by the Company, and as the liquidator only acts for the Company, being so to say its agent, his financial standing is immaterial. We think the case is covered by Venkatanarasayya v Achemma (2) where it was held that a next friend who is not a pauper, can sue in forma pauperis if the minor is proved to be a pauper. Reference was made to In the matter of the Will of Darubai (3) and Manuji Rajuji v. Khandoo Balco (4). These were cases of executors suing and without expressing any opinion as to the correctness of these decisions, it is sufficient for the purposes of this case to say that in the case of executors the estate vests in them and they are the real plaintiffs, though they sue not for their own benefit but for the benefit of the beneficiaries. For the purpose of Order XXXIII the real question is who is the actual plaintiff; and is he a pauper within the meaning of the explanation to Order XXXII, rule 1, of the Civil Procedure Code.

The last contention is that as the liquidator received by his order of appointment a commission, he is interested in the subject-matter of the suit within the meaning of Order XXXIII, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code. The provision only applies to agreements between the pauper and a third person with reference to the subject matter of the suit. Where a Court or a Company appoints a liquidator, he is an officer who is appointed under statutory authority and the fact that he is paid a percentage of the collections, does not bring him within clause (c) of Order XXXIII, rule 5. No particular debt is ear-marked with the payment and even if it were so, an agreement in pursuance of the Companies Act to remunerate the liquidator for winding up the Company, would be on the same footing as an agreement by the pauper with his Vakil, to pay him the legal fees for conducting the suit.

We see no reason to interfere and dismiss the petition with costs.

Petition dismissed.

JOVIND LAL v. MUNI LAL.

An award which does not partition agricultural land but merely settles the shares of the parties therein, may be filed in Court;

Where, therefore, a dispute relating to the partition of joint property including agricultural land, was privately referred to arbitration and one of the parties applied under paragraph 20 of the second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code for the filing of the award in Court:

Held, that inasmuch as the award did not actually partition the agricultural land, there could be no objection to the filing of the award.

Miscellaneous appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Jullundur, dated the 20th January 1917, rejecting the application for filing the award of the arbitrators.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. D. Qureshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order of Bawa Mihan Singh, Subordinate Judge, Jullundur, rejecting an application under paragraph 20 of the second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code for the filing of an award in Court. The grounds of the lower Court's refusal to have the award filed, are rather difficult to understand but it appears that the application was rejected because the agreement to refer the dispute between the parties to arbitration, related to the partition of their joint property which included agricultural land, a question relating to the partition of which, is excluded from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. Counsel for the plaintiff appellant relied before the Subordinate Judge upon Sardar Wasawa Singh v. Sardar Arur Singh (1) and Ram Jawaya Mal v. Devi Ditta Mal (2), which, however, were distinguished by him. Finally Counsel for the appellant argued before the Subordinate Judge that as the award did not actually partition the agricultural land Ram Jawaya Mal v. Devi Ditta Mal (2) should be followed. The Subordinate Judge, however, said that until the award was filed it could not be looked at by the Court; in other words, the Court refused to look at the award in order to see whether it did partition the agricultural land or not. As a matter of fact the award does not partition the agricultural land but merely settles the shares of the parties therein. In the case reported as Sardar Wasawa

Singh v. Sardar Arur Singh (1), the parties by written agreements appointed an arbitrator to partition between them certain joint property, consisting of land and houses, to equalize and adjust the shares by transfer from one party to the other of land exclusively owned by either party and generally to settle between them all disputes whatsoever relating to their joint or exclusive property. An elaborate and comprehensive award was prepared, and the parties after having heard it read, signed the document in token of their assent. It was held that the claim was not excluded from the cognizance of the Civil Court by section 158, sub-section (2) (xvii) Land Revenue Act, 1887, as it was not one which asked the Court to effect a partition, but was for the enforcement of an award by which the partition had already been fully carried out.

In Ram Jawaya Mal v. Devi Ditta Mal (2) it was held that a Civil Court has jurisdiction to deal with that part of an award which fixes the shares of the parties in agricultural land, as this is not an actual partition of the fields but merely a division of share and only settles title.

These authorities, in my opinion, show that there is no objection to the filing of the present award on the particular ground taken before the lower Court and argued before me. The other objections urged by defendant-respondent have not been disposed of by the lower Court.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the lower Court remand the case thereto for re decision under Order XLI, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code. Costs in this Court will be costs in the case.

Appeal accepted.

Mercantile Law—Bill of lading—Carrier by sea, right of, to limit liability by bill of lading—Karachi Port Trust Act (Bom. VI of 1886), s. 87—Limitation—Special period of limitation for suits against Karachi Port Trust, whether subject to general provisions of Limitation Act—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 3.

According to English Law it is open to a carrier by sea to limit his liability by a writing such as the bill of lading. Consequently the following conditions in a bill of lading are perfectly valid:

(a) that the Company shall not be liable for any damage caused by sweating, fermenting, heat, boilers, or storage, whether arising or not from the negligence of the persons in the service of the company; [p. 168, col. 2.]

(b) that the liability of the Company shall absolutely cease when the goods are over or beyond the side of the Company's own ship level with the rail; [p. 168, col. 2.]

(c) that the Company shall not be liable for any damage capable of being covered by insurance. [p. 168, col. 2.]

The general provisions of the Limitation Act regarding the exclusion of holidays and Court vacations in computing the period of limitation, have no application to any special period of limitation prescribed by any special or local law e. g., the Karachi Port Trust Act. [p. 170, col. 2, p. 171, col. 1.]

A suit against the Karachi Port Trust filed beyond the period of 6 months allowed by section 87 of the Karachi Port Trust Act, owing to the intervention of Easter holidays and vacation of the Court is barred by limitation. The maxim lex non cogit ad impossibilia has no application to such a case as the suit could have been filed earlier. [p. 169, col. 2.]

Mr. Dipchand T. Ojha, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Rupchand Bilaram, for Defendant No. 1.

Mr. T. G. Elphinstone, for Defendant No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff firm, Moosaji Ahmed and Company, claims compensation from defendant No. 1, the Asiatic Steam Navigation Company, or from defendant No. 2, the Karachi Port Trust, for damage alleged to have been caused by the negligence of one or other of the defendants to a cargo of molasses shipped from Sourabaya to Karachi.

Defendant No. 1 pleads inter alia exemption from liability under the terms of the bill of lading. Defendant No. 2 pleads inter alia the bar of limitation under section 87 of the Karachi Port Trust Act.

With regard to defendant's plea, it appears there are two branches, the one on the assumption that the damage to the cargo was caused by the negligence of the servants of defendant No. 1, and the other on the assumption that the damage was caused subsequently by the negligence of the defendant No. 2. It has been contended in respect of the first branch, that the defendant No. 1's liability is excluded by the condition contained in the bill of lading which has been admitted as Exhibit No. 8, to the following effect: "The Company is not liable for any damage caused by..... sweating fermenting heat boilers or storage ... whether arising or not from the negligence of the persons in the service of the Company." It has been contended in respect of the 2nd branch that defendant No. 1's liability is excluded by the condition in the bill of lading to the following effect: "The liability of this company shall absolutely cease when the goods are over or beyond the side of the Company's own ship level with the rail".

It has been argued, on the other side, in respect of the first branch, that the condition excluding liability of defendant No. 1 was not clear and that in any case it related only to such negligence as could be covered by insurance in view of the subsequent condition in the bill of lading to this effect.

"The Company is not liable for any damage capable of being covered by insurance." It is difficult to understand how it could seriously be argued that the condition excluding the liability of defendant No. 1 for damage caused by the negligence of their servants, was not sufficiently clear. The terms of the condition could hardly, in my opinion, have been clearer or more comprehensive and it does not appear to me that the condition is in any way limited by the subsequent condition regarding insurances. The plain meaning of the subsequent condition, in my opinion, is that the company is not to be held liable in any case for damages which could be recovered from the Insurance Company. There is no reasonable doubt that the condition excluding the liability of defendant No. 1 for damage by negligence of their servants, is a perfectly clear and valid condition, as would appear from the remarks on the subject to be found in paragraphs 186, 197, 232 and 234 of Volume XXVI, Halsbury's Laws of England.

MOOSAJI AHMED & CO. v. ASIATIC STEAM NAVIGATION CO. LTD.

It does not appear to me in respect of the second branch that any serious argument has been adduced to show that the condition excluding the liability of defendant No. 1 after the goods had left the ship's tackle was also not a perfectly valid condition, as would appear from the remarks on the subject to be found in paragraphs 364 and 366 of Volume XXVI of Halsbury's Laws of England.

It has not been disputed that the English Law must be applied in this case according to the agreement between the parties contained in the last clause of the bill of lading, and that is also in accordance with the remarks on the subject which will be found in paragraphs 356 and 357, Volume XXVI of Halsbury's Laws of England. It, finally, cannot be disputed that, under the English Law, it would be open to the defendant No. 1, as common carriers by sea, to limit their liability by a writing such as the bill of lading, as will appear from the remarks on the subject in paragraph 445 of Volume XXVI, Halsbury's Laws of England.

Defendant No. 1 must, therefore, be held on either branch of the case to have been fully protected from liability for the damage caused by the express conditions of the bill of lading. The suit, therefore, as against defendant No. 1 must be dismissed with costs.

With regard to defendant No. 2's plea, it would appear that the cargo arrived on the 26th October 1915 and it has been alleged that the final failure to deliver the cargo undamaged, occurred in the month of November 1915. Notice was given of suit on the 8th March 1916. The Easter holidays and vacation intervened from 20th April 1916 to the 25th May 1916, and the suit was, consequently, not filed until 26th May 1916. It is clear, therefore, and it was admitted in the plaint, that, whether the proposed action be taken from the 26th October 1915 or from the beginning of November 1915 the suit was filed beyond the period of 6 months' limitation allowed by section 37, Karachi Port Trust Act, 1886, unless the Easter holidays and vacation could be excluded from the computation under section 4 of the Limitation Act of 1908.

No such right of exclusion was recognised under the Bombay General Clauses Act, of 1886, and, looking to the year of the Karachi Port Trust Act, 1886, recourse cannot be had to the provision of section 11 of the Bombay General Clauses Act, 1904. It was suggested that recourse might be had, failing other remedies, to the general maxim "Lex non cogit ad impossibilia" but that maxim cannot, in my opinion, be applied here, because there was no absolute impossibility in filing the suit before the Easter holidays and vacation. There was no doubt increased difficulty in filing it within the period of limitation owing to the intervention of Easter holidays and vacation but their intervention did not render it absolutely impossible. The maxim, therefore, could not properly be applied as observed by Jenkins, C. J. in the case of Ahad Baksh Molla v. Babar Ali (1).

It has, however, further been argued that recourse could be had to the general provisions of the Limitation Act, 1908. That argument has turned mainly on the question whether the general rules contained in sections 4 to 25 could properly be applied in view of the language of sections 3 and 29 (b). These latter sections would appear to imply that the general provisions were intended only to apply to suits falling within the schedule of the Limitation Act, 1908. The main difficulty in answering this question arises not so much from the words used by the Legislature as from the numerous and somewhat conflicting decisions of the Courts. It was held so long ago as 1872 that the Bengal Rent Recovery Act was an Act complete in itself and not subject in the matter of limitation to section 14 of the Limitation Act of 1859. That was a decision by the Privy Council reported as Unnoda Persaul Mookerjee v. Kristo Coomar

(1) 14 Ind. Cas. 173; 16 C. W. N. 721.

MOOSAJI AHMED & CO., v. ASITIC STEAM NAVIGATION CO. LTD.

Moitro (2). It was followed after a number of conflicting decisions in respect of the Limitation Act of 1877 by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court reported as Nagendra Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mohun Parhi (3). It was held that the Registration Act was an Act complete in itself and not subject to the matter of limitation to section 7 of the Limitation Act of 1877 by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Veeramma v. Abbiah (4). It would appear, however that a number of conflicting decisions were subsequently passed on this subject by different Benches of the Madras High Court. Thus the Forest Act was held not to be subject to the terms of section 12 of the Limitation Act by the Full Bench of the Madras High Court reported as Abu Baker Sahib v. Secretary of State (5); while the Madras Revenue Recovery Act was held not to contain a complete body of rules of limitation and to be subject to the provisions of section 15 (2) of the Limitation Act by the Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Secretary of State (6). It was similarly held by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court that the Provincial Insolvency Act did not contain a complete body of rules of limitation and was subject to the general provisions of the Limitation Act. It was there considered that the general provisions of the Limitation Act could not be said to "affect" the special period of limitation prescribed by the Insolvency Act. The case is reported as Dropadi v. Hira Lal (7). It is certainly hard to understand how it could be said that the general provisions of the Limitation Act did not at least "affect" the special period prescribed by the Provincial Insolvency Act and it is not surprising, therefore, to find a difference of opinion arising subsequently on the question whether the Provincial Insolvency Act was subject to the general provisions of the Limitation Act in the subsequent case before a Bench of the Madras High Court reported as Munjuluri

Sivaramayya v. Singamahanti Bhujanga Rao (8). The only decisions on this much vexed question on this side, appear to have been those which decided that the Bagdari Act was not subject in the matter of limitation to the Limitation Act. The latest decision upon that point is reported as Adam Umar Sale v. Bapu Rawaji (9).

It seems to me in this conflict of authority necessary to return to the actual words of the Limitation Act. It will then be seen that section 3 provides that "Every suit instituted after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the first Schedule shall be dismissed" subject always to the provisions contained in sections 4 to 25. That looks as though these latter sections were intended to apply merely to the periods of limitation prescribed by the first Schedule of the Limitation Act. Then these sections follow and refer in almost all cases expressly to the period of limitation "prescribed". Thus the word "prescribed" occurs in sections 4 and 5 and again in sections 9, 12 to 16, 19 and 20. That surely means "prescribed" in the first Schedule of the Act. The word also occurs in section 6 and where reference is required to something else, it is made clear in that section by express words "prescribed thereby in the 3rd column of the third Schedule" of the Act. So again section 11 refers expressly to periods prescribed by foreign rules of limitation. It is again indicated that all these sections contemplate merely the periods prescribed by the Limitation Act by the provision in section 25 that all instruments shall be interpreted in a particular manner "for the purpose of this Act."

It has finally been made quite clear to my mind that these sections contemplated nothing else by the provisions of section 29 (1) (b) where it is stated that "nothing in this Act shall affect or alter any period of limitation specially prescribed . . . by any special or local law now or hereafter in force in British India." There may no doubt be weighty considerations in favour of applying to the special periods of limitation prescribed by the various special or local laws the general rules of the Limitation Act. But such application is, in my opinion, a matter for the Legislature and not warranted, with due deference to the views of certain of the Judges of the Madras and Allahabad High Courts by the wording of the Limitation Act. If such application had been intended, it is difficult, moreover, to explain the object of the Legislature in enacting section 10 of the General Clauses Act of 1897 and section 11 of the Bombay General Clauses Act of 1904 and thereby applying generally to all periods of limitation thereafter prescribed the provisions regarding holidays and vacations of Courts contained in the Limitation Act of 1877 and 1908.

This suit, therefore, must also be dismissed as against defendant No. 2 with costs.

Electricity Act (IX of 1910), s. 24, Sch. cl. vi—Fuse or Cut-out—Service-line, cost of maintenance of—Liability of licensee—Installation, defective—Consumer, whether liable to pay for new cut-out.

A fuse or cut-out is a necessary part of the service-line and is kept under the licensee's seal. [p. 172, col. 1.]

The licensee is bound to bear the cost of the maintenance of the service-line whether or not it has been initially paid for by the consumer. [p. 172, col. 2.]

If the consumer's installation is defective, the licensee is entitled to discontinue the supply of energy to him. [p. 173, col. 1.]

In case of a dispute as to any alleged defect, the licensee can take action under clause VI sub-clause (3) of the Schedule to the Electricity Act and refer the matter to an Electric Inspector who shall decide it. [p. 173, col. 1.]

If the licensee continues to supply energy to a consumer when he knows or has reason to believe that the latter's installation is defective, he does so at his own risk and the consumer is not liable to pay for a new fuse or cut-out if the old one melts owing to a defect in his installation. [p. 173, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, for revision of the decree of the Court of Small Causes, Lahore, dated the 10th April 1917, decreeing plaintiffs' claim.

Mr. Beechey, for the Petitioner.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of the order of the Judge, Small Causes Court, Lahore, granting plaintiff-respondent, a decree for Rs. 108 against the Lahore Electric Supply Company, defendant-petitioner. The brief facts of the case are as follows:—

On the 31st August 1916 the electric current supplied by the defendant Company to plaintiff's house having failed, the plaintiff sent a message asking the company to look into the matter. The Company sent their Mistri, who finding that the main fuses had been burnt out, renewed the same. On the 4th September the defendant sent plaintiff a bill in which a charge of Rs. 2 was made for renewal of two main fuses. Plaintiff protested saying that he was not liable for the renewal of the main fuses which were defendants' property and kept under his seal, and which had melted through no fault of the plaintiff. On the 15th September the defendant Company again pressed for payment of the charge of Rs. 2 threatening disconnection in case the bill was not paid within seven days. Plaintiff replied to this repudiating his liability. On the 2nd October the defendant Company disconnected the plaintiff's house from the distributing main. On the 4th October the connection was restored on plaintiff paying under protest a sum of Rs. 8 to the defendant, namely, Rs. 2 for the fuses Rs. 3 as disconnection fee and Rs. 3 as re-connection fee. He then sued the Company for this Rs. 8 together with Rs. 100 on account of damages and the Small Cause Court has decreed the claim.

The lower Courts' findings are that the main fuses were the property of the defendant Company which was, therefore, bound to keep them in order; that it was not shown that they "blew off" or melted through any fault of the plaintiff; that the requirements of law as to notice to plaintiff were not complied with; and that in any case the charge was not one "in respect of the supply of energy" within the meaning of section 24 of the Indian Electricity Act, IX of 1910. The main fuse is technically called a cut-out and the first question for decision is whether the charge of Rs. 2 for re-placing the cut-outs, was payable by the plaintiff or the defendant. The consumer's premises are connected with the distributing main by means of a service-line which is defined in section 2 of the Indian Electricity Act as "any electric supply line through which energy is, or is intended to be supplied by a licensee to a consumer either from a distributing main or immediately from the licensee's premises." Electric supply-line is defined as "a wire, conductor or other means used for conveying, transmitting or distributing energy together with any casing, coating, covering, tube, pipe or insulator enclosing, surrounding or supporting the same or any part thereof, or any apparatus connected therewith for the purpose of so conveying, transmitting or distributing such energy * * * * *

* *." The object of the cut out, I understand, is to regulate the supply of electric energy and, therefore, I think it would be an apparatus for the purpose of distributing such energy within the meaning of the definition of electric supply-line; but it is not necessary to labour this point for part of Counsel for petitioner's argument is that the cut out is part of the service-line. In this connection Mr. Beechey refers to rule 37 of the rules framed by the Government of India in the Public Works Department contained in Notification No. 107, dated the 23rd December 1910. The rule in question is as follows:—"A licensee shall insert a suitable cut-out in each service line within a consumer's premises, in an accessible position as close as possible to the point of entry. Such cut-out shall be contained within an adequately enclosed fire proof receptacle." This shows that the cut-out is a necessary part of the service-line and it is admittedly kept under the licensee's seal, the licensee being in this case the defendant Company.

Now the law as to payment of the cost of the service-line is contained in the Schedule to the Act. Clause VI (1), proviso first (b), which is as follows:—"Provided that the licensee shall not be bound to comply with any such requisition (i.e., for a supply of energy) unless and until the person making it, if required by the licensee so to do, pays to the licensee the cost of so much of any service line as may be laid down or placed for the purposes of the supply upon the property in respect of which the requisition is made, and of so much of any service-line as it may be necessary for the said purposes to lay down or place beyond one hundred feet from the licensee's distributing main, although not on that property." This shows that the consumer may be required to pay the initial cost of the service-line or of part thereof. It is common ground that in Lahore a fixed charge of Rs. 20 is made by the Company in respect of the service-line. Sub-clause (2) of clause VI is as follows:—"Any service-line laid for the purpose of supply in pursuance of a requisition under sub-clause (1) shall, notwithstanding that a portion of it may have been paid for by the person making the requisition, be maintained by the licensee." This shows that whether a portion of the service line has or has not been initially paid for by the consumer, it shall be maintained thereafter by the licensee; in other words, the licensee has to bear the cost of maintenance of the service line. Mr. Beechey urges that sub-clause (2) is governed by the provisos to sub-clause (1) but I am quite unable to agree with him. The provisos only apply to sub-clause (1), sub-clause (2) is obviously quite distinct and its meaning is perfectly clear. It must, therefore, be held that the licensee, in this case, the defendant Company is bound to maintain the cut-outs which are kept under his own seal in proper order.

A good deal was said in arguments as to why the cut-outs fused whether it was due to some fault in the distributing main or in the plaintiff's own installation. On this point Mr. Beechey has referred to the evidence of Mr. Drummond which is to the effect that main fuses "blow off" owing to a defect in the installation, I do not understand this to mean that it can never happen from any other cause. It does not appear that any examination of the plaintiff's installation was made with a view to seeing whether it was in proper order or not. There is no evidence on the record that the main fuses melted owing to any defect in his installation. If a consumer's installation is defective, the licensee has his remedy. Under clause VI (1) proviso second (c) of the Schedule to the Act "A licensee shall be entitled to discontinue the supply if the electric wires, fittings, works and apparatus in such property (i. e., the premises of the consumer) are not in good order and condition, and are consequently likely to affect injuriously the use of energy by the licensee, or by other persons." In other words, if the consumer's installation be defective, the licensee is entitled to discontinue the supply of energy to him. If the licensee has reason to believe that there is any defect in the installation, he can take action under section 20 (1) (a) of the Act which lays down that a "licensee or any person duly authorized by a licensee, may at any reasonable time and on informing the occupier of his intention, enter any premises to which energy is or has been supplied by him for the purpose of inspecting and testing the electric supply lines, meters, fittings, works and apparatus for the supply of energy belonging to the licensee."

If there is any dispute as to any alleged defect, he can take action under clause VI sub-clause (3) of the Schedule and refer the matter to an Electric Inspector who shall decide it. If he continues to supply energy to a consumer when he knows or has reason to believe that the latter's installation is defective, he does so at his own risk. I can find nothing in the Act to justify the view that the consumer is liable to pay for a new cut-out if it melts owing to a defect in his installation. It is clear then that the demand of the defendant Company for Rs. 2 on account of the new cut-outs supplied in plaintiff's service-line, was not justified by anything in the Electricity Act. It was argued that this charge was always made by the Company and that consumers complied with the demand without demur. That may be so, but an illegal demand does not become legal merely because it is usually complied with by the public.

Another point argued was whether the charge, if a legal one, was one for non-payment of which the licensee would be entitled to disconnect the plaintiff's premises under the powers conferred by section 24 of the Electricity Act. Mr. Meares in his book on the Law relating to Electrical Energy in India in his notes under this section says that the words "any other sum due" would include the cost of the connection to the house in so far as it is in any case payable by the consumer. If this view is correct, the cost of the service-line would be such a sum, but it is unnecessary to decide the point because, in my opinion, as set forth above, the sum was not due from the plaintiff to the defendant. It is unnecessary to decide whether the requirements of law as to notice were complied with in the present case, as I hold that the defendant was not entitled to disconnect the plaintiff's premises from the distributing main.

Mr. Beechey finally urged that it would have been sufficient to award mere nominal damages as the plaintiff suffered no inconvenience from the disconnection. He has, however, given evidence that some members of his family were residing in the house and that they were put in inconvenience by the disconnection. The amount awarded, namely, Rs. 100, is not a large sum for the Company to have to pay as damages for its illegal act and I am not prepared to interfere with the order of the Small Cause Court in this respect.

The application is accordingly rejected with costs to the plaintiff-respondent.

Revision rejected.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sec. 1, Art. 30—Carrier, suit against, for injury to goods carried—Limitation—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 17—Amendment of plaint, whether permissible on verbal suggestion in final reply.

A suit for compensation for injury to goods while in the possession of a carrier, i. e., a Railway Company, falls under Article 30 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act and must be filed within one year from the date when the injury occurs. [p. 174, col. 2.]

LOUIS DREYFUS & CO. v. SECRETARY OF STATE.

An amendment which would have the effect of altering the nature of the suit, cannot be allowed upon a verbal suggestion made in final reply. [p 175, cols. 1 & 2.]

Mr. Isardas Osharam, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. T. G. Elphinstone, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued the defendant for compensation for injury to certain goods which had been carried from Sobhago Station to Karachi by the North Western Railway.

The defendant denied his liability for the injury which he pleaded, had been caused while the goods were under arrest by the Police; and, shortly before the case came on for trial, he pleaded, further, that the claim was barred by the law of limitation.

The plaintiffs, admittedly, received delivery of the goods on the 4th September 1913 and the injury must have occurred before that date, but they did not file their plaint until more than a year after the 5th of September 1914. Their claim was patently for compensation for injury to the goods while in the possession of the defendant, as carrier, and an issue has accordingly been allowed on the defendant's further pleading as to the claim being time-barred under Article 30 of the schedule of the Limitation Act.

The plaintiffs have, in the first place, contended that the apparent bar has been saved by a number of acknowledgments of liability in their favour by the officers of the defendant. They relied, in the first instance, on a letter, dated 3rd August 1913 from the Station Master, Sobhago, stating that the goods had on the evening, before being loaded, been arrested by the Police (Exhibit 25); and on the telegram, dated the 9th September 1913 from the Station Master, Sobhago, informing them that a part of the goods was damaged by rainwater (Exhibit 24). Next upon a letter, dated 28th October 1913, from the Station Superintendent, Keamari, stating that he had written about their claim to the District Traffic Superintendent, (Exhibit 18). Other acknowledgments have been alleged to be contained in a letter, dated the 10th September 1913, also from the Station Superintendent, Keamari, stating that he had referred the matter to the District Traffic Superintendent (Exhibit 19); in a letter, dated 23rd December, from the District Traffic Superintendent, Karachi Port, stating that he had referred the matter to the Traffic Manager, Lahore, (Exhibit 20); in a letter, dated 22nd January 1914, also from the District Traffic Superintendent stating that he was still awaiting orders (Exhibit 22); in a letter, dated 4th April 1914, also from the District Traffic Superintendent stating that he would reply in a few days (Exhibit 21); and finally in a letter, dated 15th April 1914, also from the District Traffic Superintendent, denying all liability on behalf of the Railway Co. (Exhibit 23). It is difficult to understand how any of these letters could possibly be interpreted into acknowledgments of liability of the injury caused to the goods. It has been urged that they were acknowledgments of liability in that they were acknowledgments of liability to deliver the goods. But the goods were delivered and it seems to me impossible to spell out of these letters any acknowledgment whatever for the injury which might have been caused to the goods before their delivery by the defendant.

The plaintiffs have in the next place contended that, in any case, their claim is not barred because the proper article applicable is not Article 30, but either Article 49 or 115 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act. They have relied upon a decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Danmull v. British India Steam Navigation Co. (1), which was approved in the recent case of Radha Sham Basak v. Secretary of State (2). It appears to me, however, that their claim does clearly come within the meaning of the words "against a carrier for injuring goods" contained in Article 30, and is not governed by the words "for wrongfully injuring other specific moveable property" contained in Article 49 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act. Their claim is equally clearly excluded by the words "not herein specially provided for" from being governed by Article 115 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act. And this has been the view of the clear wording of the articles taken in the similar contest between Articles 31 and 115 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act by the Bombay High Court in the cases of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Co. v. Risset Chandmull (3) and Haji Ajam Coolan Hoosin v. Bombay and Persia Steam Navigation Co. (4). It will be noticed that the ruling of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Dannull v. British India Steam Navigation Co. (1) was not followed by the Bombay High Court. And it is further to be observed in regard to the more recent ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Radha Shan Basak v. Secretary of State (2) that there was no proof there as to when the goods ought to have been delivered within the meaning of Article 31 and that was the reason why recourse was had to Article 115 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act.

(1) 12 C. 477; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 324.

(2) 34 Ind. Cas. 180; 44 C. 16; 23 C. L. J. 547.

SALIG RAM v. SABGHAT-ULLAH.

The plaintiffs have finally contended that, in any case, they are entitled to recover compensation against the defendant if not as carrier then as ordinary bailee, and that in this view at all events they would be entitled to 3 years' limitation either under Article 49 or 115 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act. Their plaint, however, is patently against the defendant as a carrier. It makes no reference whatever to the defendant being liable as an ordinary bailee. Nor has any application for amendment for charging defendant with liability as an ordinary bailee been filed notwithstanding that the basis for such liability, namely, the injury to the goods while under arrest of the Police, was alleged in defendant's written statement so long ago as the 6th October 1914. It is true that the 4th issue deals with the question of injury or no while under arrest of the Police. But it was raised apparently with reference to defendant's liability as a carrier and made no mention of his possible liability as an ordinary bailee. That liability could not, in my opinion, be properly considered without express amendment and it is doubtful if that could, in any case, be allowed as it would have the effect of altering the nature of the suit against the defendant. It certainly could not, in my opinion, be allowed upon a verbal suggestion made only in final reply to the arguments on the issue of limitation.

It follows, therefore, that the suit must be dismissed with costs as barred by Article 30 and that recourse cannot be had, in any case, to Article 49 or 115 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act. It has been brought to my notice that a similar conclusion was arrived at by Fawcett, A. J. C., in Suit No. 248 of 1916 of this Court.

Mortgage—Deed allowing part payment of mortgage money—Tender made after demand by mortgagees, validity of—Interest, rebate of.

Plaintiffs sued to recover a certain amount of money, principal as well as interest, as a charge on property mortgaged to them by the predecessors-in-interest of the defendants. There was no provision in the mortgage deed for piecemeal redemption but it was contemplated that part payment of the principal mortgage money should be allowed. It appeared that a tender of a certain sum was made by some of the defendants on the 14th August 1909, but the plaintiffs refused to take part payment as they had become entitled to the entire mortgage money and did not wish that part of the property should be redeemed. The defendants did nothing till October 1913 when they again tendered the same sum. But on 28th January 1913 the plaintiffs had sent notices to all the mortgagors demanding payment of the full sum due under the mortgage.

Held, that under the circumstances no offer by any of the defendants subsequent to the 28th January 1913 could be a valid tender so as to entitle them to claim rebate of interest on the sums tendered and the plaintiffs were, therefore, entitled to recover the full amount of principal as well as interest. JUDGMENT.—In this suit the plaintiffs claimed Rs. 56,275-4-9 principal and interest as a charge on the property mortgaged by a deed dated the 9th August 1897. Defendants are the representatives of the original mortgagors and certain other persons who have purchased portions of the property from them. The lower Court passed a decree for Rs. 55,578 10-0 together with future interest on the principal sum secured by the mortgage. From this order two appeals have been filed, one by three sets of defendants, namely, Sultan Singh and another, defendants Nos. 7 and 8, Nand Kishore, defendant No. 9 and Rahim-ud-Din and others, defendants Nos. 10—12. The other appeal is by the plaintiffs who desire that the decree be increased by a sum of Rs. 450 which represents interest on a sum said to have been tendered to them in payment by Nand Kishore.

When the appeal came on for hearing before us it was found that the defendants-appellants had paid a Court-fee of Rs. 10 on their appeal. Their Counsel expressed his willingness to pay a Court-fee on the amount at which he valued the appeal and he stated this to be Rs. 8,750. Subsequently, however, he said that he only appealed for a reduction of the decree by a sum of Rs. 3,080. In other words, he desired that the decree should be one for the principal sum only, i.e., Rs. 52,500. The question in the defendants' appeal is whether they should be allowed a rebate of the interest on sums tendered by them in payment to the plaintiffs on various dates prior to the institution of the suit. The findings of the first Court so far as they are material to the appeals before us, are as follows:—

(1) That there was no provision in the mortgage deed for piecemeal redemption.

(2) That it was contemplated that part payment of the principal mortgage money should be allowed.

(3) That the tender of Rs. 12,322 made by Rahim-ud-Din and the others in August 1909 was not a valid tender as it was clogged with a claim for partial redemption of the property mortgaged.

(4) That the tender of Sultan Singh and another of part of the mortgage money was for similar reasons not a valid tender.

(5) That the tender by Nand Kishore of Rs. 13,125 on the 23rd October 1913 was a valid tender and that he was not liable for further interest after that date.

First of all we deal with the tender, made by Rahim-ud-Din and others. This was made on the 14th of August 1909 but the actual letter which accompanied the tender, has not been produced. Plaintiffs' letter in reply, dated 16th of August 1909, is printed at page 247 of the paper-book. It shows that plaintiffs refused to take part payment as they had become entitled to the entire mortgage money. They also said that they did not wish that part of the property should be redeemed. This leads to the inference that the defendants' offer was made with a view to partial redemption. If it was not, they should have addressed the plaintiffs again and should have clearly stated that they offered money, in part payment of the principal. They, however, sent no answer to the plaintiffs in reply to this letter and apparently did nothing until October 1913 when they again tendered the same sum. Before that, however, the plaintiffs on the 28th January 1913 had sent notices to all the mortgagors or their representatives-in-interest demanding payment of the full sum due under the mortgage. As more than ten years had expired from the date of the mortgage, plaintiffs were entitled to demand payment of the whole mortgage money and they were certainly not bound after that to accept any sum in part payment. In our opinion, therefore, no offer by any of the defendants-appellants subsequent to the 28th January 1913 was a valid tender so as to entitle them to claim any rebate of interest on the sums tendered. We note that Sultan Singh in his pleas never asked for any reduction of interest on account of the sum tendered by him. He merely said that he had always been willing to pay his share and that he should not be held liable for costs. In our opinion, therefore, it is not proved that any valid tender was made to the plaintiffs prior to the institution of the present suit such as would entitle the defendants to claim any reduction in interest.

INDERDEO NARAIN SINGH V. GOURI SHANKER.

We hold accordingly that plaintiffs are not only entitled to the sum decreed by the first Court but to the additional sum of Rs. 450 for which they have appealed.

We, therefore, dismiss the defendants' appeal and accepting that of the plaintiffs, increase the decree to one for Rs. 56,028-10-0 and we further modify the decree of the lower Court to this extent that interest will be calculated at the rate agreed upon, namely, Rs. 0 8 9 per cent. per mensem on the full principal sum Rs. 52,500 from April 27th 1914 until realisation. We further direct that the defendants shall pay the plaintiffs' costs in this Court in both appeals.

Appeal accepted.

Messrs. Pugh and G. D. Singh, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Kulwant Sahai and Purnendu Narayan Sinha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

CHAPMAN, J.—On the 4th of February 1905 one Rai Bahadur Harihar Prasad Singh obtained a mortgage-decree against Mathura Prasad Singh. In September 1917 the mortgage property was put up to sale and was purchased by one Gouri Shanker. An application was made to have the sale set aside upon the ground of irregularity. The application was made by one Bindeshwari who had purchased the property from one Lokenath who had himself purchased it at a sale in execution of a mortgage decree obtained by him.

On the 19th November Shanker applied for the Receiver. No objection other side, a Receiver that date. On the 6 before the Receiver of the property and of his journey to take met by an objection tion was then made by Inderdeo Narayan to have his objection re-heard. The Subordinate Judge re-heard the objection and again overruled it upon the ground that the gava had no existence in the eye of the law, having been made during the pendency of the mortgage suit.

Inderdeo Narayan now appeals to this Court. He has filed two appeals, one against the first order summarily overruling his objection on the 3rd December and the other appeal being against the subsequent order overruling it on the 6th December. There is also an application in revision.

A preliminary objection has been made that no appeal lies. This objection must be given effect to. Inderdeo Narayan was not a party to the suit, and, therefore, he has no right of appeal to this Court. The appeals are, therefore, dismissed.

Inderdeo Narayan has, however, also made an application in revision, and it is that application which we now proceed to consider.

Recital of the facts makes it clear that Inderdeo Narayan was in possession of the land in question at the time the proceedings in which the Receiver was appointed. The Receiver was appointed by the Subordinate Judge in the case of the parties in the case of the Receiver and he was directed to comply with the order of the Court; but it was not by any means wise, any to a prior charge by reason of the fact that he had discharged the prior mortgage and also by reason of the fact that he had discharged a rent decree. I am of opinion that we should interfere upon both grounds; the first ground being that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to overrule the objection unless he was satisfied that the claim was not made bona fide or was made really on behalf of one of the parties to the case: the other ground being that the learned Subordinate Judge has not dealt at all with the claim that Inderdeo was entitled to a prior charge. I am, therefore, of opinion that his order overruling the objection and directing the Receiver to take prompt action, must be set aside, and that Inderdeo Narayan in his application for revision is entitled to succeed. In the course of the argument in this Court, Inderdeo's Counsel drew our attention to the fact that his client had been put in possession under section 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Under that section, he is entitled to remain in possession until his debt is discharged on behalf of the opposite party. It has been contended that if this claim had been made before the Subordinate Judge the opposite party would have been able to show that by reason of his long possession under that section, the debts had been discharged and that he had no present right to remain in possession.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which the present appeal arises, are as follows. The land in suit belonged to one Nabu who mortgaged it to the plaintiffs by a deed of conditional sale. The mortgagees took proceedings under Regulation XVII of 1806 and got a notice served on the mortgagor. They subsequently sued the heirs of the latter Rukna and Fatta, for possession of the land in dispute and obtained a decree for possession on the 28th of November 1902. At that time Rukna was a minor. The decree-holders obtained possession of the property. On the 13th August 1913 Rukna filed a suit for possession of the land against the present plaintiffs, the original mortgagees, and obtained a decree on the 23rd April 1914, it being held that his guardian was negligent in the previous suit and that the decree passed therein, did not bind him. Plaintiffs filed an appeal against that decree in the Court of the District Judge, Hissar, who in accepting the appeal stated "I set aside the lower Court's decree for possession of land in plaintiff's favour and modify the decree and direct that the plaintiff be put in possession as before the ex parte decree, the parties being relegated to their original rights and the defendants-appellants may revive their original suit by applying to the Court concerned, on the basis of this decree and that Court will proceed with the case from the stage of sending a copy of the plaint to the other party and taking the jawabdawa." In accordance with this order, the original suit of 1902 was revived and has now been decided de novo by the lower Courts. The suit has been dismissed on the ground that the notice issued under Regulation XVII of 1806 was defective inasmuch as, (1) the seal of the Court issuing the notice is illegible; and (2) the specification of the date of the mortgage deed is ambiguous.

Plaintiffs have filed a second appeal to this Court. Counsel for the respondents supported the decree of the lower Appellate Court on the ground that the order of the District Judge of Hissar, dated the 12th October 1914 by which he revived the original suit, was illegal and that the lower Courts had no power to retry the original suit. Now, whether this order of the District Judge was right or wrong, the parties acquiesced in it and I am, therefore, of opinion that the defendants-respondents cannot now contest its legality.

Turning now to the notice, it is a fact that the seal of the District Judge imprinted thereon, is not wholly legible. It is, however, described in the notice as that of the District Judge and the words "Court" and the "District Judge" can be deciphered thereon. The notice is headed "Ba ilas Sahib District Judge Bahadur, Zillah Hissar," and is signed at the foot "P. D. Agnew, District Judge." There, therefore, could be no misunderstanding as to the Court from which the notice issued, and the seal should certainly in my opinion be assumed to be what it purports to be. The first Court followed Mehro v. Suja (1), but in that case no seal had been impressed at all. Moreover, the signature of the District Judge was not upon the notice but only his initials. The ruling is, therefore, distinguishable from the present case. Similarly in Bakhtawari v. Shibban Lal (2) it was held that all the conditions prescribed by sections 7 and 8 of Regulation XVII of 1806 had not been duly fulfilled, inasmuch as the notice did not bear the District Judge's seal. That case also is not in point. In my opinion the mere fact that parts of the seal of the District Judge are not legible, is not a fatal defect in the notice.

With reference to the second point, what we find is that the date of the mortgage-deed as shown in the notice, appears to be the 19th of August 1894; the date first appears to have been written 16th but a 9 has been superimposed on the 6. The ambiguity, if any, in the date cannot, in my opinion, have led to any misconception on the part of the mortgagor. In the endorsement on the notice it is stated that a copy of the petition had also been handed to the mortgagor and the petition gives the date of the mortgage-deed clearly in two separate places. I hold that the alleged ambiguity as to the date of the mortgage deed, is not a fatal defect in the notice.

One more defect has been brought to my notice which is not referred to in the lower Courts. In the last line but one of the notice there is a blank. The sentence reads as follows:—

"Aur muratidin, ka nalik diwani qabza marhuma par hai."

The words describing the property mortgaged, have been omitted in this place. In my opinion this omission could not have caused any misunderstanding because the property mortgaged is fully described in the petition. Other points arising in the case have not been disposed of by the lower Courts.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the lower Courts remand the case to the Court of first instance for re decision in accordance with law. Stamps in this and in the lower Appellate Court will be refunded and other costs will be costs in the cause.

Appeal accepted; Case remanded.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 36—Jurisdiction of Insolvency Court to decide claims based on transfers made more than two years before adjudication.

Under the Provincial Insolvency Act the Insolvency Court has no jurisdiction finally to decide claims to the insolvent's properties based on transfers made by the insolvent more than two years before his adjudication. [p. 181, col. 1.]

Appeals against the orders of the District Judge, Nadia, dated the 9th of September 1912.

Messrs. A. K. Fuzlal Huq and Wahed Hossain, for the Appellant.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy and Amarendra Nath Bose, for the Respondent.

Babu Biraj Mohan Mazumdar, for the Deputy Registrar.

JUDGMENT.—These three appeals are directed against an order, dated 9th September 1912, made by the District Judge of Nadia in the exercise of insolvency jurisdiction.

It appears that one Munshi Mohamed Kayem was adjudicated an insolvent on the 1st of May 1911, and that when the Receiver appointed by the Court proceeded to sell his properties, the three appellants preferred claims to certain items. Their claims having been dismissed, they have preferred the present appeals.

In Appeal No. 516 the appellant is the insolvent's wife Amina Khattun. Her case is that on the 21st July 1903 and 15th Magh 1310/1904 by two conveyances her husband transferred to her the properties she claims in satisfaction of a certain portion of her dower.

In Appeal No. 574 the appellant is one Srikumar Chatterjee. His claim is based on a purchase at a sale for arrears of cess effected on the 3rd of March 1909.

In Appeal No. 575 the appellant Chandra Bhusan Biswas was also a purchaser at a sale for arrears of cesses. In his case the sale and purchase took place on the 31st January 1906

From the dates we have given, it is apparent that the transfers in question in all three cases were made more than two years before the adjudication. Section 36 of the Provincial Insolvency Act has, therefore, no application. It follows that the Insolvency Court has no jurisdiction finally to determine the questions arising between the claimant appellants and the purchaser from the Receiver of the right, title and interest of the insolvent.

In this view it is unnecessary for us to go into the merits of the claims or to discuss the other contentions advanced by the parties, and we, therefore, dismiss these appeals. We make no orders as to costs.

Appeals dismissed.

Appeal—Right of appeal, when can be exercised.

In order to entitle a person to appeal, he must be a party to the suit in which he seeks to appeal against a decree and he must be a person aggrieved by the decree. [p. 182, col. 1.]

Plaintiffs sued for a declaration that an alienation of ancestral land made by their father shall not affect their reversionary rights. It appeared that one K. had already brought a suit for pre-emption of the land and on the present suit being filed he was made a defendant at his own request. Both suits were tried together and the plaintiff's suit was decreed and K's suit was dismissed. K. appealed in both cases and succeeded. The plaintiffs filed a second appeal:

Held, that inasmuch as K. was a party to the declaratory suit and had a right of pre-emption which he was seeking to enforce and was aggrieved by the decree granted to the plaintiffs that the sale should not affect their reversionary rights after the death of the vendor, he had a right to appeal. [p. 182, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Judge, Amritsar District, at Gardaspur, dated the 4th December 1915, reversing that of the Honorary Civil Judge, exercising the powers of a Munsif, 1st Class, Amritsar, dated the 9th February 1914, decreeing the claim.

Bakhshi Bhagat Ram Anand, for the Appellants.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs appellants are the minor sons of Santa who sold certain land to Karam Din, Mela and Nabi Bakhsh on the 22nd May 1912 for Rs. 200. Kishen Singh, defendant-respondent, on the 19th May 1913 brought a suit for pre-emption of the land sold. Fauju and Teju, the present appellants, on the 10th July 1913 brought a suit for a declaration that the sale would not affect their reversionary rights after the death of their father.

Both the suits were heard together; the plaintiffs' suit was decreed and Kishen Singh's suit was dismissed. Kishen Singh was made a defendant in the declaratory suit at his own request. He appealed to the District Judge in both the cases. In his own case he was given a decree for pre-emption, and in the declaratory suit his appeal was accepted and the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed.

The plaintiffs have now filed a second appeal in this Court and it is contended on their behalf that Kishen Singh should not have been made a party in the declaratory suit and that he had no right to appeal from the decree passed in plaintiffs' favour in that suit. Counsel for the appellants cited certain rulings such as Abdulla v. Amir-ud-Din (1) in which it was laid down that a pre-emptor steps into the shoes of the vendee in respect of all his rights. No authority, however, has been cited which is on all fours with the present case. The record of the declaratory suit shows that upon Kishen Singh's application he was made a party and the plaintiffs' Pleader stated that he had no objection. I, therefore, hold that no objection on the ground of misjoinder can be taken now.

In order to entitle a person to appeal, he must be a party to the suit in which he seeks to appeal against a decree and he must be a person aggrieved by the decree. Now Kishen Singh was a party to the declaratory suit and, therefore, the first requisite exists. He had a right of pre-emption and he was seeking to enforce it. He was certainly aggrieved by the decree granted to the plaintiffs that the sale should not affect their reversionary rights after the death of the vendor because if that decree stood and Kishen Singh was granted a decree for pre-emption, the sale in his favour would only enure for the life of the vendor. He was, therefore, interested in getting the declaratory decree set aside, and he had a right to appeal. The present appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 110—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 10, applicability of, to suit for accounts by minor against Administrator, whether substantial question of law.

In view of the state of authorities in India on the question of the applicability of section 10 of the Limitation Act to a suit by a minor against the administrator of his estate for accounts, the question is a substantial question of law within the meaning of section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 183, col. 1.]

Application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against the decision of Mr.

Justice Sharafuddin and Mr. Justice Roe reported as 40 Ind. Cas. 860.

Messrs. Rajendra Prasad and P. N. Singh, for the Appellant.

Mr. L. N. Singh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiffs ask for a certificate under section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code that the case complies with the provisions of the section and is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. The decision of this Court from which it is sought to appeal, was a decision of affirmance and the question is whether there is a substantial question of law for decision by their Lordships of the Privy Council. The suit was instituted by the plaintiffs who were in the year 1894 minors and their estate to which they were entitled, was at that time put under the administration of the defendant No. 1 who was their uncle, he having been appointed administrator by the Court. In the year 1903 the younger of the two plaintiffs attained his majority but no account appears to have been rendered by the defendant as to his management of the estate and no action was taken by the plaintiffs to obtain an account from him until this suit was instituted on the 3rd September 1910. In the suit the plaintiffs claimed "that an account may be taken from defendant No. 1 of the income and expenditure of the plaintiffs' share of the estate during the management of defendant No. 1 from the year 1894 to the end of Bhado 1315 M. S. and that he may be ordered to pay to the plaintiffs the sum that may be found due by him on taking such accounts," and then there were further prayers in the plaint relating to specific properties in respect of which certain reliefs were claimed and the schedule of the properties was set out. It was found in respect to some of the properties with regard to which relief was claimed that it was not proved that these properties were purchased by the defendant out of the trust fund and as the plaintiffs had no means of ascertaining unless they obtained an account of how the trust fund had been used, it is not surprising that they had no evidence in respect of any particular property to show out of what fund it had been acquired. With regard to these properties the suit was dismissed. With regard to others, that is to say, with regard to property which admittedly formed part of the trust fund, it was held that under the Limitation Act, Article 120 the period of limitation for suits mentioned in that Article being six years, no suit could be brought in 1910 by the plaintiffs because the period of the defendant's administration ended in the year 1903 and no suit having been brought within six years of that time it was found to be barred by Statute. The plaintiffs on the other hand contended that section 10 of the Limitation Act prevented the operation of Article 120 this being a case within the provisions of section 10. It was decided by a Bench of two Judges of this Court when the case was before them that section 10 had no application to the present case. This matter appears to us to be one which is by no means settled by the decisions in this country although it is claimed that there has been a consensus of opinion for some years with regard to the application of section 10 which would govern the present case. Having looked at the cases in question, it does not appear to us by any means certain that these cases are conclusive of the points which arise in the present case and we think that there does arise in this case a substantial question of law and there being no doubt whatever as to the value of the subject-matter in dispute, we agree that this is a fit case for appeal to His Majesty in Council and both as to value and nature complies with the provisions of section 110. The usual certificate should be granted. This application will, therefore, be allowed. The costs of this application will be costs in the cause. Hearing fee five gold mohurs.

Among Banias of Palwal Tahsil, Gurgaon District, a sister has a preferential right of succession to self-acquired property against collaterals of the 4th degree. [p. 184, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Gurgaon, dated the 20th November 1914, dismissing the claim.

Mr. Roshan Lal, for the Appellants.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to the estate of one Tuhi Ram, a Bania of the village of Pirthala in the Palwal Tahsil of the Gurgaon District, and the main question for determination is whether the deceased's sister Musammam Gaindo, or the plaintiffs, his collaterals in the fourth degree, are entitled to inherit the property. The Subordinate Judge has recorded his finding in favour of the existence of a custom by which sisters exclude the collaterals of the fourth degree, and has also held that the oral Will in her favour propounded by Musammam Gaindo, has been established. We have listened to the arguments advanced by the learned Counsel on both sides and examined the evidence upon the record, and while dissenting from the view of the learned Judge on the factum of the Will, we are of opinion that his finding on the question of custom must be upheld.

As regards the Will, the evidence is of the weakest possible character; the only thing deposed to by the witnesses is that the deceased on his death-bed stated that Musammam Gaindo's money had been utilized in acquiring the property, and that she would be his heir after his death. This evidence even taken at its face value is hardly sufficient to prove the existence of a nuncupative Will. The learned Subordinate Judge states that the factum of the Will "is supported by Musammam Chhito's and Ram Kishen's statements;" but no such statements are to be found upon the record, and Mr. Moti Sagar for the respondents admits that he has been

As pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Baboo Beer Pertab Sahee v. Maharajah Rajender Pertab Sahee (1). "He who rests his title on so uncertain a foundation as the spoken words of a man, since deceased, is bound to allege, as well as to prove, with the utmost precision, the words on which he relies, with every circumstance of time and place." The evidence in this case entirely fails to satisfy this test, and we must, therefore, hold that the defendant Musummat Gaindo has not succeeded in establishing her title on the strength of the alleged oral Will.

As regards the respective rights of the parties to inherit the estate of the deceased, it must be remembered that the property is admittedly self-acquired and consists of mortgagees' rights in certain plots of agricultural land. Further, it is admitted by the plaintiffs themselves that the parties are governed in the matter of inheritance by custom; and the sole question is whether the custom favours the succession of a sister in preference to collaterals in the fourth degree. Now, the witnesses Bucha (D. W. No. 1) and Ganga (D. W. No. 6) depose to two instances of the succession of a sister in the presence of collaterals, and it is to be observed that no attempt was made to challenge their testimony by cross-examining them with respect to those instances. Further, no fewer than seven cases of the succession of sister's sons are referred to by the witnesses, Chhajju, Badri Parshad and Munshi Ram; and though these instances are not directly applicable to the question of the succession of a sister, they have a material bearing upon the issue. As against this evidence our attention has been drawn to only two instances, one referred to by Ram Saran P. W. No. 7 which appears to be a case of uncles, who were members of a joint Hindu family with their nephew, taking the property by survivorship; and the other is an instance in which the debts exceeded the assets, vide, the evidence of Jiwan Lal, P. W. No. 14.

The riwaj-i-am of the district recorded at the Settlement of 1879 is against the succession of a sister, but the document purports to govern all the tribes without any discrimination, and cannot, therefore, be regarded as a weighty pronouncement on custom. Further, it is clear that an entry in the riwaj-i-am relates ordinarily to succession to ancestral land, unless the self-acquired property is expressly mentioned to be governed by the same rule. No such express mention is to be found in the document in question.

Having regard to the evidence set out above and to the special circumstances of the case, we are of opinion that the custom set up by Musummat Gaindo has been established. In this view it is unnecessary to express any opinion upon the title of the defendant, Ram Kishen, the uncle of the deceased, who, on account of his adoption in another family, is said to have lost his right of succession in his natural family.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), s. 94, scope of—Dispossession by non-lambardar mortgagee—Limitation for suit.

One K. who was the owner of a 13-annas 4-pies share in a village mortgaged the share on 18th February 1895 with the defendant who obtained a sale decree and put the mortgaged property to sale and having himself purchased it obtained possession thereof in 1909. The plaintiff who was the owner of the remaining share, had already sold it to B. on 7th May 1907. The plaintiff filed the present suit on 4th May 1912 to recover possession of the land on the ground that by the transfer of his 2-annas 8-pies share he became an occupancy tenant of the village sir and ordinary tenant of the khudkasht. It was contended for the defendant that the right of the plaintiff as an occupancy tenant, if any, had become extinguished under sections 35 (4) and 94 of the C. P. Tenancy Act:

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Raipur, dated the 12th July 1916, in Appeal No. 155 of 1913.

FACTS of the case will appear from the following extract from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

The dispute related to 127 and odd acres of sir land of Mouza Khamaria. The village was owned by Nagbadia and he transferred a 13-annas 4-pies proprietary share in favour of his brothers Sobhit and others, who sold the share acquired by them to Kesholal, father of the plaintiff on 8th May 1894. Nagbadia on 16th July 1894 mortgaged the entire 16-annas share to Balmukund who assigned the mortgage to Kesholal and who obtained a foreclosure decree on 28th February 1899 and in pursuance of the decree Kesholal obtained possession of the village and home farm. Kesholal mortgaged the 13-annas 4-pies share with the appellants on 18th February 1895, who obtained a sale decree and put the mortgaged property to sale and having purchased the share obtained possession on 24th May 1909. The plaintiff who was the owner of the remaining 2-annas 8 pies share of the village, sold the share to Bansilal.

Plaintiff says that by the transfer of the 2-annas 8 pies share of the village, he became an occupancy tenant of the village sir and as the defendants took possession of the entire home farm in 1910 he has sued to recover possession of 127.95 acres of sir land of which he became an occupancy tenant and of 4.90 acres of khudkasht of which he became an ordinary tenant. In fact the plaintiff claimed possession of the entire sir and khudkasht lands of the entire village alleging that the home farm belonged to the 2 annas 8 pies share which was foreclosed by the father of the plaintiff and that the said lands did not appertain to the 13 annas 4 pies share of the village mortgaged to the defendant and purchased by them and that the said lands were not mortgaged to the defendants.

The first Court decreed the claim of the plaintiff in respect of the entire sir lands and so the defendants appealed to this Court. My predecessor reversed the decree of the Court and dismissed the suit of the plaintiff. The plaintiff appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. The appellant practically gave up his right to claim anything more than 2 annas 8 pies share in the sir lands, so his appeal was limited to the share mentioned above. The decree of this Court was reversed and the appeal was remanded for re-trial to this Court.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. K. Gandhe, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts leading to this second appeal by the defendants Bhikamchand and Gokulchand are sufficiently clear from the judgment of the District Judge, Raipur, appealed against as well as from the earlier judgments in the case and it is unnecessary to recapitulate them here. I proceed at once, therefore, to a consideration of the matter raised in the second appeal. The first contention urged on behalf of the appellants is that the plaintiff-respondent had no right of suit inasmuch as he had already sold his 2 annas 8 pies share of Mouza Khamaria to Bansilal on 7th May 1907 and that the suit having been filed on 4th May 1912, his right as an occupancy tenant, if any, had become extinguished under sections 35 (4) and 94 of the C. P. Tenancy Act. This matter of limitation is dealt with in paragraph 12 of the lower Appellate Court's judgment and in paragraph 6 of that of the Sub-Judge. It is in particular urged in second appeal that the lower Appellate Court has failed to notice that the defendant appellant No. 1 was a lambardar and could, therefore, eject a tenant and thus the shorter period of limitation set up by section 94, would come into operation. This latter provision has obviously reference only to relations between landlord and tenant and it is sufficiently established that when the appellants took possession in 1909 they took possession qua mortgagees and not qua lambardar. Indeed until the appellants got possession, neither of them could in the nature of things be lambardar. Still further, their action in taking possession as mortgagees was in a sense an action adverse to that of the other co-sharers and it took place not for the benefit of the proprietary body as a whole but as the result of a mortgage in which the other co-sharers had no interest. There seems to be, therefore, no good ground on which the limitation prescribed by section 94 of the Tenancy Act applies to his case.

An attempt has, however, been made to urge on behalf of the appellants that even if the ordinary rule of twelve years' adverse possession were applicable to this case, the present suit was time-barred. I cannot find, however, that this pleading was ever specifically put forward in the lower Courts and if it had been I do not think there was any chance of its success. The sale to Bansilal by plaintiff-respondent in 1907 excluded cultivating rights in sir and he remained in possession of at least a 2 annas 8-pies share of the sir land until he was dispossessed in 1909. The statement of Mr. Barat, Pleader, recorded on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent at an early state of the case on 26th September 1912 must, I think, be read in the light of the judgment of Batten, Additional Judicial Commissioner, dated 15th April 1915 who pointed out the confusion that had been introduced into the case by the extravagant claim originally put forward by the parties to this litigation to the effect that the whole sir land of the village fell into their respective share. In the peculiar circumstances of this case it is impossible to hold that plaintiff was not in juridical possession until 1909 and the presumption necessarily is that he was, I can see no reason, therefore, for holding that the present suit was barred by the ordinary rule of 12 years' adverse possession.

The point of limitation was the only one that has been seriously pressed in this Court. As regards ground 5 of the petition of appeal I need only say that the District Judge's finding that a 13-annas 4-pies share of the sir in the village was mortgaged is one for the disturbance of which no good grounds have been shown in this Court. These findings govern the appeal which is dismissed with costs on the appellants.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—This appeal raises an interesting question as to whether a suit can be filed on an endorsement made by a stranger on the back of a note, who does not satisfy the definition of an endorser. There is such a usage of law on the continent known as the making of an aval, which is recognised by section 56 of the English Bills of Exchange Act, but there is no recognition of it in the Indian Negotiable Instruments Act. It was with reference to the Bills of Exchange Act that we are told in the well-known words of Lord Halsbury in the Vagliano case (1) that the essence of a Code is to be exhaustive. We may apply that principle to the Negotiable Instruments Act, and say that we are not prepared to recognise this backing of bills by strangers. That is the view which I am at present disposed to take, but it is not necessary to express a final opinion on the point, because I think the appeal fails upon another ground.

BENODINI DEBYA v. HRIDOY NATH GHOSAL.

Section 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act provides that the presumption is that the endorsements were made in the same order as the names appear on the back of the bill, and in this case it is the payee's name that appears first and then the name of the alleged indorser. There is evidence also that this was the case, though the evidence is not of a very satisfactory character. On the other hand, the defendants did not go into the box to establish that the endorsements were made in any other order. On the whole, I think that there is no sufficient evidence to rebut the presumption that the endorsements were made in the order in which they occur. If that be so, I think that there is sufficient ground to sue the endorser of the promissory notes.

In the result, the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—Section 118, clause (e) of the Negotiable Instruments Act provides that the presumption shall be made, "that the endorsements appearing upon a negotiable instrument, were made in the order in which they appear thereon." In the present case, the 2nd defendant's (appellants') endorsement-signatures in Exhibit A series appear below the endorsement signatures of the 1st defendant, who is the payee in all the promissory notes. No oral evidence was adduced on the appellants' side to rebut this presumption raised by section 118, clause (e).

The appellants' learned Vakil (Mr. T. Rangachariar) relied on a statement in cross examination, made by the plaintiff as to the order in which the defendants made their endorsement-signatures. But the plaintiff has stated also in his deposition that the promissory notes used to be sent by the defendants through the 1st defendant's gumasta properly endorsed, and that the plaintiff's gumasta would receive from the 1st defendant's gumasta. The plaintiff himself evidently does not know much about these matters. Mr. Rangachariar also relied upon an ambiguous statement made by the plaintiff in the plaint Exhibit B in the suit on the mortgage instituted by him against defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The above, however, are wholly insufficient to rebut the statutory presumption that the 1st defendant as payee made the endorsement-signature on the back of the note, before the 2nd defendant and that the 2nd defendant afterwards made himself liable as the next endorser to the ultimate holder in due course, namely, the plaintiff. On these findings of facts, the interesting legal questions strenuously argued by Mr. Rangachariar do not arise.

Therefore I agree with my Lord the Chief Justice that the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Although a Will propounded a long time after the death of the testator must give rise to a case in which the Court is bound to scrutinize the evidence very carefully, there is no rule of the law of evidence that a Will propounded so late, is incapable of being proved. [p. 189, col. 1.]

BENODINI DEBYA C. HRIDOY NATH GHOSHAL.

Babus Surendra Chandra Sen, Jotindra Nath Bose and Surendra Nath Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals are preferred by the objectors in a Probate application. The respondent in the present appeal who is a daughter's son of a deceased Hindu lady Harasundari Debi propounded a document dated the 24th July 1896 as the last Will of Harasundari. The grant of Probate was opposed by the first appellant Benodini Debya who is the widow of the only son of Hara Sundari and also by the second appellant who is a mortgagee.

The case put forward was that Hara Sundari made this Will on the 24th July 1896 and died in the year 1896 or 1897, the state of affairs was that she had three daughters and one son Hari Das. Hari Das died on the 28th November 1913 and the Will was not put forward for proof until after his death. The case was clearly one demanding careful investigation having regard amongst other reasons, to the long time which elapsed between the death of the testatrix and the date on which the document was put forward for Probate and also because Hara Sundari was an illiterate Hindu lady, the case would have to be carefully scrutinized. On that footing the prior history is not unworthy of consideration in this case. I think that if the Will was made there could be little doubt that it was made because the only son of the deceased Hara Sundari was of loose morals and addicted to dissolute and drunken habits. The evidence seems to show that he had early in his career disposed of two gardens or garden houses for the purpose of satisfying his pleasures in these ways. There seems to be no doubt that this property formed the subject of a deed of gift that was given by Hari Das to his mother Hara Sundari and the reason of that deed of gift was to preserve a certain portion of the estate which was the property of Hari Das from being wasted and spent by Hari Das. The case would, therefore, be that unless this lady Hara Sundari had left a Will, in the ordinary course, the property would go back to her son Hari Das and the deed of gift would have been presumably a useless transaction.

Now in a case like this the Judge had before him in the primary Court direct evidence proving the preparation and execution of the Will. It is quite true that that evidence is not without certain discrepancies. But the learned Judge having seen the witnesses and heard them give their evidence and observed their demeanour, has come to the conclusion that these witnesses are witnesses of credit. That is the first point that arises on the present appeal. What has the learned Vakil in support of the appeal been able to place before us to lead us to come to a different conclusion with regard to these witnesses from that of the learned Judge who saw them in the witness-box give their evidence? He has been able to suggest nothing except that the case was one for careful scrutiny and enquiry which it clearly was. But the learned Judge had to come to a conclusion one way or the other. After careful enquiry and having heard the witnesses on both sides, he came to the conclusion that these witnesses are witnesses of credit. Nothing has been shown to us which would entitle us to come to a different conclusion from that of the learned Judge in the Court below.

The witness to whom the learned Judge paid considerable attention was a Brahmin witness named Shamapada Chatterjee who had reached the mature age of 80 years and retired to the city of Benares with a person who is called in the evidence either his relative or pseudo relative. The case put forward by the learned Vakil for the appellant which he states on his own knowledge is that many people retire to Benares for some indirect reason or other, that they go there because they may more easily marry their family or for some similar reason. Making every allowance for the personal knowledge of the learned gentleman a Hindu of the mature age of 80 years, would not ordinarily have unmarried children, none of this witness's family went to Benares with him except that woman who cooks his meal and who is described as a relative or pseudo relative. The relationship between them appears from the evidence to be a slender one. The line of cross-examination of this witness as to his relationship with this relative, seems to suggest that some more tender relationship existed between these two persons than what the witness was willing to disclose. That may or may not be so. That is no reason for disbelieving this man. Then it is said that his memory improved as he went through this long and tedious examination and cross-examination before the Commissioner. Well his memory did improve. But it is not unnatural if we find that on the 19th day from the commencement of his examination he was able to repeat the contents of the Will by heart. I expect that not only he but also every Pleader and Commissioner would have known the contents of the Will by that time. The evidence of this witness seems to be substantially in accord with the evidence of the witnesses who appeared before the learned Judge and whom the learned Judge believed. On the other hand, against this evidence which the learned Judge has believed, there is nothing except the witnesses who stated that they did not hear anything of the Will.

The second point put forward against these witnesses is that if their evidence is true why such a long period elapsed between the death of Hara Sundari and the propounding of the Will. There seems to be many reasons for this, one of them being that Wills in this country sometimes, I do not say always, are not propounded until it becomes necessary to propound them. Avoidance of Probate duty is in some cases sufficient reason for keeping the Will back until there is a strong reason for putting forward. Although a Will put forward so late as this one, must give rise to a case in which the Court is bound to scrutinize the evidence very carefully, there is no rule of the law of evidence that a Will propounded 17 years after the death of the testatrix, is incapable of being proved.

Nothing has been shown to us in this case which would entitle us to displace the finding of fact made by the learned Judge in the Court below on the evidence of the attesting witnesses whom he saw give their evidence before him. He came to the conclusion on that testimony that this lady Hara Sundari did in fact execute the Will. That being so, we must accept that the document in fact was the last Will of Hara Sundari. That being so, the present appeals fail and must be dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee in these two appeals at Rs. 250.

On a date fixed for the hearing of a case one of the plaintiffs appeared and made an application for adjournment. The Court rejected the application and on the same day passed the following order "No further step is taken. The case is dismissed with costs".

Held, that as one of the plaintiffs was present the order of dismissal amounted to a decree and was not one of dismissal for default and an appeal lay against it to the District Judge and from the latter's order a second appeal lay to the High Court. [p. 190, col. 1.]

Civil Revision from an order of the District Judge, Mozaffupore.

Messrs. Kulwant Sahay, Rai 'Guru Saran Prasad and Murari Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision in respect of an order made by the Munsif of Hajipur dismissing a suit. The suit was brought by a tenant for the recovery of possession of the land from his landlord. It was filed on the 15th of June 1915. Some defect appears to have arisen in the matter of obtaining a proper service of the summonses. The written statement was not filed till the 14th of April 1916. Issues were framed on the 18th of April 1916 and an order was recorded in the order-sheet adjourning the case to the 6th of May 1916. The case was, however, in fact taken up on the 5th and not the 6th of May 1916. On that date one of the plaintiffs was present and an application for adjournment was presented for the purpose of filing a list of witnesses and documentary evidence. The Munsif thereupon passed an order in the following terms: "The case is one year old nearly. Plaintiffs' petition for time is very harassing. Therefore it is rejected". On the same date the learned Munsif made the following order: "No further step is taken. The case is dismissed with costs". From this order an appeal was taken by the plaintiff to the District Judge and the learned Judge held that no appeal lay to him and accordingly dismissed the appeal making, however, no order as to costs. Against the order of the learned District Judge we have been moved in revision. We are of opinion that the learned District Judge fell into an error in holding that no appeal lay to him. One at least of the plaintiffs was present when the case was taken up for hearing, therefore it cannot be held to be a dismissal for default. The learned District Judge should have taken up the appeal and determined whether the application for adjournment was properly refused or not. On behalf of the opposite party it has been pointed out that if we hold that an appeal lay to the District Judge, it must be on the ground that the order of the Munsif was a decree within the meaning of the definition of a decree given in the Civil Procedure Code, and that accordingly the only relief open to the petitioners is by way of second appeal and not by way of revision. This contention appears to us to be correct and we direct that this application in revision be treated as a second appeal. No question of Court-fee arises inasmuch as the applicant has paid more Court-fee than he would be required to pay in the case of a second appeal. There is, however, one matter which we must notice in the order which we shall make. It appears to us from the fact that the application for adjournment was filed upon the 5th of May that the plaintiffs knew that that was the date fixed for the hearing of their case and we do not believe the statement to the effect that they were not aware that that was the date fixed for the disposal of their case. In these circumstances the order which we shall make is this. We set aside the order of the learned District Judge dismissing the appeal and we direct that upon his being satisfied that the appellant has paid to the respondent the costs incurred by the respondent, he do re-admit the appeal and hear and dispose of it on merits. The learned District Judge is further directed to allow a reasonable time for the payment of the costs by the appellant to the respondent and upon his being satisfied that these costs have been paid within that time, he will admit the appeal. If the costs are not paid within such time as the learned District Judge thinks reasonable, he will dismiss the appeal.

Let the record of this case be sent down at once.

*Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), ss. 52, 195
—Putnidar, whether can apply for abatement of rent.*

A putnidar is entitled to make an application under section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for abatement of rent. Section 195 of the Act does not prevent section 52 from applying to the case of a putnidar. [p. 191, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Rajshahye, dated the 25th September 1915, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 15th February 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Satish Chundra Ghose (with him Babus Preo Sunker Mazumdar and Phanindro Lal Maitro), for the Appellants:—The suit was for abatement of rent and cesses by a putnidar in respect of land acquired by Government. The Courts below granted the abatement of rent and allowed the plaintiff to withdraw the claim for cesses with liberty to bring a fresh suit for the same cause of action. My first point is that the principle of section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply in the case of a patni tenure; secondly as to withdrawal, the Judge is wrong in allowing the plaintiff liberty to withdraw a portion of the claim, the present appeal is against the whole decree.

[FLETCHER, J.—The Judge says no appeal lay, but if there was a right of appeal he agreed with the Court of first instance. The only point is whether section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does apply to patni tenures, where is the authority that section 52 does not apply?]

I do not find any authority on the point but I rely on the case reported as Bhobani Nath Chuckerbutty v. Land Acquisition Deputy Collector of Bogra (1).

[SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—It does not affect the patni Regulation. Why should not section 52 apply? The section is very wide.]

The case in Bhobani Nath Chuckerbutty v. Land Acquisition Deputy Collector of Bogra (1) is in my favour.

[FLETCHER, J.—The case is one of apportionment of compensation money.]

I shall draw your Lordship's attention to clause (e) of section 195 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

[FLETCHER, J.—Section 52 does not affect any enactment relating to patni tenure.]

Babu Gagan Chand Bural, for the Respondent was not heard in reply.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant, the Zemindar, against the decision of the learned District Judge of Rajshahye, affirming the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of the same place. The suit was brought for abatement of rent by a patnidar in respect of 75 bighas of land compulsorily acquired by the Government under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act. The suit was instituted for abatement of rent and also for abatement of cesses. In the course of the proceedings, the plaintiff applied to the learned Subordinate Judge for leave to withdraw his claim for cesses, with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action. The first Court allowed that and granted an abatement of the rent. The defendant appealed to the learned District Judge and the learned District Judge decided as follows: First of all, with regard to the lease granted to the plaintiff to withdraw his claim for cesses with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action, the learned Judge held that no appeal lay but if there was a right of appeal, he agreed with the view of the learned Subordinate Judge granting liberty to withdraw the suit. On the second point, the learned District Judge came to the same conclusion as the learned Judge of the Court of first instance.

The only point pressed in the present appeal is this. The learned Judges in the lower Courts have proceeded under the provisions of section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and on the principle there defined. Section 52 says that every tenant shall be entitled to apply. A patnidar is a tenant and so prima facie he is entitled to make an application under section 52. It is said, however, that section 195 of the Act prevents section 52 from applying to the case of a patnidar on the ground that clause (e) of that section says that nothing contained in the Bengal Tenancy Act shall affect any enactment relating to patni-tenures in so far as it relates to those tenures. Section 52 does not affect any enactment relating to patni-tenures. It is quite clear, in my view, that the conclusion arrived at by the learned District Judge is right. It is suggested that that view is opposed to the decision of this Court reported as Bhobani Nath Chuckerbutty v. Land Acquisition Deputy Collector of Bogra (1). There is nothing in that decision to suggest that section 52 does not apply to a tenant who is a patnidar. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree.

C. P. Courts of Wards Act (XXIV of 1893), s. 16 (2), (b), interpretation of—Contract by guardian, not for benefit of minor, whether can be specifically enforced.

The words "for the preservation and benefit of such property" in section 16 (2) (b) of the Court of Wards Act should be interpreted in the light of the usual powers of guardians to bind the estates of minors.

No decree for specific performance of an agreement for transfer made by his guardian should be passed against a minor unless the Court is quite certain that the agreement was for the benefit of the minor and that it would be for his benefit that it should be enforced.

Appeal from the decrees of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 19th September 1916, in Appeal No. 163 of 1916.

Mr. Atmaram Bhagwant, for the Appellant.
Mr. W. H. Dhabe, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case while the plaintiff was a minor, the Court of Ward let out the land in suit for a term of ten years in renewal of a previous lease for 20 years. The lease has now expired and the defendants claim to remain in possession on the ground that they had the right specifically to enforce a contract for an unspecified term of years. The main ground of appeal on which the District Judge has dismissed the defendant's appeal is that even if the contract for a renewal of the lease were sufficiently precise to be capable of specific enforcement if the contract had been made between adults, yet the contract is one which cannot be specifically enforced against the minor as it is not for the preservation or benefit of such property that a fresh lease be entered into. The words "for the preservation or benefit of such property" are taken from section 16 (2) (b) of the Courts of Wards Act applicable to these Provinces. In interpreting these words regard should be had to the usual powers of guardians to bind the estates of minors. There are a large number of decisions collected together by Trevelyan at page 167 of his "Law relating to Minors",

BAIJ NATH GOENKA V. RAMESHWAR SINGH.

5th Edition. The effect of these rulings is that the Court will not decree against a minor for specific performance of an agreement for transfer made by his guardian unless it be quite certain that the agreement was for the benefit of the minor and that it would be for his benefit that it should be enforced. It is impossible to hold that it would be for the benefit of the minor that this contract for specific performance should be decreed against him, and it is equally difficult to imagine that there was any necessity for inserting such conditions in the renewal of the lease for 10 years. It is perfectly feasible to get a tenant for 30 years without making any promise to give a fresh lease at the termination of that period. To enforce the contract, if it be a contract, for specific performance against the minor would be to act directly contrary to his interests. It is not necessary to refer to the grounds of appeal which deal with other points.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 2 (2), 47, 109 (a)—Appeal to His Majesty in Council—'Decree', meaning of—Execution, determination of question in, whether final order or decree—Remand, order of, whether appealable to His Majesty in Council—Interlocutory order.

Per Dawson Miller, C. J.—A decision on a question relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree and which is a matter in controversy in the suit, must be deemed to be included in the definition of a decree given in section 2 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code provided the judgment conclusively determines the rights of the parties in that matter. [p. 194. col. 1.]

BAIJ NATH GOENKA BAHADUR V. RAMESHWAR SINGH.

An order of remand can be a subject of appeal to His Majesty in Council provided the question involved in the order is a cardinal point in the case. [p. 195, col. 2.]

Plaintiffs obtained an Order in Council for possession of certain shares in a mahal. In the meantime, however, the mahal had been partitioned and the plaintiffs had been allotted shares other than those for which they were suing. They prayed for execution against the substituted shares but the executing Court rejected their application on the ground that they could not ask for the ascertainment of the shares allotted to them in the execution department. On appeal, the High Court directed the executing Court to hold the necessary enquiries and to execute the order with reference to the substituted shares.

Held, that the order of the High Court conclusively determined the rights of the parties in a matter which went to the whole root of the proceedings and was, therefore, a decree within the meaning of section 109 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 194, col. 2.]

Per Chapman, J.—The order of the High Court was an interlocutory order directing procedure and was, therefore, not a final order within the meaning of section 109 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 196, col. 1.]

Application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council from the decision of Sir Edward Chamier, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Roe, dated the 24th April 1917, overruling the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Monghyr, dated the 2nd February 1916

Messrs. Pugh and Naresh Chandra Sinha, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Sinha and Kulwant Sahay, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—In this case application is made for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from a decision of this Court dated the 24th April last overruling a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr. The value of the subject-matter of the suit is over Rs. 10,000 but objection is taken that the judgment sought to be appealed from, is not a decree or final order within the meaning of section 109 (a) of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. The respondent and others instituted a suit to set aside a revenue sale of the Iymali share in the Mahal Bist Hazari and to recover possession and mesne profits and after protracted litigation eventually obtained an order of His Majesty in Council in their favour. At the time the suit was instituted, partition proceedings were and had been for a long time pending under the Estates Partition Act in respect of the mahal the subject-matter of the suit. The partition proceedings terminated after the present suit commenced but some time before the appeal was heard by His Majesty in Council. The result of the partition proceedings was that the plaintiffs in that suit were in many, if not all, cases allotted other shares and interests—in some cases in different villages—in lieu of their original shares in the present estate. This matter was not mentioned to their Lordships of the Privy Council and the Order-in-Council does not purport to give the respondents possession of the substituted shares and interests but only of the original shares. The respondents having applied to the Court under Order XLV, rule 15, the matter was referred for execution to the Subordinate Judge before whom the suit originally came. The respondents (the applicants for execution of the Order-in-Council) prayed not for execution against the shares specified in the schedule to the plaint—but against the substituted shares and interests allotted under the partition. Objection was taken that the Order-in-Council gave no right or title to the decree-holders to possession of the substituted shares and the Subordinate Judge decided that the decree-holders were not entitled by proceedings in the execution department to ask him to ascertain what estates and interests had been substituted or to get possession of the substituted estates and interests and dismissed the case. The ground of this decision was as I understand it, that the Order-in-Council disclosed no right of possession to the substituted estates and, therefore, it was unnecessary to hold an enquiry as the foundation of the claim was not proved. On appeal to this Court against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, the appeal was allowed and the Subordinate Judge was directed to restore the case to the file and to hold the necessary enquiries and to execute the order with reference to the substituted estates and interests. As I read this judgment, it was an adjudication that the plaintiffs in the suit were entitled to possession of the substituted estates when the same had been ascertained by the Subordinate Judge in the execution proceedings. The main question in the appeal was one which went to the foundation of the plaintiffs' right to claim at all and was decided in their favour and could not be re-opened in the execution proceedings. The applicants now ask for leave to appeal from that decision to His Majesty in Council. Whether such an appeal lies, depends upon the interpretation to be placed upon section 109 (a) of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is contended by the respondents that the judgment sought to be appealed from, is not a decree or final order within the meaning of that section but is merely interlocutory and one directing procedure. I cannot accept this view. "Decree" is defined in section 2 (2) of the Code as "the formal expression of an adjudication which so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit and may be either preliminary or final. It shall be deemed to include the rejection of a plaint and the determination of any question within section 47 or section 144". Then follow two exceptions which are not material in this case. The section then continues by way of explanation "A decree is preliminary when further proceedings have to be taken before the suit can be completely disposed of. It is final when such adjudication completely disposes of the suit. It may be partly preliminary and partly final."

From this definition it is clear that a decree must conclusively determine the rights of the parties with regard to some matter in controversy in the suit although it need not finally dispose of the suit. Further, it must be observed that the word decree shall be deemed to include the determination of any question within section 47 of the Code. It would appear, therefore, that questions within section 47 where there is a controversy must be treated as if they were matters in controversy in the suit. The questions for determination in section 47 include all questions between the parties relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. The question now in dispute is, in my opinion, one relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree and is a matter in controversy in the suit and must be deemed to be included in the definition set out in section 2 (2) provided that the judgment sought to be appealed from, conclusively determines the rights of the parties in that matter. It is not easy and perhaps impossible to reconcile the numerous decisions that have been given with regard to the meaning of the words decree or final order and similar expressions in the different High Courts of this country. But this Court should endeavour to give expression to the rulings of their Lordships of the Privy Council in so far as they have been expressed in cases of this nature. In Rahimbhoy Habibbhoy v. Turner (1), the question for decision was whether a decree directing accounts to be taken between the parties, was final within the meaning of section 595 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882. The plaintiff in the suit alleged that the defendant was accountable to him on several claims. The defendant alleged that he had legal defences to all the claims and was not accountable at all. The Court held that as to some of the claims the defences were invalid and directed an account to be taken. The Court refused leave to appeal on the ground that their judgment was not a final order. The defendant then petitioned Her Majesty in Council to exercise the royal prerogative to admit an appeal but confined his argument to the ground that the Court below did not rightly interpret the Code. Lord Hobhouse in delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out that although in terms the decree did not declare the liability of the defendant it in effect did so; and as the real question in issue was the liability of the defendant the decree dealt with a cardinal point of the suit and determined it finally against the defendant and, therefore, came within the meaning of the section.

In the present proceedings in execution one of the main cardinal issues between the parties was whether the substituted shares and interests against which execution was sought, were liable at all under the Order-in-Council. Whichever way this question was decided it conclusively determined the rights of the parties in a matter which went to the whole root of the proceedings.

respects similar to the present case. The plaintiff there obtained a decree afterwards affirmed by Order-in-Council awarding him possession of an estate with future mesne profits. In execution proceedings the plaintiff recovered possession and a contest afterwards arose as to the period over which mesne profits were recoverable. This was argued as a preliminary point. On appeal the High Court varying a decision of the Court below found the plaintiff entitled to mesne profits from the institution of the suit until the date of obtaining possession. They overruled an objection that under the Procedure Code no appeal lay to the High Court for want of finality in the decree. On appeal to Her Majesty in Council the same point was again urged and dealt with in the judgment. Their Lordships were of opinion that the decision as to the period of mesne profits was final in its essence. On page 156 this passage occurs "It resembles in principle a decree for an account made at the hearing of a cause which is final against the party denying liability to account and is appealable, though it is also in another way interlocutory and may result in the exoneration of the accounting party or even in the award of a balance in his favour. And it can make no difference in point of principle whether the decision be in favour of or against the liability to account. It is equally final in its effect and as such equally open to appeal." The judgment went on to test the question apart from general principles, on the construction of the Code then in force which by section 2 defined "decree" as "the formal expression of an adjudication upon any right claimed or defence set up in a Civil Court when such adjudication so far as regards the Court expressing it, decides the suit.....". An order determining any question mentioned or referred to in section 244 (section 47 of the present Code)..... is within this definition" and came to the conclusion that the plain and obvious meaning of section 2 was to make the order an appealable decree. Applying the same line of reasoning to the present case I can see no reason why the adjudication now under consideration should not be included in the definition of "decree" in section 2 (2) of the Code of 1908 including as it does the determination of any question within section 47.

It has been argued before us that a remand order cannot be a legitimate subject of appeal to His Majesty in Council. This, in my opinion, is stating the matter too widely. In Ananda Gopal Gossain v. Nafar Chandra Pal Chowdhry (3), a suit was brought under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to annul certain encumbrances. The Subordinate Judge of Nadia held that the suit could not be maintained on the ground that service of notices had not been proved and that it was otherwise defective for non-joinder of parties. The High Court differed as to the service and remanded the case for addition of parties and re-trial on the merits. On an application to appeal to His Majesty in Council it was argued that a remand order could not be final. Sir Francis Maclean, C. J., decided that although on the face of it the order was one of remand, the question involved was a cardinal point in the case since, if the view of the Subordinate Judge were correct there was an end of the suit and admitted the appeal. Applying the same principle to the present case the same result follows.

I do not lose sight of the fact that there is a series of cases in which it has been held that the dismissal of a suit on the ground that it is barred by the Limitation Act or by section 43 of the old Code (now Order II, rule 2 of the rules under the present Code) is not a final order from which appeals will lie. Cases of this class may perhaps be reconciled with the principles governing the cases already referred to on the ground that such decisions do not purport to deal with the merits of the case nor even proceed as far as the point where it becomes necessary to determine the rights of the parties which go to the foundation of the suit. However this may be, if and in so far as there is any conflict, I am bound to apply the principles enunciated by their Lordships of the Privy Council which, in my opinion, govern the present case and I would order that a certificate be granted that the case fulfils the requirements of section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure and is, therefore, a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council.

JAHURMUL BABU v. KERAMUTULLAH MOLLA.

'CHAPMAN, J.—I regret that I do not feel entirely able to concur. If a defendant applies for an order that the plaint be rejected upon the ground that the suit appears from the statements in the plaint to be barred by law Order VII, rules 11 (d) and the Court decides against the defendant, the decision is not a decree and is not appealable. This is apparent from the definition of the word decree in subsection 2 of section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure where it is said that the meaning of the word decree shall be deemed to include the rejection of a plaint. Upon the principle expressio unius est exclusio alterius, it is clear that an order deciding that a plaint shall not be rejected, is not included in the meaning of the word decree. In my opinion a mere determination that a plaintiff has a right to sue, is not a determination of his right with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit within the meaning of the definition of the word decree above referred to. The order of this Court in the present case was to the effect that it did not appear from the statements in the application for execution that the application was barred by any law. The order merely decided that the applicant had the right to apply. Applying the principles above indicated, I am of opinion that the order was not a decree.

If a decree holder institutes a suit instead of making an application and the opposite party objects that the suit is barred by the terms of section 47 of the Code, an order overruling that objection is not, as I have shown above, appealable. In a converse case such as the present where an application for execution has been made and the preliminary objection that the procedure should have been by suit has been overruled, it is, in my opinion, difficult to say that the order can rightly be held to be a decree.

The order of this Court was, in my opinion, an interlocutory order directing procedure and was, therefore, not a final order. I rely upon the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Radha Kishan v. Collector of Jaunpur (4).
Order Accordingly.

DEFENDANTS-RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Rent received by gomasta of landlord, whether sufficient to prove tenancy.

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the ordinary presumption would be that the gomasta of a landlord performed his duty and duly delivered the rent collected by him to his employer the landlord. Therefore independently of the question whether a gomasta had authority to grant an amat-namah or settle a holding, the receipt of rent by him on behalf of his employer from the person in occupation of a holding is sufficient to prove the tenancy of the latter. [p. 197, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Rajshahye, dated the 20th March 1915, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 25th March 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Surendra Nath Ghoshal (with him Babu Bireswar Bagchi), for the Appellant.—The appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment of the defendant as a trespasser. The defendant alleges that he has been inducted into the land by the plaintiff's Tahsildar and has been recognised as a tenant by the acceptance of rent by the said Tahsildar. The Court below was wrong in giving effect to the defendant's contention inasmuch as there is nothing on the record to connect the payment of rent with the landlord or to show that the landlord did accept the rent.

[RICHARDSON, J.—The landlord is bound by the act of his servant, the Tahsildar.]

Yes. He is bound by those acts of his servant which are done within the scope of the servant's authority but not for any other act of his servant or agent. The Tahsildar had no authority from his master to induct a stranger into the land without authority from his master. There is nothing on the record to show that the landlord ever received any thing from the defendant or that he has been benefited by the alleged payments made to his Tahsildar without his knowledge and consent, and consequently the alleged payments of rent cannot be said to have been accepted by the plaintiff. See Moharani Beni Pershad Koeri v. Goherdhan Koeri (1). The landlord cannot be bound by the receipts of rent or selami by the Tahsildar or gomasta unless there is some evidence to connect the landlord with such payment. This view is supported by the observation of Mookerjee, J. in Sudaman Jamadar v. Behari Mahton (2). Acceptance of rent and grant of amalnama by the plaintiff's Tahsildar without authority from the plaintiff, cannot bind the plaintiff.

Mr. K. Ahmed (with him Babu Sarat Chandra Mukherjee), for the Respondents was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.—The only point which was or could be argued on this appeal relates to the question whether the gomasta Ishan Chandra Pandey had authority to settle the disputed jote or holding with the defendant Keramatullah. It is contended that the Courts below have not found that he had authority. In the first Court 12 issues were found but there is no specific issue directed to that question. As to evidence it appears that the defendant Keramatullah produced an amalnama signed by the gomasta and certain rent receipts also signed by the gomasta. In the Trial Court the learned Subordinate Judge delivered a long and exhaustive judgment from which it would seem that as the case was placed before him, the discussion turned on the genuineness of the documents referred to and not on the question of the gomasta's authority. If the latter question had been argued before the learned Subordinate Judge in the way in which it has been argued before us, the learned Subordinate Judge would no doubt have dealt with it expressly. The learned Pleader for the plaintiff relies on a passage in the judgment of the learned District Judge in the lower Appellate Court. The learned District Judge says this: "In this consideration, it is hardly worthwhile to discuss the evidence as to whether the gomastas had power to grant the amalnamas or not, but I should hold that the fact of rent having been accepted, would be a very clear indication that the gomastas had such implied power." That no doubt indicates that the authority of Ishan Chandra Pandey to grant the amalnama was mooted but nothing would seem to have been said to the learned Judge about the authority of the gomasta to grant rent receipts. The Judge has found in effect that whether or not the gomasta had authority to grant the amalnama and whether or not amalnama is admissible in evidence, the receipt of rent by Ishan Chandra Pandey presumably on behalf of his employer is sufficient to prove the tenancy of the defendant Keramatullah. In our opinion no sufficient ground has been shown for saying that that finding is vitiated by any error of law. Even if Ishan Chandra Pandey had no authority in the first instance to grant the amalnama or to settle the holding with Keramatullah, nevertheless if rent was afterwards received from Keramatullah and found its way into the pocket of the plaintiff, that would be evidence of ratification by the plaintiff of the gomastas' act on which the Court might act. We are informed that the plaintiffs' son was examined but his learned Pleader is unable to point out any statement in the deposition to the effect that the rent received by the gomasta did not find its way into the landlord's pocket. In the absence of the evidence, the ordinary presumption would be that the gomasta performed his duty and duly delivered the rent he collected to his employer. In connection with this question we have also to bear in mind the observations made by the Court on the subject of a gomasta's authority in the case of Sudaman Jamadar v. Behari Mahton (2). The present case turns substantially on matters of fact and there is no sufficient reason why we should disturb the concurrent decree of the Courts below.

The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

EAST INDIA RAILWAY CO. v. JAGO RAM.

In a case where wilful negligence is alleged, the question whether there is any evidence at all to go to the Jury is a question of law, but if there is such evidence, the question whether wilful negligence has been established, is a question of fact. Where there is evidence to go to the Jury, the High Court will not interfere with the finding of fact whether there was or was not wilful negligence. [p. 199, cols. 1 & 2; p. 200, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Gaya, dated the 1st November 1916.

Messrs. Shushil Madhab Mullick and Siva Narain Bose, for the Appellant.

Mr. Rajendra Prosad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

ROE, J.—The facts of this case are that the plaintiff consigned a number of tins of ghee from Palmerganj to Calcutta, a distance of over three hundred miles. Either before the journey commenced or during the journey, sixty-two of these tins weighing nearly a ton disappeared. The plaintiff, therefore, brought a suit for damages against the Railway. The Courts below have made a decree in his favour on the ground that although the goods were despatched under a risk-note making the Railway liable only in the case of wilful negligence the evidence on the record justified the inference that there had been wilful negligence. In second appeal it is argued that the question of wilful negligence is a mixed question of fact and law, and therefore this Court is required to go into the evidence on the record and satisfy itself that legal wilful negligence has been proved. Failing that, it is urged that there is no direct allegation of wilful negligence in the plaint and nothing in the evidence of the plaintiff to show negligence at all on the part of the Railway, and that the Judge if he had been assisted by a Jury, would have been required to direct the Jury as soon as the plaintiff's case was closed that there was no evidence on which they could give a verdict. Further it is urged that the Railway did substantially prove that the goods were lost through a running train theft, and that the words running train robbery which in the risk-note, is a specific cause of loss against which the Railway is protected, includes an ordinary running train theft.

We may take firstly the question whether it was the duty of the learned Subordinate Judge in the first instance to refuse to go further into the case when upon the plaintiff's own evidence there was nothing to show wilful negligence. It is true that the learned District Judge has recognised that the burden of proof was on the plaintiff to show that his case came within one of the exceptions stated in this risk-note. It also may be true that if the defendant company had when the plaintiff had finished his evidence, adopted the course now suggested that is to say, had it declined to enter into evidence and relied upon the fact that there was from the plaintiff's side no evidence of negligence, the Court would have had not option but to dismiss the plaintiff's suit. But the Railway Company were not content with this. It undertook to show that it had taken all reasonable precautions. Both the Courts below were of opinion that it had entirely failed to show this. The District Judge went further than the Subordinate Judge. The Subordinate Judge on an erroneous application of section 76 to questions involved in cases in which the Company is protected by a risk-note, had thrown the burden upon the defendant of due diligence. The learned District Judge set himself to show that from the witnesses produced by the defendants themselves, there was evidence upon which wilful negligence had been proved. We are not in sympathy with the argument of the learned Vakil for the appellants that having all this evidence before him the learned Judge should not have regarded it at all, but should have decided the case upon the plaintiff's evidence alone. Having placed the evidence upon the record the Company cannot say that it was not to be taken into consideration. Nor are we in sympathy with the suggestion that the plaint itself disclosed no cause of action. It stated simply that the Company undertook to carry goods and failed to deliver them. The written statement stated that as the Company was protected by a risk-note it was not liable. Had the written statement stopped there, the case might possibly have been dismissed on the pleadings. But the written statement did not stop there. It set forth a substantive case that the goods had been lost owing to a running train robbery. It would have been open to the Company no doubt to confine its written statement to the production of the risk-note. It would have been the duty of the Court to call upon the plaintiff to amend his pleadings by specific allegations of wilful negligence, but seeing the nature of the defence put up by the Company, there was no necessity for any amendment of the plaintiff's statement of the facts.

It has always been held in the Courts in England that the Judge's duty is merely to say to the Jury that there is or is not evidence on the record which they must consider. If he rightly directs the Jury to take into consideration the facts indicated by the evidence, the verdict of the Jury as to the bearing of those facts upon the question of wilful negligence, is a final verdict and cannot be disturbed in appeal. The learned Judge set out a number of facts apparent on the record from which he held that wilful negligence might be deduced. There had been a suggestion in the cross-examination of the defendants' witnesses that the carriage door was not locked, and no attempt had been made to get rid of this suggestion. This cross-examination also indicated that the only precaution taken with this valuable consignment, was the affixing of a leaden seal which might be broken without difficulty. The discovery of the breaking of the seal was made on the night upon which the theft probably occurred. It was suggested by the learned Judge that if proper steps had been taken immediately to check the contents of the waggon, the bulk and weight of the goods lost was such that prompt action would have resulted in the recovery of at least a great part of the stolen goods. Speaking for myself I do not propose to consider for a moment whether or not the Judge should have found on these facts that there had been wilful negligence on the part of the Railway. I am certainly of opinion that it would have been extremely wrong for a Judge with all these facts upon the record to have informed a Jury that there was no evidence at all on which they could base a verdict. That being so, I am of opinion that the learned Judge's decision was a final decision on the question of negligence, and in this conclusion I am fortified by the decision in Metropolitan Ry. Co. v. Jackson (1) in which it is said: "In an action arising for personal injuries by negligence, it is the province of the Judge to say whether there is evidence from which negligence may be reasonably inferred, and of the Jury (if the evidence is left to them) to say whether it ought to be inferred."

In Vaughan v. Menlove (2) it was stated by Tindall, C. J., that "The care taken by a prudent man has always been the rule laid down; and as to the supposed difficulty of applying it, a Jury has always been able to say whether, taking that rule as their guide, there has been negligence on the occasion in question".

A similar view was taken by the Judicial Committee in Madras Railway Co. v. Zemindar of Carvelnagarum (3). At page 282, it is stated: "Negligence consists in the omitting to do something that a reasonable man would do, or in the doing something that a reasonable man would not do, in either case unintentionally causing mischief to a third party.... Their Lordships are unable to say that the case has been decided on an erroneous view of the law. On the question of fact whether or not negligence was proved by the evidence, they see no sufficient reason for departing from their ordinary rule of not disturbing the concurrent finding of two Courts".

The position, therefore, is that we as Judges of law have in second appeal to decide whether there was evidence to put before a Jury. I am of opinion that there was evidence that should have been laid before a Jury, and holding that opinion I must decide that the learned Judge's decision on the facts, was as final as a Jury's verdict would have been.

With regard to the last ground taken it is sufficient to say that theft is not robbery unless violence goes with the theft. I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

IMAM, J.—I am in complete agreement with the decision given by my learned brother. This second appeal is concluded by the finding of fact on the question of wilful negligence. The contention that that question is one that should not have at all been treated by the lower Appellate Court inasmuch as there was a total absence of evidence before the Court to support the allegation of wilful negligence, has little substance. The grounds stated in the judgment of the learned Judge show that there was evidence bearing upon the question of wilful negligence. The probative value of that evidence was for the Judge to consider. So far as we here are concerned, we are bound to accept the decision of the learned Judge on the question of wilful negligence as ascertained by him on the evidence. Therefore I agree that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908). s. 2 (2), O. XVII, rr. 2, 3—Suit dismissed for plaintiff's failure to produce evidence, whether decree or order.

An application for adjournment on the part of the plaintiff having been refused, the Court passed the following order: "As there is no evidence on the side of the plaintiff and some of the defendants, and though other defendants are ready but adduce no evidence, let the suit be dismissed."

Held, that the order was a decree inasmuch as it was a final decision of the suit so far as the Court was concerned. It was nonetheless so because the suit was dismissed in consequence of the plaintiff's failure to produce evidence. [p. 201, col. 1.]

Appeals against the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, Faridpur, dated the 17th February 1913, affirming those of the Munsif, 1st Court at Goalundo, dated the 28th November 1911.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Shib Chandra Palit, for the Appellant.—The suit was dismissed by the Munsif for non-production of evidence by the plaintiff. The plaintiff then applied to the Subordinate Judge. The learned Subordinate Judge says no appeal lay because the dismissal was not a decree. I submit the order of the Munsif is under Order XVII, rule 3 and is a decree,

The appeal must be taken to be dismissed on the merits. See Gaura Bibi v. Ghasitiya (1).

Babu Anilendra Nath Chowdhury (with him Babus Kumar Sankar Ray and Biraj Mohan Mozumdar), for the Respondents.—The case comes under Order XVII, rule 2 and not under rule 3. The defendants applied for time.

[CHITTY, J.—Both parties applied for time. See the order.], Referred to Satis Chandra Mukerjee v. Ahara Prasul Mukerjee (2).

[CHITTY, J.—There the Pleader withdrew.]

I submit it is not a decree because it comes under rule 2 and not under rule 3 of Order XVII, Civil Procedure Code.

JUDGMENT.—On 18th June 1907, the plaintiff instituted two suits for possession of land on declaration of their title thereto, mesne profits, and other relief.

For reasons which need not now be considered the suits did not come on for hearing for over two years.

On 9th November 1911, the suits were on the defendants' application adjourned to 28th November. As the plaintiff appears to have had some witnesses present in Court the defendants were ordered to pay the costs of that adjournment.

It appears clear that the oral testimony of those witnesses for the plaintiff was not considered sufficient to establish his case as we find that on 20th November 1911 on the application of the plaintiff a robokari was sent to the Collector of Dacca to send certain records. On the same day the defendants made a similar application and a robokari was also sent at their request. On 28th November 1911 the records had not arrived and it appears that the plaintiff was not able to make out his case without them. He applied for an adjournment which was refused. The Munsif then passed this order in each suit:—

"As there is no evidence on the side of the plaintiff and some of the defendants, and though other defendants are ready but adduce no evidence, let the suit be dismissed."

The plaintiff applied to the Subordinate Judge who held that no appeal lay on the ground that the order of the Munsif was not a "decree". It was argued for the respondents that it was an order under Order XVII, rule 2 but that cannot be as it was passed in the presence of the plaintiff and his Pleader. There is nothing to indicate that on the application for adjournment being refused, the plaintiff or his Pleader withdrew from either suit and allowed the order to go ex parte.

Then it was suggested that in these cases time had not been given to the plaintiff as on 9th November 1911 the suits were adjourned on the application of the defendants.

It is unnecessary to discuss whether it was an order under Order XVII, rule 3 or not. It was undoubtedly a final decision of the suit so far as the Munsif was concerned and the order in each case was a "decree" from which an appeal lay to the Subordinate Judge.

It was not the less so because the suits were dismissed in consequence of the plaintiffs' failure to produce evidence, see Kartick Chandra Pal v. Sridhar Mandal (3).

The orders of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside and the cases remanded to that Court for disposal of the appeals, upon the merits. The costs of these appeals to abide the result.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 11, 47—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 617—Partition decree—Accounts, whether can be claimed in execution—Res judicata—Reference, invalid, opinion expressed in, whether binding on parties.

In a suit for partition the parties believed that some of the villages which were the subject-matter of the suit could not be partitioned. A consent decree was passed under which some of these villages were left under the management of the plaintiff and others under that of the defendant. The decree also contained the following direction: "Accounts should be rendered once in a year and that in the month of April and the produce shall be divided according to the shares at the time." The parties had been seeking accounts from each other year after year in execution:

Held, that accounts could not be claimed in perpetuity in execution of a decree in evasion of the law of procedure and in evasion of the Court Fees Act. [p. 202, col. 1.]

In the year 1904 on the objection of one of the parties to render accounts, a reference was made to the Judicial Commissioner in which he expressed an opinion that it was too late to re-open the interpretation of the decree:

Held, (1) that as the reference was incompetent under section 617 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, any opinion expressed upon such a reference could not operate as res judicata, and did not amount to an adjudication binding on the Courts in subsequent stages; [p. 202, col. 1.]

(2) that even if it was an adjudication the Court was not bound to perpetuate an error. [p. 202, col. 1.]

Mr. G. V. Deshmukh, and the Hon'ble Mr. S. B. Tambe, for the Appellants

Mr. M. V. Joshi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal and the cross-objection filed by the respondent will be disposed of by this judgment. In Civil Suit No. 1 of 1884 in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Wun District a decree was passed by consent of parties on the 20th April 1885. The suit was a partition suit in which all property that could be divided was, as a matter of fact, divided, and effect has been given to this division in the course of execution proceedings. The parties, however, believed that under the law certain Jagir and Palampat villages could not be partitioned. Some of them were left under the management of the plaintiffs and some under that of the defendants. The parties have been seeking accounts from each other year after year in execution of this decree. Although no objection was raised, I was bound to take notice of the law on the subject as laid down in section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. The decree in case No. 1 of 1884 is a long decree, a printed copy of which has been placed before me contained in ten pages of foolscap paper. To establish the respondent's right to accounts in execution of this decree reliance is placed on the following passage contained in paragraph 1: "Accounts should be rendered once in a year and that in the month of April, and the produce shall be divided according to the shares at the time." It is contended that this direction in the decree is mandatory and not declaratory. I do not agree with this contention. I find it difficult to believe that the parties contemplated and the Court sanctioned that year after year in perpetuity, accounts are to be taken in execution of a decree in evasion of the law of procedure, and in evasion of the Court Fees Act. However, for years this has been going on without objection on the part of anybody except on one occasion when a reference was made by the Civil Judge to the Judicial Commissioner, Berar (vide Case No. 170 of 1904). The learned Officiating Judicial Commissioner doubted the legality of the reference inasmuch as an appeal lay to him. It is quite clear that under section 617 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, the reference was incompetent, and any opinion expressed upon such a reference cannot operate as res judicata. A reluctant opinion was expressed by the learned Judge that it was too late to re-open the interpretation of the decree. I note that the parties to the reference are all dead, and the parties before me are their successors-in-interest. The argument advanced on behalf of the respondent that the question is constructively res judicata does not merit serious consideration. As I have already pointed out, the opinion expressed on the reference does not amount to an adjudication binding on the Courts in subsequent stages. Even if it were an adjudication, the Court is not bound to perpetuate an error. The case is analogous to the case of Chamanlal v. Bapubhai (1).

We have, however, reached a convenient stage in the history of this litigation which, apart from all other considerations, compels me to take a view which puts an end to the present and all future applications. Assuming that there was a duty cast upon the defendants to pay the plaintiffs in suit No. 1 of 1884 the amounts due in respect of their share, and this duty was enforceable by an application in execution, that duty has ceased to exist. There have been partitions amongst the plaintiffs inter se. The result is that the joint right created by the decree in favour of the former plaintiffs collectively has, by reason of subsequent events, ceased to be enforceable in execution of the decree. Reliance, however, is placed on behalf of the respondent upon a passage in paragraph eleven of the judgment delivered by a Bench of this Court in First Appeal No. 21-B of 1912. This was an appeal from the partition suit (No. 33 of 1903). The passage is to the following effect: "The last prayer made by the plaintiff is that the sixth defendant Dattatraya should be ordered to give separate accounts in future for plaintiff's own share. An order will, therefore, be added to the decree that the sixth defendant Dattatraya shall in future pay separately to each branch of the junior branch of the whole family its own share of the income of the property left undivided in 1884." This creates a new liability but that liability cannot be enforced in execution of the decree in suit No. 1 of 1884 nor in execution of suit No. 36 of 1908 which was modified in First Appeal No. 21-B of 1912.

There are 39 issues in the case, and the lower Court with commendable patience has recorded voluminous evidence. It may be that the parties would agree to have this evidence treated as evidence in the suit which the respondent will not have to file. I have no doubt the parties were acting in good faith in filing applications for execution, and in fact they were bound to do so in deference to the opinion expressed by the Officiating Judicial Commissioner upon the reference already mentioned.

If the applications could have been converted into suits without objection on the ground of jurisdiction, I would have levied the additional Court-fees and treated them as plaint. But unfortunately the applications were made in the Court of the Additional District Judge whilst the suits should have been presented in an inferior Court.

The result is that I set aside the order of the Additional District Judge, dated the 30th January 1917 and dismiss the application for execution dated the 1st August 1914. The lower Court will now dispose of the order pending applications in accordance with this order. Each party will bear his own costs throughout.

Application dismissed.

RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182 (6)—‘Date of issue of notice,’ meaning of—Patna High Court, whether bound by view of Calcutta High Court.

The date of the issue of notice in Article 182 (6) of the Limitation Act means the date on which the notice actually issues from the office of the Court, that is to say, the date for which it is signed by the shristadar in the name of the Court.

In such cases the Patna High Court is bound to accept the view of the Calcutta High Court, inasmuch as it is on this view that Pleaders have been calculating limitation in making applications for execution. It would not be fair to turn round suddenly and say that the view of the Calcutta High Court is wrong.

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Bhagalpore, dated the 26th April 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, Madhipura, dated the 10th February 1917.

Mr. Chandra Sekhar Banerji, for the Appellant.

Messrs. P. K. Sen, B. N. Mitter and Lalit Mohan Ghosh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

ROE, J.—This appeal arises from an order of the District Court of Bhagalpur setting aside an order of the Munsif of Madhipura directing that a decree be executed. The only point for consideration is, whether execution of the decree is barred by limitation. On this point the decision turns upon the question which was to some extent left open by this Court in the case of Ram Kumar v. Kesho Prasad Singh (1). That question is, in clause 6

SONAULLA SARKAR V. TULA BIBI.

Article 182 of the Limitation Act, do the words: “The date of the issue of the notice” mean the date of the Court’s order that notice issue or the date on which a ministerial officer of the Court actually issues the notice.

I have again considered the views quoted in the case of Ram Kumar v. Kesho Prasad Singh (1). It cannot be for a moment denied that there is much to be said in support of those held in Calcutta and Madras. Perhaps even more may be said in favour of those held in Bombay and Allahabad. But I am of opinion that in a case such as the one before us we are bound to accept the view of the Calcutta Court. It is on this view that Pleaders have been calculating limitation in making applications for execution. It would not be fair to turn round suddenly and say that the decision of the Calcutta Court was wrong. For this reason I would hold as I held in the case of Ram Kumar v. Kesho Prasad Singh (1) that the date of the issue of notice means the date on which the notice actually issued from the office of the Court, that is to say, the date on which it is signed by the sheristadar in the name of the Court. In this view the application was within time. The appeal must, therefore, be decreed, the order of the District Court set aside and that of the Munsif’s Court restored. The respondent will pay the appellant’s costs throughout.

IMAM, J.—I agree.

—APPELLANT

versus

Srimati TULA BIBI—PLAINTIFF—
RESPONDENT.

Muhammadan Law—Mother of minor girl appointed certificated guardian, whether can question marriage of minor effected by her uncle—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 42, 43—Suit for declaration that the marriage of a Muhammadan minor girl is invalid, whether maintainable.

Under the Muhammadan Law the mother, even when appointed certificated guardian of the person and property of her minor daughter, has no legal character within the meaning of section 42, Specific Relief Act, entitling her to a declaration that the marriage of her daughter with a certain person effected by her uncle, is not valid. [p. 206, col. 1.]

It would not be a proper exercise of judicial discretion to make any declaration under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act in a suit by the guardian of a Muhammadan minor girl for a declaration that her marriage with a certain person is invalid when the minor is not a party to the suit inasmuch as under section 43 of the Act, the decree would not be binding upon the minor. [p. 206, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rajshahi, dated the 28th of February 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, Boalia, dated the 14th of April 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Dhirendra Nath Bhagchi for Babu Bhrendra Nath Chatterjee, for the Appellant—This appeal is on behalf of the defendant No. 1, and it arises out of a suit for a declaration that the marriage of plaintiff's minor daughter Mahitan (who has not been made a party to this suit) with the defendant No. 3, the minor son of defendant No. 2, is fictitious, invalid and inoperative. The minor Mahitan was at first given in marriage by the defendant No. 1, who is her paternal uncle, to Baharulla (defendant No. 3), the minor son of defendant No. 2. This marriage took place on the 2nd Chaitra 1320 B. S. Two days after this marriage, plaintiff, the mother of Mahitan again gave her in marriage to one Ismail. Thereafter this suit has been brought by the plaintiff for cancelling the first marriage effected by the uncle on the ground that that marriage was collusive and inoperative, that the certificated guardian of the person of the minor plaintiff alone was competent to give her minor daughter away in marriage and that the marriage set up by the defendants might cause harm to the plaintiff, her daughter, son-in-law and other relations.

My submission is that as the plaintiff's minor daughter Mahitan (to cancel whose marriage with the defendant No. 3 the present suit has been brought) has not been made a party to the suit, the suit is not maintainable, because any decree passed in this suit would not be binding upon the girl under section 43 of the Specific Relief Act. The marriage in question cannot be cancelled by a suit in the present form, inasmuch as, there cannot be a marriage effected and made in the absence of the bride so there cannot be a marriage cancelled in the absence of the wife.

As regards the question as to whether the plaintiff is entitled to maintain the suit, the finding of the lower Appellate Court is as follows:—"It is an admitted fact that the plaintiff has been appointed by the District Judge the guardian of the person and property of her minor daughter, Mahitan. She has thus a legal character which entitles her to keep the minor in her custody. According to Muhammadan Law among the Hanifees the mother is entitled to the custody of her daughter until she attains puberty, and again it is provided that among the Malikis, Shafis, etc., the custody continues until she is married. The parties to this suit are Sunnees and so if the marriage is proved as it is attempted in this case by the defendant, the husband or if he be a minor, his guardian can claim the possession of the person of the married minor girl from the custody of her mother. Thus section 42 of the Specific Relief Act applies to the present case as it provides "that any person entitled to any legal character may institute a suit against any person denying or interested to deny his title to such character." My submission is that the above finding of the lower Appellate Court is erroneous. Section 42 does not apply to this case because nobody is denying or can deny the plaintiff's right to keep her daughter in her custody until she attains puberty. Moreover, under the Muhammadan Law the uncle of the girl (the defendant No. 1) as the nearest male agnate is entitled to give away his niece in marriage in preference to the mother of the girl (the plaintiff), and the fact that she has been appointed guardian of her daughter's person and property, does not make any difference. See Mullah's Muhammadan Law, 5th Edition, page 165. The plaintiff as the certificated guardian is entitled to the custody of the person and property of her minor daughter, and her right of custody continues even after the marriage and would continue up till the attainment of the puberty of her minor daughter. The fact that she has been given in marriage by her natural guardian, the uncle, does not deprive the mother of her right to the custody of her daughter. So far as the Muhammadan Law is concerned, the bulk of modern authority is in favour of the view that according to that law the mother of a girl who is married but has not attained puberty, is entitled to the custody of her person as against the husband. Refers to Khatija Bibi, In the matter of (1), Nur Kadir v. Zuleikha Bibi (2), Korban v. King-Emperor (3). Therefore, as the plaintiff's legal character as guardian of the person of her minor daughter has not in any way been affected by the marriage, she is not competent to question the validity of the marriage of her daughter effected by the paternal uncle who had a preferential right to give away the girl in marriage. No cause of action accrues to her when her guardianship continues even after the marriage.

[BEACHCROFT, J.—Is not the mother as certificated guardian appointed by the District Judge, entitled to give the girl in marriage in preference to the girl's natural guardian for marriage?]

No. The rules as to guardianship for marriage depend exclusively upon the Muhammadan law. Refers to Wilson's Digest of Anglo-Muhammadan Law, 4th Edition pages 90 and 176. Those rules cannot be affected by any order that may be passed under the Guardian and Wards Acts. Refers to Hadish Bapari v. Rogamulla Sheik (4). Under the above circumstances as there has been no infringement or threatened infringement of the plaintiff's right she is not entitled, under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, to get the declaration sought for in this suit. Refers to Harendra Lal Ray v. Salmullah (5).

Babu Krishna Kamal Maitra, for the Respondent.—As regards, the question of the mother's right to the custody of the person of her married minor daughter, the rule of Muhammadan Law on this subject is summarised in Wilson's Digest of Anglo-Muhammadan Law, 4th Edition, page 193.

The Courts below have found that the defendant No. 1, who is the step brother of the girl's father has all along been trying to deprive the girl Mahitan and her mother (the plaintiff) of their property and has also been acting inimically to the mother and the daughter, and has brought about this marriage with the defendant No. 3 to serve his own purpose. The factum of marriage has been found by both the Courts below to be fictitious. I submit that the plaintiff, who is the natural and certificated guardian of the person of her minor daughter, is entitled, for the welfare of the latter to bring a suit for a declaration that the alleged marriage, the factum of which has been disbelieved by both the Courts below, is fictitious, invalid and inoperative.

Babu Dharendra Nath Bagchi in reply.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—The plaintiff in this suit is the mother and certificated guardian of a minor Muhammadan girl. The defendant No. 1, the appellant before us, is the uncle of girl. He is said to be the step-brother of the defendant No. 2, who is the father of the minor defendant No. 3 Baharulla Mundal. The suit was brought for a declaration that a ceremony purporting to be a ceremony of marriage between the plaintiff's daughter and the defendant No. 3 was not duly performed and was invalid. The Courts below have concurred in making the declaration sought and this appeal is preferred by the defendant No. 1.

The question whether the rites required by the Muhammadan Law were duly performed, turns on matters of fact and if the decrees of the Courts below were not otherwise open to objection, their finding on that question would be binding on us.

On behalf of the defendant No. 1, however, it has been contended throughout that the suit is not maintainable by the plaintiff on the ground that she has no right or authority to intervene in matters relating to the marriage of her daughter. It is said that when, as here, the uncle is the nearest male agnate, he is the guardian for marriage of his minor niece and is in a position to compel her marriage to a bridegroom of his own selection, subject to the girl's right, on attaining puberty, to refuse her consent to the marriage and to take the proper steps to have it cancelled.

In the Courts below it seems to have been held (without reference to the rights of the uncle) that the mother as the appointed guardian of the person and property of her minor daughter has a legal character within the meaning of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act entitling her to the declaration which she seeks. The daughter's marriage or alleged marriage is apparently regarded as an invasion of the mother's rights as guardian, which, it is said, are "affected." This view of the case cannot be supported.

Clearly the legal character or status involved is the status of the two persons said to have been married, and the true objection to the suit is that the plaintiff's daughter is no party to it. She is, it would seem treated as a chattel while her elders are disputing about her disposal in marriage, either because there are money considerations involved or because they are quarrelling about other matters. As the suit is framed, in any view of the rights of the uncle it would not be a proper exercise of judicial discretion to make any declaration under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, inasmuch as under section 43 the decree would not be binding on the daughter.

It is unnecessary, therefore, to determine the relative rights of the mother and uncle in the present connection or to deal with the further question whether under any or under what circumstances it would be open to a mother either as the natural guardian or as the appointed guardian of her daughter, with a view to the protection of her daughter's interests to bring all necessary parties before the Court and to seek a judicial pronouncement as to the validity of a form of marriage to which that daughter had been subjected.

If our decision in the present case should leave the mother in any doubt as to her duty, it will be open to her by application to ask for the advice of the District Judge.

The appeal succeeds on the ground indicated. The judgments and decrees of the Courts below are set aside and the suit dismissed. In the circumstances we make no order as to costs.

Messrs. P. S. Kotwal, and K. K. Gandhe, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The two minor plaintiffs are the sons of defendant No. 2 Bhagwanappa. They sue for a declaration that their two-third share in the joint ancestral property foreclosed by defendant No. 1 in pursuance of a mortgage, dated the 11th February 1913, is unaffected by the mortgage and the decree. The plaintiffs' case is that their father incurred debts for immoral purposes, and hence the debts are not binding upon the plaintiffs. The second plaintiff was not even born at the date of the mortgage, and it is practically conceded that so far as he is concerned, the suit must fail in any case. Now the consideration for the mortgage consists of the following items:—

BHIKA V. HARLAL.

Due on a decree to one Lahanappa to which the plaintiff No. 1 was a party ...	6,711	2	0
Due to defendant No. 1 on a prior mortgage, dated the 9th May, 1912 ...	1,269	0	0
Borrowed for payment of assessment and cultivation expenses ...	519	14	0
TOTAL ...	8,500	0	0

The plaintiffs if they can succeed at all, can only succeed with regard to the share of plaintiff No. 1, which would be half of the family property. To start with, there was a decree binding on plaintiff No. 1 for Rs. 6,000 and odd. There is nothing in the pleadings which questions the binding character of that decree as against the plaintiff No. 1 beyond the general allegation that all the debts were incurred for immoral purposes. Unless, therefore, the plaintiff No. 1 is in a position to successfully get rid of that decree, he cannot, in my opinion, raise a defence which might and ought to have been raised in the previous suit, (Suit No. 19 of 1912).

The lower Court has very properly summed up the evidence in the following terms: "The plaintiff's father was extravagant, fond of entertaining, and was perhaps to some extent immoral. There is vague evidence that the father was fond of natches, tamashas and the society of prostitutes." There is also vague evidence that he used to borrow money for such purposes from creditors and eventually pay them off by borrowing from other creditors. The plaintiffs in their evidence have gone a stage beyond the pleadings by suggesting that their father was also a gambler, an imputation which the latter indignantly repudiates.

A detailed examination of the evidence will not prove anything more than what I have said, except the evidence of the father himself. It is clear that the grandfather of the plaintiffs had no debts and left 20 tiffans of land yielding an annual income of Rs. 1,500 to 2,000. Bhagwan (P. W. No. 7) who is the father of the plaintiffs says that he used to borrow and then re-pay and borrow again and re pay. He used to take Rs. 100 to Rs. 500 at a time, but he cannot state the years and details. The money was borrowed for keeping women at his place as his wives were young. The debts incurred in small amounts accumulated to about Rs. 400 or 500, and to pay off these he had to borrow from Harlal (defendant No. 1). Then he borrowed from a Kachhi and a Rohilla for purposes of cloth, and also for keeping women, but he is unable to state how much he borrowed for the latter purpose. To pay off his other debts he borrowed from Lahanappa and Panduappa. He did not inform Harlal (defendant No. 1) in 1907 that the money was borrowed for bad purposes, but he had informed Lahanappa that the purpose of the debt was bad. This is practically all the evidence which he gives of the immoral purpose of the loans. He practically admitted that part of the money borrowed was for necessary purposes, such as the purchase of cloth, but he is unable to state how much and from which creditor and in what year he borrowed money for immoral purposes. His statement that he informed Lahanappa about the reason for the borrowing, has been disbelieved by the lower Court, and it is obviously false.

There is really no clear statement as regards Rs. 1,269 due upon the mortgage of May 1912, nor is any statement made with regard to the cash borrowed under the mortgage. On the contrary, the evidence of D. W. No. 1 would show that the money was required for payment of assessment and household purposes. The question is whether the plaintiff No. 1 can impeach the mortgage and decree. The biggest item is binding on plaintiff No. 1 as I have already stated there is nothing to connect the loans taken in 1912 and 1913 with any immoral debt. In fact, the witness Bhagwan admits that he has given up his immoral habits since some time. At first he stated that this was when his wives came of age but later on he says he has reformed since the last two years, that is, since the date of the last mortgage in suit.

The appellant's learned Counsel relies upon the case of Maharaj Singh v. Balwant Singh (1). In a later case Babu Singh v. Bihari Lal (2) Banerji, J. and Richards, J., held that the burden of proof is on the son to show that the father's debt was incurred for immoral purposes in order to exempt the son's share of the family property from liability. Although the Full Bench case of Chandradeo Singh v. Mata Prasad (3), takes a different view as regards the father to alienate joint family property, yet the particular part decided in Babu Singh v. Bihari Lal (2), was not overruled, a distinction being made between a suit upon a mortgage and a suit upon a money claim.

The view taken in Bombay is in accordance with the view of this Court in Jawahirsing v. Mohanlal (4). There must be some definite connection established between the debt and the expenditure. It is not sufficient to prove that the father was a man of extravagant and vicious habits. See Chintamanrao Mahendralal v. Kashinath (5). In Vasudev Morbhat Kale v. Krishnaji Ballal Gokhale (6), it was held that the onus of proving that the debt incurred by the father was for immoral or illegal purpose, was not shifted on to the creditor by proof of immoral habits. The same view was taken in Dattatraya Vishnu v. Vishnu Narayan (7). In Maharaj Singh v. Balwant Singh (1) the learned Judges make a distinction between a case where a mortgage is sought to be enforced against the son's interests and a case where the property has already passed out of a joint family. In the present case, the property has been already foreclosed by defendant No. 1. But I think the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court meant to refer to cases where the property has passed out of a family under a sale in execution of a decree. The present case, therefore, cannot really be distinguished from the Allahabad case. Although the learned Judges state as their opinion, that it is the duty of the creditor to prove that he has made proper enquiries with a view to satisfy himself that the money was not borrowed for immoral purposes, they eventually proceed to record their finding that the son has satisfied the onus in the particular case of proving that the loan made to the father was for an immoral purpose. But the learned Judges held that it was not incumbent upon the son to prove that the lender knew of the immoral purpose. Whether it is for the son to prove that the lender had notice of the immoral purposes of a loan taken by the father or whether it is for the creditor to prove that he made enquiries and was satisfied that it was not required for any such purpose, is a difficult question which need not be decided in this case. Following the judgment of this Court in Jawahirsing v. Mohanlal (4), I hold that as no definite connection has been established between the debts which were satisfied by the mortgage and any immoral expenditure, the plaintiffs are not entitled to maintain this suit. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Babu Ram Chandra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—After hearing this case argued at length by the learned Counsel on both sides I have come to the conclusion that the decision of the Courts below is wrong and that this appeal should be allowed. The suit which has given rise to the appeal, was a suit for declaration brought by two plaintiffs Kalka Singh and Sital Singh against three defendants Suraj Bali Lal, Kali Din Lal and Ram Narain Lal. The declaration which the plaintiffs asked for, was that the defendants had neither proprietary nor under proprietary rights in a 2-biswas, 18-biswasans, 4-kachwasans, 13-nanwasans share in Manzi Amrethu Dadiha. The defendants relied upon a deed which was executed in their favour by the predecessors-in-interest of the plaintiffs who were owners of a certain share in this village. This document bears date the 4th of March 1901. On the face of it, it purports to be nothing more than a deed of perpetual lease. It is an admitted fact that after this lease had been executed the name of the lessee, Bindeshuri Lal was entered in the register of proprietors. After the present plaintiffs had succeeded to their interest in the village it is admitted that they made an application to the Revenue Courts to have the khewat corrected, alleging that under the terms of the document just mentioned, Bindeshuri Lal or his successors had no right to be recorded as proprietors. The plaintiffs asked that they should be recorded as under-proprietors. The Court in which this application was made, seems to have entertained considerable doubts as to the proper manner in which the entry should be made. However, an entry was made and subsequently by reason of an order passed by the Commissioner in appeal it was finally settled that the names of these defendants should be recorded as under-proprietors. The plaintiffs now bring this suit asking for a declaration that the defendants have no proprietary or under-proprietary interest in the property affected by the deed of 1901. It is admitted frankly in the plaint that the plaintiffs had previously, by a mistake of law, been under the impression that the defendants were under-proprietors and that it was principally in consequence of that admission that the entry was made in the revenue records which the plaintiffs now desire to have corrected by means of this declaration. Both the Courts below have held on their interpretation of this document of the 4th March 1901 that Bindeshuri Lal acquired the rights of an under-proprietor. There can be no doubt as to the meaning of the expression "under-proprietor" which is defined in section 3, clause 8, of the Oudh Rent Act where it is said that an "under-proprietor" means any person possessing a heritable and transferable right of property in land for which he is liable to pay rent." If we look to the terms of the deed which is relied upon by the defendants-respondents we find that the lessee Bindeshuri Lal was put in possession of the share specified and of all rights attaching thereto; and it was expressly declared that the grant made to him was for generation after generation. A further term of the deed was that Bindeshuri Lal as lessee was to deposit in the Government Treasury Rs. 60 a year for malguzari exclusive of cesses and was in addition to pay the lessors the sum of Rs. 10 per annum by way of malikana. In the third clause of the document, the grantors were to have mutation made in favour of Bindeshuri by getting his name recorded in what is described as "khana milkiat." Then it was provided that the lessee was to have the powers of distraint of suing for arrears of rent and of ejecting tenants, and finally the document winds up with a declaration that it had been drawn up as a deed of perpetual lease. It is not disputed by either party that Bindeshuri under the terms of this document acquired a heritable interest in the property of which he was put in possession; but that fact would not of course be sufficient by itself to constitute him an under-proprietor regard being had to the definition which I have mentioned above. It must also be shown that a transferable right was created in favour of Bindeshuri. Both the Courts below have admitted that there is nothing in the language of the deed to show expressly that any power of transfer was granted; and it seems to me that unless it can be shown from the language of the document, which on the defendants' own case is the source of all the title they possess, that a power of transfer was granted, either expressly or by necessary implication, it follows that these defendants cannot claim for themselves the status of under-proprietors. The learned Subordinate Judge has laid great stress on the clause in the document by which the grantors agreed to have the name of Bindeshuri entered in the revenue registers in the "khana milkiat"; but I think undue importance has been attached to this clause especially when it is borne in mind that lessees are under the Land Revenue Act treated in certain respects as if they were proprietors. A reference to section 32 of the Land Revenue Act (U. P. Act III of 1901) and in particular to the Explanation attached to the section shows that for the purpose of maintaining the registers which go to make up the Record of Rights the terms 'proprietor' and 'under-proprietor' "include a person in possession of proprietary or under-proprietary rights under a mortgage or lease." It cannot, therefore, be said that the use of the words "khana milkiat" in this document necessarily imports that the intention of the grantors was to confer upon Bindeshuri any proprietary interest including a power of transfer with respect to the property referred to in the deed. It is true, and the learned Counsel for the respondents is entitled to rely upon the fact, that the terms of the document provide that the lessee is to pay the lessors a certain annual sum by way of malikana, and it is true, as has been argued, that in a manner this position assigned to the lessee is similar to the position of an under-proprietor who pays the revenue in the same way and pays a percentage on the revenue to the superior proprietor. But I should be very unwilling to concede that the use of these terms can be treated as indicating with anything like certainty an intention on the part of the grantors to give the lessee Bindeshuri a right of transfer which would make him an under-proprietor within the meaning of that expression as used in the Ouch Rent Act. It is quite true of course that the perpetual lessee Bindeshuri and his successors-in-interest have a certain power of transfer which they acquired by virtue of the Statute (Cf. section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act). There is no doubt that the interest of a lessee may be transferred absolutely or by way of mortgage or sub-lease in the absence of any contract to the contrary. But, in my opinion, this statutory right of transfer cannot be called in aid for the purpose of demonstrating that the person to whom this perpetual lease was granted, is an under-proprietor, for, in my view of the law, in order to constitute a person an under-proprietor by a grant it is necessary that his power of transfer should be derived from the grant and not from the Statute Law. The Statute merely says that the interest which the lessee acquires by the execution of a lease in his favour is capable of transfer with certain conditions; but what we have to determine in this case really is the nature of the interest which was conferred by the document itself; and that question must be determined without any reference to the language of the Transfer of Property Act: and obviously there is a wide distinction between the power of transfer which a lessee has under section 108 of the Act and the power of transfer which an under-proprietor possesses. However many transfers of the lessee's interest there may be under the power which is granted by section 108 (B), clause (j), of the Transfer of Property Act, the law says that the lessee does not cease by reason of the transfers to be subject to any of the liabilities attaching to the lease. On the other hand, I think it is well-understood that if a person possesses an under-proprietary interest in the land and transfers that interest to a third party he ceases ipso facto to be liable to the superior proprietor for the payment of any rent in respect of the land. The superior proprietor is bound to accept the transfer and to look for his rents to the transferee. He cannot in any way hold the under-proprietor who has parted with his interest, liable for the payment of anything by way of rent. In the course of argument I have been referred to a number of cases to be found in the reports of this Court [Kesko Singh v. Chaudhri Mohammad Azim (1), Mohammad Mehdi Ali Khan v. Ram Charan (2) and Nand Ram v. Amanat Fatima Begum (3) and an unreported case decided by Mr. Chamier (Second Civil Appeal No. 23 of 1910, Anant Bahadur v. Ram Adhin)]. I cannot see that there is anything in these cases which really helps much to the decision of the case which is before me. Cases like these must be decided on their own facts and the law being well understood the only question in each case is how the law is to be applied to the particular facts which are put before the Court. Mr. Ram Chandra, however, relies strongly upon an observation made by Mr. Chamier in the second civil appeal to which I have referred. His argument is that as there can be no doubt that Bindeshuri acquired a heritable interest under the terms of this perpetual lease, the inference should be, in the absence of language to the contrary that the intention was to grant also an interest which was transferable. Mr. Chamier observed as follows in connection with him:—"It cannot be said that every shankalapdar is an under-proprietor but where under a deed of shankalap or otherwise a person is shown to have a permanent heritable interest in land under a grant and no right of re entry is reserved to the grantor it must, I think, be presumed that the interest is transferable." I am not prepared to accept this dictum as being one of general application and I certainly could not apply it in the case of a deed which, as in the present instance, purports to be nothing more nor less than a perpetual lease. In the case of shankalap grants there may perhaps be some reason for attributing to the grantor an intention to give a transferable right because under the customary law it is understood generally that shankalap tenure is an under-proprietary tenure; but I am not prepared to allow that in construing a deed the terms of which appear to me to be clear enough and which purports to be nothing more than a deed of lease it is permissible to attribute to the lessor an intention to confer rights of transfer unless, as I have already observed, there are express words to that effect or unless such an intention is necessarily implied in the language of the grant. On my interpretation of this document the right of Bindeshuri Lal and his successors-in-interest is clear enough. They are perpetual lessees entitled to hold from generation to generation upon payment of Rs. 50 Government revenue into the Treasury plus Rs. 12 per annum to the superior proprietors by way of malikana and it is not to be denied that they have certain rights of transfer or assignment rights which are allowed to them by Statute and no others. But I am bound to hold in view of the definition of the term "under-proprietor" and of the law relating to under-proprietary tenures as well settled in this Court that this document of the 4th of March 1901 did not confer upon Bindeshuri the status of an under-proprietor. I think, therefore, that in these proceedings that the plaintiffs were entitled to have a declaration that the defendants have no proprietary nor under-proprietary rights in the land referred to in the suit. As regards the admissions made by the plaintiffs in the course of the proceedings which were taken in the Revenue Court for the purpose of having the entries in the registers corrected I have already referred to them. The plaintiffs acknowledge that the admissions were made under a mistake of law and on my interpretation of the document which I have just set out it must, I think, be held that there was a mistake of law on the plaintiffs' part. The question of the plaintiffs' mistake is only of importance in considering the matter of costs; and as it is apparent that it was the plaintiffs' mistake which contributed in a large degree, if not entirely, to the wrong entry which is now found in the revenue record I consider they are not entitled to any costs in any of the three Courts through which this case has gone. I, therefore, allow the appeal and grant the declaration sought for in the plaint, but I allow the plaintiffs no costs in any of the three Courts.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 90 —Execution—Sale—Irregularity, effect of—Sale, whether can be set aside.

An execution sale cannot be set aside on the ground of irregularity under Order XXI, rule 90, Civil Procedure Code, if there is nothing to warrant the necessary or at least reasonable inference, that the inadequacy of price was the result of the irregularity. [p. 213, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Second Subordinate Judge, Dacca, dated the 29th June 1915.

FACTS material to the report will appear from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge which was as follows:—

"This is an application to set aside the sale on the grounds (1) that the hour of the sale was not mentioned; (2) that no sale-proclamation was published and the properties were, therefore, sold for inadequate values at the sale.

Point No. 1.

The order-sheet of the execution case shows that on the 12th September 1914

the sale was postponed to the 12 o'clock on 26th October 1914 at the instance of the judgment-debtors. On the 26th October 1914 the judgment-debtors presented another petition to postpone the sale so that they might pay off the decree, but their petition was rejected and the properties were sold on the 2nd November 1912 within 7 days from the date of 26th October 1914, and the Court did do so in order to enable the judgment-debtors to pay off the decree within those 7 days and the Court was competent to postpone sale from day to day within 7 days without the necessity of a fresh sale proclamation. So the ruling in Bhikari Misra v. Rani Surja Moni Pat Maha Dai (1) has no application in this case.

As to the second point.—The record of the execution case shows that the judgment-debtors objected to the values of the properties to be sold, and the properties were allowed to be advertised for sale with the values as stated by the judgment-debtors. So the decree-holder had not the intention to suppress the notice to determine such values, and such notice gave the judgment-debtors an opportunity to be on the alert for the sale which was to follow the notice. From the deposition of Taimuddi Bepari, judgment-debtor, it appears that he knew of the non-publication of the sale proclamation and with such knowledge he repeatedly put in petitions for postponements offering to allow the sale without fresh proclamation. His conduct amounts to a waiver as to the factum of service or its regularity, formality and legality. If he had not such knowledge of publication or non-publication, there could have been no waiver. The decree-holder relied on Girdhari Singh v. Hurdeo Narain Sahoo (2), Raja Thakur Barham v. Ananta Ram Marwari (3), Dhanukdhari Singh v. Nathima Sahu (4) in support of this view of the law. Again, the evidence of factum of publication of the sale proclamation seems to be more reliable, and the conduct of the parties lends support to it. The evidence of its non-publication does not seem to be convincing. The witnesses in proof of such evidence of negative character are not independent and reliable. Then, again, the properties were subject to two previous mortgages of Rs. 2,000 principal with Rs. 4,500 as interest and Rs. 3,000 respectively. The evidence as to the values of the properties which the judgment debtor has adduced, is not reliable in the absence of documentary evidence available. The Sthith furd Exhibit I does not bear the signature of its scribe. It is only corroborative evidence. Its scribe is dead. It does not seem to have been prepared in ordinary course of business.

On the above grounds I am inclined to decide both the grounds against the applicant. So ordered that the application is rejected with costs. Pleader's fee for each party is Rs. '3."

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Dacca, dated 29th June 1915, refusing an application under Order XXI, rule 90 of the Code of Civil Procedure for setting aside the sale of certain properties of the appellants in execution of a decree obtained against them by the respondents. The contention of the appellants is that property worth over Rs. 17,000 has been bought by the decree-holder respondent for Rs. 4,950 and that this inadequacy of price is due to material irregularity in conducting the sale. Before the lower Court it was sought to prove that there had been no publication of the sale proclamation but this point was not pressed before us. As regards the other point that was taken in the lower Court it is conceded by the learned Pleader for the respondent that the omission of the Court to specify the hour of sale, when the sale was adjourned, amounted to an irregularity but he supports the decision on the ground that the price was not inadequate. The evidence has been read to us and we see no reason to differ from the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the oral evidence as to the value of the properties sold, is not reliable. The question whether the properties are subject to a valid mortgage is a point in dispute between the parties that has not been decided in these proceedings but, whether the judgment-debtor's assertion that the properties are not mortgaged be true or not, the fact that such an assertion had been made, would discourage intending purchasers. On the evidence we are, therefore, unable to hold that the price fetched is inadequate but, even if we held to the contrary, the appeal would still fail on the ground that the only irregularity proved, did not result in the injury suffered in that view by the appellants. The present case resembles that of Mahabir Pershad Singh v. Dhanukdhari Singh (5), and after considering the circumstances and facts of the present case we are of opinion, as the learned Judges were in that case, that there is nothing to warrant the necessary, or at least reasonable, inference that the inadequacy of price, if there were any, was the result of the admitted irregularity. The learned Pleader for the respondent undertakes that if the sale stands, his client will enter full satisfaction of the decree in execution of which the property was sold.

We accordingly dismiss this appeal but under all the circumstances without costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the late Raja Udai Pratap Adya Dat Singh, C. S. I., of Bhinga, now represented by his widow, and three other persons for the removal of Musammatt Lakshmi Kunwar from her position as a trustee and manager of a temple at Ajudhia and the property appertaining to it. The temple aforesaid was constructed by Thakurain Sukhraj Kunwar, the Taluqdar of Deotaha. At the time of the Summary Settlement, the Deotaha Estate was incorporated with that of Bhinga. In 1871 Thakurain Sukhraj Kunwar succeeded in establishing her right to the Deotaha estate and obtained possession thereof under a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Musammatt Thakurain Sookraj Kunwar v. Government (1). The construction of the temple was started in 1857 and completed in 1861.

On the 21st May 1872, Thakurain Sukhraj Kunwar executed what she described as a munfi-nama or deed of munfi grant, entrusting the village Dharam Nagar, forming part of the Deotaha estate, to her family guru or preceptor Mahant Rangrajpat for the purpose of providing for the performance of the worship of and the offering of bhog or food to the deity installed in the temple and authorising him and his successors to collect the rents thereof without any liability for the payment of the revenue and to apply the same to the purposes of the trust. By the said deed she directed her heirs and descendants for all generations to come not to interfere with the collection of the rents of the village, which was set apart for the said purposes. On the same date she executed a Will, by which she bequeathed the rest of her estate to Raja Udai Partab Adya Dat Singh of Bhinga.

On the 2nd June 1875 the lady died without leaving any issue. It is not denied that Rangrajpat remained in possession of the temple and of the village endowed for its use till his death in 1883. He was succeeded in the management by his son Rasikrajpat alias Babbanpat, who died in 1903, and was succeeded in turn by his widow Musammatt Lakshmi Kunwar, the present defendant-appellant. Between 1893 and 1911 several attempts were made by the Court of Wards in charge of the Bhinga estate and after its release by the Raja of Bhinga to obtain possession of the village and the temple, but they were unsuccessful. A suit filed by the Court of Wards in 1893 was dismissed on the ground that the Court in which it was instituted, had no jurisdiction to entertain it (Exhibit A 6). Another suit filed by the Court of Wards in 1897 was similarly dismissed on the ground that the deed of 21st May 1872 created an endowment for a public religious purpose and that no suit was maintainable except in accordance with section 539 of the then Code of Civil Procedure (Exhibit 83). In 1911 a suit brought by the Raja of Bhinga for possession of certain buildings appertaining to the temple was withdrawn. In 1904 the Raja, however, succeeded in obtaining a decree for the resumption of the village Dharam Nagar under section 107, clause (E), of the Oudh Rent Act, thereby depriving the temple of the main source of its income, which was derived from that village.

In the present suit the plaintiffs seek to oust the defendant from the management of the temple and the buildings appertaining thereto alleging that the defendant has been mismanaging the trust, neglecting to keep accounts and disregarding the regular performance of worship and the celebration of the customary festivals, and that she had misappropriated jewellery, clothes and other valuable furniture appertaining to the temple. It is also asserted that she is an illiterate pardanashin lady about 70 years old and consequently incompetent and unfit for the office and duties appertaining to the trustee of a temple. The learned Additional Judge exonerated her from the charge of neglecting the trust and misappropriating its property; but in the interests of the trust framed a scheme for the better administration of the trust, giving the defendant a position on the board of trustees.

(1) 14 M. L. A. 112; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 705; 20 E. R. 728.

The defendant seeks to challenge the decree passed by the Court below on three grounds. In the first place, she contends that the plaintiffs other than the Raja Bhinga had no right to institute the suit inasmuch as they were not interested in the object of the trust. In the second place, she contends that the trust was a private trust in regard to which the Court had no power to interfere under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In the third place, she argues that on the finding that she had committed no breach of trust, she ought not to have been deprived of her power of management.

In the written statement, filed by her in the Court below, she had denied the existence of a trust of any kind whatsoever suggesting that the temple had been made over to her father-in-law Rangrajpat Tewari, by Thakurain Sukhraj Kunwar, but no such position has been taken up in this Court. In the deed of endowment, executed by Thakurain Sukhraj Kunwar, it is not expressly stated whether the thakurdwara or temple built by her was intended for private or for public worship; but from the circumstances admitted by the witnesses of either party, that the temple has been from its very beginning open to the public for worship and that the customary religious festivals have been celebrated therein in a public manner, there can be no doubt as to the intention of the author of the trust. The lady lived in Bhinga. The temple was constructed in Ajudhia, a place of pilgrimage. The lady had no issue and was obviously anxious to obtain religious benefit for her soul. The temple forms the main structure in a set of buildings in one of which she herself lived in the latter days of her life, looking after the performance of worship, and died. In the written statements filed by Rasikrajpat, the husband of the defendant-appellant, in the previous suits, it was distinctly admitted that the trust was not a private trust. In her own statement in one of the previous suits, the present defendant-appellant admitted that Thakurain Sukhraj Kunwar had told her that she had built the temple for the public benefit and to perpetuate her name (Exhibit 10). In her statement in this case she similarly admits (O. P. 288) that the temple was constructed for being visited by the Hindu public and that no restriction was placed on visitors. Several witnesses of the defendant-appellant, including Banke Behari Lal (O. P. 184), Mahabir Prasad (O. P. 193), Shambhu Nath (O. P. 201) and Jai Dayal (O. P. 220), also admit that the temple is open to the Hindu public like the other temples at Ajudhia. The evidence adduced to show that a gift of the temple was made in favour of Rangrajpat after it was completed, was rightly disbelieved by the learned Additional Judge. In Mohan Lalji v. Tikait Sri Girdhar Lalji (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out that apart from positive testimony of the point the performance of the worship of an idol in accordance with the rites of the sect for whose benefit it was held, might be treated as good evidence of dedication, and the ordinary rule of the Hindu law, relating to the descent of private property, would not apply to the temple, where such worship was conducted. The evidence led in the case sufficiently justifies the finding of which the learned Additional Judge has arrived.

The next question is whether this temple being one intended for public worship the plaintiffs other than the Raja of Bhinga were sufficiently interested in its proper management to entitle them to bring the suit. Section 539 of the old Code of Civil Procedure required that the persons who would have a right to sue under that section, would have a direct interest in the trust; but the word "direct" was taken out by Act VII of 1883. The inference as pointed out in Sajedur Raja Chowdhury v. Gour Mohun Das Baishnav (3), is that the Legislature intended to allow persons having the same sort of interest, that is, sufficient under section 14 of Act XX of 1863, to maintain a suit under section 539. In Jawahra v. Akbar Husain (4) and Jugalkishore v. Lakshmandas Raghunathdas (5), it was accordingly held that any person having a right to use a mosque or a temple for purposes of devotion was entitled to seek a proper administration of the trust and to prevent its breach.

Plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 4 are as much interested in the proper management of the trust as plaintiff No. 1, for they have a right to perform worship in the temple whenever they visit Ajudhia, and as the suit was filed with the leave of the Legal Remembrancer, the Court below had ample jurisdiction to entertain it.

In regard to the alleged breach of trust, the learned Additional Judge finds that the defendant-appellant kept no accounts of the income, derived from the temple, that she allowed one of her relations to live in one of the buildings attached to the temple presumably without the payment of any rent, that the paintings inside the temple had been neglected, and that a crack was noticeable in the gate, leading to the temple. He exonerates the lady from the charges of misappropriation of jewellery and furniture belonging to the temple and the neglect of worship and the celebration of the customary festivals. The small funds at the disposal of the lady after the temple was deprived of its main income from the village Dharam Nagar by the Raja of Bhinga, are probably responsible for the expenditure in connection with the temple having to be kept within the narrowest limits. But in the interest of the proper administration of the trust, it is desirable that an account should be kept of such income, as may be realized, and of its being put to the best use. A person, who has no business in connection with the temple should not, moreover, be allowed to stay in its precincts without paying any rent. The position of the defendant as an illiterate pardanashin lady of an advanced age and protracted to some extent by disease also renders it desirable that the management of the trust should be placed on a sounder footing. She has no male issue, who can help her in the management of the trust, and we agree with the learned Additional Judge that a Committee should be placed in charge of the temple with a representative of the family of the founder of the trust and another representative from the family of Rangrajpat the family preceptor and a third selected from among the respectable Hindu residents of Ajudhia or Fyzabad. Rangrajpat has, however, no male descendant alive, and it does not seem desirable that after the death of the defendant either her widowed daughter or her widowed daughter-in-law should necessarily be accorded a position on the board of trustees. Rangrajpat had four brothers, from among whose descendants a suitable representative can be selected to take up the place of the defendant when it falls vacant.

The plaintiffs have filed certain cross-objections, impeaching the findings, at which the learned Additional Judge has arrived, and questioning the propriety of the scheme which he has framed. We do not think that any of these objections, except in so far as they have already been dealt with above, are entitled to any weight. In deference to the wishes of the founder of the trust and the interest which the defendant has shown in preserving the trust property, we do not consider it desirable to remove her entirely from the management. Her position as the widow of the family preceptor will exert an influence for good in favour of the temple, while her absence may alienate the sympathies of many by whom Rangrajpat and his family were held in very high esteem. We append a scheme for the administration of the trust which modifies the scheme framed by the learned Additional Judge in a few particulars and, subject to that modification, we dismiss the appeal and disallow the cross-objections, directing the parties to bear their own costs throughout. A copy of the scheme will be sent to the members of the Committee for information and necessary action.

Possession, value of—Adverse possession of co-owner—Revenue record in Berar, correctness of—Presumption.
Where nothing else is known, the person in possession of property is presumed to be the owner.

Though the revenue record in Berar is not supported by a statutory presumption like a Record of Right in the Central Provinces, an entry in the Record of Rights does raise a presumption, and the presumption arising from possession is weakened considerably if the person in possession fails to explain an adverse entry and is unable to state the origin of the possession by virtue of which he claims an adverse title to the recorded holder.

The possession of one co-owner even over the whole co-parcenary, is not prima facie adverse to the other co-owners.

Though a certain lease may be inadmissible in proof of its terms, it may still be used to prove the relationship of landlord and tenant.

Augustien v. Challis, (1847) 1 Ex. 279 at p. 280; 17 L. J. Ex. 73; 154 E. R. 118; 74 E. R. 670, Kedar Nath Joardar v. Shurfoonnissa Bibee, 24 W. R. 425, followed.

Appeal from the decree of the Court of the Additional District Judge, East Berar, dated the 7th August 1906.

Messrs. J. Mitra and V. R. Dixit, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. C. Ray, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—I think this case must go back for a fresh decision on the merits. The first Court made the mistake of treating a revenue record as all but absolute proof of title. The Additional District Judge, in pointing out this error went to the opposite extreme of brushing the record aside as of no value whatever. The plaintiff's possession was held proved and that without further consideration was taken to have established plaintiff's title though it was admitted that plaintiff could not show how his possession began. It is of course the law that where nothing else is known, the person in possession of a property is presumed to be the owner. But here we have first a revenue record which shows the land in dispute to be the holding of another person. This is not supported by a statutory presumption like a Record of Right in the Central Provinces. But it does not follow from the absence of such enactment that the entry raises no presumption, or even that it raises a weak presumption. It must betaken that the Revenue Authorities in Berar took reasonable steps to secure that their records were correct as to facts, and the entry in this case certainly weakens considerably the presumption in favour of the possession of a plaintiff who does not explain the entry and is unable to state the origin of the possession by virtue of which he claims an adverse title to the recorded holder. Next there is an admission by the plaintiff pointed out in the judgment of the first Court, that defendant's predecessor-in-title was a co-occupant with himself. This admission is of itself sufficient to destroy the presumption upon which the lower Appellate Court has decided the case, because the possession of one co-owner even over the whole co-parcenary, is not prima facie adverse to the other co-owners. The case really wants careful enquiry, in order to ascertain whether defendants are speculative purchasers of a long definite holding or the plaintiff is endeavouring to appropriate the neglected heritage of a co owner. It may be well to note that though the alleged lease may be inadmissible proof of its terms, and incapable of affecting the property in the way a valid lease would have done, it may still be used to prove that the relation between plaintiff and defendant's predecessor was one of landlord and tenant. This has been held to be the law in England Augustien v. Challis (1) and also the law under the Evidence Act in India, Kedar Nath Joardar v. Shurfoonnissa Bibee (2). For the reasons given, the decree appealed against is reversed and the case is remanded for a fresh decision on the merits. The appellants will be given the usual refund certificate. Other costs in this Court will abide the result.

Res judicata—Profits, suit for—Sir and khudkasht,

A decision in a previous suit for profits between the co-sharers of a village that the sir and khudkasht of a particular co-sharer yielded profits at a certain rate in the years in suit, does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the same co-sharers for profits in respect of other years.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Sitapur, dated the 15th May 1917, upholding the order of the Deputy Collector, Sitapur, dated the 13th February 1917.

Babu Ishwari Prasad, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The only question which arises for decision in this second appeal is with regard to the manner of taking account between the parties. The suit was a suit between co-sharers for profits and there is no dispute that the defendant-respondent Pahlad Singh is in possession of certain lands as sir and khudkasht. It is on the basis of the profits of these sir and khudkasht lands that the account has to be settled between the parties and the argument for the appellant here is that in estimating the profits the account should be made up on the basis that the land yields profit at the rate of Re. 1-6-0 per kachcha bigha. It is claimed that in a previous litigation between the parties with respect to other years than the year now in suit, this rate was adopted by the Court in making up the account and so the contention is that on the principle of res judicata the same rate ought to be applied in the present instance. The learned Judge of the Court below has met this argument by saying that any previous decision of the Court laying down a uniform rate of Re. 1-6-0 per kachcha bigha could not be treated to be binding on the parties because in suits for profits what has to be looked at is the amount of the actual profits during the years in suit and the proportion in which those profits must be divided. I have looked at the previous decision which was relied upon by the plaintiff for the purpose of enforcing the principle of res judicata. It certainly appears to me that it has never been laid down by any Court that in all suits between these parties for profits the rate of profit is to be calculated on the basis that each kachcha bigha of land in the occupation of the defendant yields a profit of Re. 1-6-0 a year. I understand from the judgment which I have perused that all that was found, was that during the years then in suit this was a reasonable rate to assume in the case of sir and khudkasht lands occupied by the defendant-respondent Pahlad. The profit of any particular land may vary from year to year and it may very well be, as I pointed out to the learned Counsel for the appellant, that lands which a few years ago might reasonably be charged at the rate of Re. 1-6-0 per kachcha bigha might now, in view of altered circumstances, be liable to be charged at the rate of Re. 3. I think the res judicata argument is altogether untenable in the case and that the Courts below were right in making up the account on the basis of the actual profits during the years in suit calculated on the actual rent rates prevailing in the village during the period which the suit covers. This is the only point which has been argued before me and I think the appeal must fail. The decision of the Court below appears to be quite correct. I dismiss the appeal. No order as to costs as the defendant-respondent has not entered an appearance.

Execution—Suit against lunatic—Court refusing to appoint guardian ad litem—Decree passed—

DEBI BAKHSH SINGH V. BED NATH.

Representative of Lunatic, whether can object to decree in execution.

Where a suit is brought against a person of unsound mind and the trying Court is asked to appoint a guardian of the lunatic for the purposes of the suit, but refuses to do so and passes a decree against the lunatic, the representative of the lunatic after his death cannot raise an objection in the execution Court that the decree was null and void and could not be executed.

Second appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Muzafferpore, reversing the order of the Munsif, 1st Court, Muzafferpore.

FACTS.—A suit was brought against one Bom Bahadur and others in 1901. In the plaint Bom Bahadur was described as a person of unsound mind and a prayer was, therefore, made to appoint his brother Jang Bahadur as his guardian. The Court by an order dated 19th December 1901, held that Bom Bahadur had not been adjudged a lunatic under Act XXXVI of 1858 and that, therefore, the plaintiff had no right to have him represented by another person in the suit. In adopting this course the Court relied upon Uma Sundari Dasi v. Ramji Halidar (1) and Jonnagadla Subbaya v. Thatiparthi Senadala Euthayn (2). The Court thereafter proceeded to pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff and against the lunatic. Applications for execution were made against Bom Bahadur without any objection having been made as to the invalidity of the decree. Bom Bahadur died and the decree was then sought to be executed against his brother Jang Bahadur as his representative. Jang Bahadur objected among other grounds that the decree could not be executed as it was on the face of it null and void having been passed against a person of unsound mind without the appointment of a guardian ad litem. The Munsif in whose Court the execution application was pending, relying upon Purna Chandra Kumar v. Beoy Chand (3) and Rajani Kanta Bhowmik v. Karamat Ali (4), allowed the objection and rejected the application for execution. The Subordinate Judge in appeal reversed the order of the learned Munsif. A second appeal was preferred against the order of the Subordinate Judge to the High Court.

Mr. Lachmi Narain, for the Appellant.

Mr. Atul Krishna Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

ROSE, J.—The only point for decision in this case is whether it having been brought to the notice of the Court trying an action that one of the defendants in the action was of unsound mind, and the Court having nevertheless insisted upon going on with the suit without appointing a next friend, the representative-in-interest of the person alleged to be of unsound mind, can after his death assail the decree made against such person. It is obvious that the point having been taken in the trial of the suit and having been decided against the person alleged to be of unsound mind, the same question cannot possibly be raised in execution. This appeal should be dismissed with costs.

CHAMBER, C. J.—I agree. The Munsif who tried the case applied the law as it had been laid down in decisions which were then in force and which were binding upon him. This appeal must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal against the order of the Sub-ordinate Judge, Sitapur (Ta'sil Biswan), dated the 1st March 1911.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question for consideration in this appeal is whether property acquired by a person after the release of his estate from the Court of Wards is liable to attachment in execution of a decree obtained against him in respect of a contract entered into while his estate was under the superintendence of the Court of Wards. The estate, in the present instance, was released from the superintendence of the Court of Wards in 1898. The property in question was purchased in 1909. It is not disputed that the purchase was made from the profits, realized by the debtor, from his estate after its release from the superintendence of the Court of Wards.

The learned Counsel, who appears for the judgment-debtors, contends that the protection afforded by section 174 of the Oudh Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1876) extends as much to the estate as to the profits which may be realized from the same after its release or to any acquisition made therefrom. But section 174 extends the protection only to "such property" as was actually under the superintendence of the Court of Wards. Any profits accruing from the property after its release would be absolutely at the disposal of the holder of that property, and he would be at liberty to apply the same in paying his old debts or acquiring other property therewith or in any manner he likes.

In Jhamman Lal v. Himanchal Singh (1) it was held that the prohibition contained in the second paragraph of section 205B of Act XIX of 1873, which contained a similar provision applicable to what was then known as the North Western Provinces, did not apply to rents and profits of property which accrued after the release of the corpus from the superintendence of the Court of Wards. Any acquisition made from those profits would similarly be excluded from that prohibition. The language used in section 174 of the Oudh Land Revenue Act points to the property which was actually under the superintendence of the Court of Wards and not to any profits that may be derived therefrom after its release or to any acquisition made from the same. The object of the provisions, as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Shadi Lal (2), was to protect the property under the superintendence of the Court of Wards against transactions entered into by a person under tutelage and against the consequences of any execution, in respect of contracts entered into by such a person, and so long as the tutelage lasts, the property and the profits partake of the same character, but when it ceases, the protection ends, so far as the enlargement of the estate from future profits or by acquisition is concerned. Such future profits do not form accretions to the estate for the purposes of that protection which is limited in character.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Lease to tenant for term with liberty to landlord to settle land on expiration of term, whether confirmatory of pre-existing tenancy.

A document which gives the tenant a lease for a particular term at a fixed rent and which gives to the landlord the right at the expiration of that term to settle the land with whomsoever he pleases, cannot be taken as a mere recognition of a pre-existing tenancy. [p. 222, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Special Judge, Mymensingh, dated the 16th August 1915, affirming that of the Assistant Settlement Officer of that District, dated the 5th September 1914.

FACTS.—The appeal arose out of a proceeding under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for settlement of fair and equitable rent. The plaintiff prayed for increase of rent on account of increase of area as well as for enhancement on the ground of rise in the prices of food crops. The plaintiff produced a kabuliyat which showed that its term was for five years only and there it was stipulated that at the expiration of the term the landlord was entitled to settle the land with any body he pleased. The tenants-defendants pleaded that they had been holding these jamas at fixed rate of rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement and as it had been found by them that since 1285 B. S. they were paying the same rent, they claimed the benefit of the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. They also pleaded that their rentals were consolidated. The Assistant Settlement Officer held that the tenant-defendant had been paying at uniform rates of rent since 1285 B. S. So that they were entitled to the benefit of the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act in spite of their admission that their jotes were "sadharan" (ordinary.) He, however, held that the rentals were not consolidated and he assessed rent on the excess area as found by the standard of measurement stated in the kabuliyat. The learned Special Judge, on appeal, also held that the tenants were entitled to the benefits of the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and dismissed the appeal. Upon this the plaintiff-landlord preferred the present second appeal.

Sir Rash Behari Ghose (with him Babu Sankajiban Roy), for the Appellant:—I submit that upon the terms of the kabuliyat the tenancy was for five years only and the landlord could settle the land after the expiration of the period with any body he pleased. So the tenancy of the defendants created by the kabuliyat cannot be said to be a mere recognition of a pre-existing tenancy or confirmatory of an old tenancy. Therefore the Courts below have erred in holding that the defendants are entitled to the benefits of the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Babu Chandrakantu Ghose (with him Babu Nilkanta Ghose), for the Respondent:—The kabuliyat does not show that by it a new tenancy was created. It shows that a pre-existing tenancy was recognised or confirmed. Both the Courts below have found that the tenants had been paying uniform rates of rent from 1285 B. S. onwards hence they are surely entitled to the benefit of the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. No variation of rent has been proved and the plaintiff has not rebutted the presumption arising out of the tenancy having been held by the tenants at fixed rents since 1285 B. S. Although the tenants admit that their jotes were "sadharan" that does not, I submit, take away their rights to claim full benefits under section 50, Bengal Tenancy Act.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal from the decision of the learned Special Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 16th August 1915, dismissing an appeal from the judgment of the learned Assistant Settlement Officer of the same place. The only question involved in the appeal is whether the defendants, the tenants, are entitled to the presumption mentioned in section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is common ground that the tenants are holding under the terms of a document in writing and the question is whether that document was the origin of the tenancy or whether it was merely confirmatory of a pre-existing tenancy. I have come to the conclusion that the document was not confirmatory nor was the origin of the tenancy under which the defendants hold. The term granted was a term of five years and it was provided by the document that at the expiration of that term, the landlord would be entitled to make a settlement of the land with whom he pleased and it seems to me quite impossible on those terms to hold that the document which gave tenants a lease for a particular term at a fixed rent and which gave to the landlord the right at the expiration of that term to settle the land with whomsoever he pleased, can be taken as a mere recognition of a pre existing tenancy. It is also to be noticed that under the rent law as existed at the time when the kabuliyat was executed, there was nothing to prevent a tenant from surrendering a right of occupancy in favour of the landlord. Whether the bargain that was entered into between the parties, was not a prudent one it is not for us to say, but in my opinion, the document negatives the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In that view, the present appeal ought to be allowed and the case will be sent back to the Court of Appeal below for settling the rent. The appeal will stand dismissed as against respondent No. 13 in regard to No. 7 khatian. We make no order as to costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 2—Execution—Satisfaction of decree not certified to Court—Decree-holder purchasing property at auction sale—Purchase, validity of—Fraud.

During the course of an execution proceeding the decree was satisfied out of Court but the satisfaction was not certified to or brought to the notice of the Court. The decree-holder brought an equity of redemption belonging to the judgment-debtor to sale and purchased it himself. The judgment-debtor then brought a suit for redemption in respect of the property without having got the sale set aside:

Held, that the execution sale was a nullity inasmuch as by failing to certify the satisfaction of the decree to the Court, the decree-holder had committed a fraud on the Court, and that therefore the judgment-debtor was entitled to redeem the property. [p. 224, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hardoi, dated the 30th June 1916, reversing the order of the Munsif, Bilgram, dated the 22nd February 1916.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellant.

Babu Basudeo Lal, for Respondents Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5.

JUDGMENT—The facts of this case may be stated shortly as follows. The matter in issue between the parties is the right of the plaintiff appellant, Ghasi Ram, to redeem a mortgage which was executed by his father Dalip Singh on the 24th of June 1872. The first four defendants in the case are the representatives of the mortgagee. A plea was raised to the effect that the plaintiff had no right to redeem because the equity of redemption of the property mortgaged, had vested in another person Bhikham Singh, who was impleaded as the fifth defendant. Bhikham Singh also resisted the claim for redemption, saying that the right to redeem was with him and not with the plaintiff. The way in which Bhikham Singh came to be interested in this matter is as follows. On the 26th of October 1900 he got a money decree against the plaintiff Ghasi Ram in the Court of the Munsif of Bilgram. That decree was for a sum of Rs. 150. On the 13th of April 1904 Ghasi Ram, in order to arrange for the satisfaction of this decree and in order to discharge certain other debts which were owing to him, sold certain property, other than the property mortgaged, to Bhikham Singh for a sum of Rs. 500. It was stated in this sale-deed that Rs. 150 had been set off on account of the money which the vendor owed Bhikham Singh under the Munsif's decree above referred to. After this sale-deed had been executed, a dispute arose between Ghasi Ram and Bhikham Singh regarding ex-proprietary rights. Bhikham Singh took up the position that the understanding was at the time of the sale that Ghasi

GHASI RAM v. DALEL SINGH.

Ram was not to retain any ex-proprietary rights in the land sold. On the other hand Ghasi Ram's case was that he was entitled by law to have these ex-proprietary rights and that in fact Bhikham Singh could not in any way deprive him of them. The matter was taken before a Revenue Court and it was decided that Ghasi Ram was entitled to ex-proprietary rights. After this Bhikham Singh brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi demanding cancellation of the sale-deed. He got a decree in his favour in that Court on the 13th of July 1905. Having obtained this decree Bhikham Singh then applied to execute the Munsif's decree for Rs. 150 and made an application for that purpose on the 21st of June 1906. Meantime Ghasi Ram had filed an appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge and on the 30th of November 1906 the District Judge allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit of Bhikham Singh for cancellation of the sale-deed. This order of the District Judge was upheld in appeal by an order of this Court dated the 30th of May 1907. Notwithstanding the fact that Bhikham Singh lost his case in appeal before the District Judge of Hardoi he persisted in going on with the execution proceedings and on the 20th of December 1906 he had Ghasi Ram's property brought to sale and purchased it himself. The property which was brought to sale on this occasion was the property held in mortgage under the deed which had been executed on the 24th of June 1872; in other words, as a result of this auction sale Bhikham Singh became the purchaser of the equity of redemption of the mortgaged property now in suit. This sale was confirmed by the executing Court on the 24th of January 1907. Bhikham Singh never applied for any sale-certificate until the 24th of March 1914. The present suit for redemption was brought on the 26th of August 1915. The Munsif held that Bhikham Singh took nothing by his purchase of the 20th of December 1906 inasmuch as he had committed a fraud on the executing Court. He, therefore, gave a decree for redemption in favour of the plaintiff-appellant. This decree has been reversed in appeal by the District Judge who was of opinion that the execution-sale was still binding upon Ghasi Ram and that until he succeeded in getting it set aside, he could not maintain the present suit. In his judgment the learned Judge observes that the decree in execution of which the sale took place, was no doubt satisfied by the sale-deed which Ghasi Ram had executed in favour of Bhikham Singh on the 13th of April 1904; but he was of opinion that because satisfaction of the decree was never certified to the Court as required by law there was no bar to the execution of the decree. With regard to the argument that Bhikham Singh was not a bona fide purchaser the learned Judge held that this was a matter which could not be considered in the present case. His view was that the sale in execution was not a nullity and that Ghasi Ram should either have applied or sued to have the sale set aside. It may be mentioned here that although Ghasi Ram had won his case in appeal by the 30th of November 1906 while the execution proceedings were still running their course, he never brought to the notice of the Court that the result of the appeal was that the decree had been satisfied and that there was no occasion for proceeding any further in execution, nor does he appear in any way to have offered any resistance to the execution proceedings after he had won his case in appeal. The question which I have to decide here is whether in the present suit it is open to the plaintiff Ghasi Ram to plead that the execution-sale at which Bhikham Singh purchased, was a nullity and does not stand in the way of his claiming redemption, or whether he is so bound by the proceedings in execution as to be debarred from claiming redemption until he has got the sale proceedings set aside by suit. It seems at least doubtful whether any suit for the purpose of having the sale set aside could now be entertained, for any remedy of this nature would appear to be time-barred. However I have come to the conclusion that the rights of the case are with the plaintiff and that there is no bar to his seeking redemption and pleading that Bhikham Singh has no title to the property which he acquired at the auction-sale. It is admitted on all hands that the conduct of Bhikham Singh in connection with these execution proceedings was fraudulent.

MIKANBAI V. DASSIMAL GANGARAM.

lent. There can, as the lower Appellate Court remarks, be no doubt that after the 30th of November 1906 when Ghasi Ram and Bhikham Singh were restored to their original position as it was after the execution of the sale-deed of the 13th of April 1904 the result was that the decree in favour of Bhikham Singh was fully satisfied. Consequently it was the duty of Bhikham Singh as decree-holder to inform the Court that his decree had been adjusted. This duty was imposed on him by section 258 of the old Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) which corresponds with Order XXI, r. 2, of the present Code. That section also provided that the judgment debtor might inform the Court of the adjustment and apply for issue of a notice to the decree-holder, but while the judgment-debtor "might" make this application, the decree-holder was by law, and is still by law, bound to certify to the Court. It is true that section 258 and Order XXI, rule 2, provide that a payment or adjustment which has not been certified to the Court, shall not be recognised by any Court executing the decree and the learned District Judge is quite right in saying that in the circumstances attending the execution of the decree which resulted in the sale of the property the Court was not debarred from ordering execution inasmuch as the adjustment had not been certified to it. But it is plain at the same time that if Bhikham Singh had done what the law required of him and had given the Court the information which he was bound to give the Court would certainly have stopped execution proceedings and prevented the property from being brought to sale. It must, therefore, be held that by this breach of duty and by withholding the information which he was bound to give, Bhikham Singh committed a fraud upon the Court by means of which he was enabled to purchase the property in execution. He cannot, in my opinion, be allowed to avail himself of his own fraud and consequently I am satisfied that in the present case he ought not to be allowed to succeed on the plea that he purchased the property and holds the certificate of the Court which confirmed the sale. There is no question of the rights of third parties being affected in any way. If that were so it might be necessary to consider how far the plaintiff was to blame in standing by and not informing the executing Court that the decree had been adjusted. As between Ghasi Ram and Bhikham Singh no such question can arise. The plain fact remains that Bhikham Singh committed a fraud and acquired the right to redeem the property now in suit, and he cannot be allowed to plead his own fraud and to take any benefit thereby. Fraud as has repeatedly been said, vitiates the most solemn transactions. I find, therefore, that the appellant has the right to redeem this mortgage and that Bhikham Singh has no such right. The lower Appellate Court has disposed of the case on a preliminary point and has not gone into the other matters which are in dispute between the parties regarding the state of the mortgage account. Under Order XLI, rule 23, I reverse the decree of the Court below and send the case back for disposal upon the merits. Costs here and hitherto will abide the result.

Musammal MIKANBAI—APPELLANT

versus

DASSIMAL GANGARAM AND OTHERS —
RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1906), O. XL, r. 1—Receiver, appointment of, principles followed in—'Just and convenient', effect of the substitution of the words, in new Code—Discretion of Court in appointing Receiver—Appellate Court, interference by.

The intention of the Legislature in substituting the words "just and convenient" in place of the phrase "necessary for the realization, preservation, or better custody or management, of any property moveable or immovable the subject of a suit or attachment," in Order XL, rule 1, of the new Civil Procedure Code, was to bring the law in India into conformity with that in England. [p. 226, cols. 1 & 2.]

MIKANHAL C. DASSIMAL GANGARAM.

The power of appointing a Receiver should be exercised in India in accordance with principles already settled by the Court of Chancery in England, subject to such modifications as conditions peculiar to India may suggest. [p. 226, col. 2.]

These principles are the preservation of the estate pending litigation on a consideration of the merits of the conflicting titles, the risk to the tenants and other circumstances of the case. The Court, however, is always reluctant to dispossess a party in actual possession under a prima facie title. [p. 226, col. 2; p. 227, col. 1.]

An order directing a Receiver to manage a partnership business where all the partners are not parties to the suit is ultra vires. [p. 226, col. 1.]

A Court of Appeal, though slow to interfere with the discretion of the lower Court in the appointment of a Receiver, would interfere if satisfied that that discretion has not been exercised in accordance with settled principles of law. [p. 227, col. 1.]

It would be mischievous to appoint a Receiver as a matter of course without regard to the principles governing such appointments. [p. 227, col. 1.]

The appointment of a Receiver is unnecessary where there is no allegation of any act of waste or mismanagement but on the contrary there are partners in the estate other than the litigating parties who are interested in seeing that the property is kept safe and regular accounts are kept of the business. [p. 225, col. 2.]

Mr. Lalchand Hasmal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Wadhmal Odharam, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

PRATT, J. C.—This is an appeal under Order XLIII, rule 1 (s), against an order made in the District Court jurisdiction appointing a Receiver before decree.

The parties to the suit are the descendants of Gopaldas, Gangaram and Nihalchand, three sons of Hundaldas.

Plaintiff No. 1 Dassimal is a son of Gangaram and the second and third plaintiffs are his (Dassimal's) sons. Defendant No. 2 is the son of Gopaldas. Defendant No. 3 is also a descendant of Gangaram, being the son of a brother of Dassimal.

Defendant No. 1, the principal defendant, is the widow of Deomal the son of Nihalchand.

The suit was a suit for partition and the property alleged to be joint family property consists of lands and a business. Most of the land is in the name of Deomal Nihalchand, who died three months before the institution of the suit and the business was conducted in his name. Thus the main issue in the suit is, whether the land and business of Deomal Nihalchand was joint family property.

The application for the appointment of the Receiver was made the day on which the plaint was filed and was supported by only two affidavits, that of plaintiff No. 1 Dassimal and plaintiff No. 2 his son, Santumal. In neither of these affidavits is there an allegation of acts of waste or mismanagement. Dassimal says in paragraph 15 of his affidavit that Tolaram the brother of the widow is now attempting to interfere with the management of the properties; in paragraph 20 he "apprehends" that Tolaram will forcibly remove the crop. Santumal in paragraph 3 of his affidavit says that he was manager in Deomal's lifetime and at paragraph 20 that Tolaram is attempting to take forcible possession.

Tolaram is the brother of defendant No. 1 and is acting on her behalf. The phrase "interfere", therefore, begs the question and assumes that Deomal's widow has no right to possession. There is no definition of the attempt to take forcible possession referred to in Santumal's affidavit. Dassimal refers to no such attempt and is only under an apprehension that force will be used.

On the other hand, several affidavits were filed for the defence. These are of partners both in the lands and in the business. Jethanand Tanumal (P. 25), a partner in the land, says that regular accounts are kept of the estate for the information of the partners and that there were several partners in the business who all managed in the lifetime of Deomal. Khajuriomal (P. 30) is the principal surviving partner of the business. He says he manages it now and during Deomal's lifetime he also denies that Santumal was sole manager and avers that all the partners managed the business. He also says that regular accounts are kept of the business.

On the affidavits it is difficult to understand what reason there was for appointing a Receiver. There is no allegation of waste and in so far as there was a vague allegation of an apprehended waste, that is completely met by the affidavits of the partners who are interested in seeing that the property is kept safe.

Again a Receiver would only represent the interests of the litigating partners. He would not be competent to dispossess the other partners who claim to be in possession and to be managing the business and the land. These other partners cannot be compelled to continue the partnership with the Receiver and it is foreign to the functions of a Court to carry on a partnership business. The utmost the Receiver could do would be to demand an account and receive the profits from the other partners as in the case referred to in Order XXI, rule 49 (2). The order of the lower Court directing the Receiver to manage the business is 'ultra vires' in regard to those other partners.

Many affidavits have been filed as to events that occurred since the order under appeal. These we need not refer to, for they complain that the appointment has paralysed the business, for the Judge appointed as co-Receivers two persons who are at daggers drawn, plaintiff Santumal and Tolaram the brother of the widow.

Mr. Wadhupal admits the confusion caused by this joint appointment and suggests that this Court should substitute an independent single individual. But is it a case where any Receiver should be appointed?

On this point Mr. Wadhupal argues that the discretion to appoint a Receiver has been enlarged by the new Code of Civil Procedure which has substituted the words "just and convenient" for the more particular phrase in the Code of 1882 "necessary for the realization, preservation or better custody or management of any property, moveable or immovable, the subject of a suit or attachment." He further contends that the lower Court having exercised this discretion, this Court should be slow to interfere in view of the dictum of the Privy Council in Jaipal Kunwar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (1), followed by this Court in Shivandas v. Pamanmal Mangharam (2).

(2) 27 Ind. Cas. 942; 8 S. L. R. 275.

I do not, however, think that the effect of the amended section in the new Civil Procedure Code is to give the Court a wider discretion than that exercised by the Courts in England. The appointment of a Receiver is a form of equitable relief given for the protection of the property and in aid of the legal right. This relief was originally granted by the Court of Chancery in accordance with certain well settled principles. When that equitable relief received statutory recognition in the Judicature Act it was expressed in the words:

"A mandamus or an injunction may be granted or a Receiver appointed by an interlocutory order of the Court in all cases in which it shall appear to the Court to be just or convenient that such order should be made."

This statutory power has been held in a series of cases, of which it is only necessary to refer to the most recent case of Morgan v. Hart (3), to be limited to cases where the Court of Chancery could have appointed a Receiver before the Judicature Act.

The words "just or convenient" in section 25 (8) of the Judicature Act have been held to mean just and convenient. Beddow v. Beddow (4). The Civil Procedure Code was, therefore, amended to bring the law in India into conformity with that in England. The power must be exercised in India in accordance with principles already settled by the Court of Chancery, subject of course to such modifications as conditions peculiar to India may suggest (Woodroffe, page 28).

These principles have been set forth in the cases of Owen v. Homan (5), followed in Sidheswari Dabi v. Abhoyeswari Dabi (6), and John v. John (7). They are the preservation of the estate pending litigation on a consideration of the merits of the conflicting titles (for the Court is always slow to dispossess a party in possession under a prima facie title), the risk to the tenants and other circumstances of the case.

It does not appear that these principles have been considered by the lower Court. The party in possession is widow of the last holder who has a prima facie title, and as the property is the partnership property there are partners who have an interest in the preservation of the estate.

It is true that the Court of Appeal is slow to interfere with the discretion deliberately exercised by a lower Court, but it must interfere when it is satisfied that that discretion has not been exercised in accordance with settled principles of law.

I am satisfied that this is such a case. The mischief of appointing a Receiver as a matter of course and without regard to these principles has been pointed out by Straight, J., in a similar case of Srimati Prosonompi Devi v. Beni Madhab Rai (8).

I would accordingly reverse the order of the lower Court and allow this appeal with costs.

HAYWARD, A. J. C.—I concur in the order proposed by the learned Judicial Commissioner, briefly for the reasons that plaintiff has no clear right to the property; that the association of plaintiff with the defendants' representative Tolaram in the management of the property has led to confusion; that serious practical difficulties exist in the way of effective official supervision of the working of a business firm, while the land is sufficiently protected by the pendency of the suit; and that there are other partners both in the business and the land interested in the preservation of the property. These circumstances which have now become plain were not, it would seem, fully apprehended at the time the order for a Receiver was granted by the learned Judge of the lower Court.

Order reversed.

DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s. 27—Improvement by tenant—Compensation for improvement, amount of.

Where it is found that a tenant is entitled to compensation for an improvement made by him on his holding, the Court is not justified in reducing the amount of compensation on the ground that a cheaper improvement could have served the tenant's purpose unless such a plea is raised by the landlord, inasmuch as such a consideration does not form part of the considerations enumerated by section 27 of the Oudh Rent Act. [p. 228, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Commissioner, Fyzabad, dated the 27th November 1916, modifying the order of the Assistant Collector, Partabgarh.

FACTS of the case are briefly as follows:—

The plaintiff-tenant sued to contest a notice of ejectment issued against him by the defendant-landlord, claiming therein compensation for a big well made by him on his small holding. The defendant opposed the suit, stating that the plaintiff was not entitled to any compensation because no written permission for sinking and constructing the well, as required by section 23 of the Oudh Rent Act, had been secured by the plaintiff from the defendant. The Assistant Collector found that such permission had been obtained by the plaintiff from the defendant, and allowed Rs. 800 to the plaintiff as the approximate value of the compensation to which the plaintiff was then entitled. On appeal, the Commissioner also agreed with the Assistant Collector on the fact of the permission, but reduced the amount of compensation from Rs. 800 to Rs. 200, on the ground that in view of the extent of the plaintiff's holding such a big well was not required and that a cheaper well would have answered the plaintiff's purpose as well as this expensive well.

Babu Har Bhawan Dayal, for the Appellant.

SECRETARY OF STATE C. GANGADHAR NANDA.

Babu Har Dhyam Chandra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

LOVETT, J. M.—(April 14, 1917.)—In my opinion the Commissioner was not justified in altering the amount of compensation awarded. He found (a) that written permission was granted for building the well, (b) that the well was worth at least Rs. 1,000 originally. He apparently accepted the view that it is worth Rs. 800 now. But he arbitrarily reduced this sum to Rs. 200 on the ground that a cheaper well would have answered the plaintiff's purpose as well as this expensive well.

This plea was never put forward by the landlord (respondent) and forms no part of the considerations enumerated by section 27 of the Rent Act.

I would modify the Commissioner's order and restore the order of the Court of first instance in its entirety. I would direct the respondent to pay the appellant's costs and Pleader's fees in the two Appellate Courts.

CAMPBELL, S. M.—I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 15 (2), applicability of, to suits under s. 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885).

Section 15 (2) of the Limitation Act cannot be applied to extend the period of six months provided for the institution of suits under section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 229, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Midnapur, dated the 26th March 1913.

Babu Ram Charan Mitra, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Chakravarti and Babus Shib Chunder Palit, Kshirod Narayan Bhuiya and Dharendra Krishna Roy, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the Secretary of State for India in Council against a decree in a suit instituted by the respondent on the 16th May 1910, under section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The lands in suit are comprised in three villages—Dakhin Baraj, Uttar Dighe and Dhai Kukusria. The settlement roll, to which exception was taken by the plaintiff, was published, in the case of the first village on the 2nd June 1910, and in the case of the other two villages on the 17th June 1910. As regards the claim in respect of the first village, objection is taken that the suit is barred under sub-section (2) of section 104H, which provides that a suit under sub-section (1) must be instituted within 6 months of the date of the certificate of final publication of the Record of Rights. This objection does not apply to the second and third villages, and for the reasons assigned in our judgment in Secretary of State v. Digambar Nanda (1) [Appeal from Original Decree No. 252 of 1913] the case must be remitted to the Subordinate Judge for investigation, whether the plaintiff is an occupancy raiyat or a non-occupancy raiyat in respect of the lands comprised in these two villages and for ascertainment of fair and equitable rent payable in respect thereof. In respect of the lands of the village Dakhin Baraj, however, the question of limitation requires careful consideration.

The Record of Rights was finally published on the 2nd June 1910. The suit was instituted on the 1st December 1910, after the expiry of the period of six months prescribed by section 104H, sub-section (2). The plaintiff claims the benefit of section 15, sub-section (2), of the Indian Limitation Act, which provides that in computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit of which notice has been given in accordance with the requirements of any enactment for the time being in force the period of such notice shall be excluded. In the case before us, the plaintiff served a notice as required by section 80 of the Code of 1908, which provides that no suit shall be instituted against the Secretary of State for India in Council until after the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been delivered or left at the office of a Secretary to the Local Government or the Collector of the District. Consequently if section 15, sub-section (2), of the Indian Limitation Act is held applicable to the case before us, it is plain that the suit is not open to objection on the ground of limitation. Now the term "prescribed", as used in sub-section (2) of section 15, read with section 3, obviously means "prescribed by the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act"; consequently, this provision cannot, by its own force, extend the period of six months mentioned in section 104H, sub-section (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The plaintiff-respondent has thus been forced to argue that section 29 of the Indian Limitation Act and sections 184 and 185 of the Bengal Tenancy Act make section 15 sub-section (2) of the Indian Limitation Act applicable to suits under section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In our opinion there is no force in this contention.

Section 29 (1) (b) provides that nothing in the Indian Limitation Act shall affect or alter any period of limitation specially prescribed for any suit, appeal or application by any special law or local law now or hereinafter in force in British India. Section 184 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides that the suits, appeals and applications specified in the Third Schedule annexed to the Act shall be instituted within the time prescribed in that Schedule for them respectively, and every such suit or appeal instituted or application made after the period of limitation so prescribed shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been pleaded. Section 185, sub-section (1), then lays down that sections 7, 8 and 9 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, shall not apply to suits or applications mentioned in section 184. Section 185, sub-section (2), next provides that subject to the provisions of Chapter XVI of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, shall apply to all suits, appeals and applications mentioned in section 184; that is, suits, appeals and applications specified in the Third Schedule. It is plain beyond reasonable controversy that section 15 (2) of the Indian Limitation Act, which is made applicable to suits, appeals and applications mentioned in the Third Schedule annexed to the Bengal Tenancy Act, by virtue of section 185, sub-section (2), cannot possibly apply to suits instituted under section 104H, which are not mentioned in the Third Schedule. This view is supported by the decision in Radha Shyam Kar v. Dinabandhu Biswal (2), where it was ruled that section 15 of the Indian Limitation Act does not apply to an application under section 174, Bengal Tenancy Act. Much stress, however, has been laid on the decision of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Drapadi v. Hira Lal (3), where a question arose as to the applicability of the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act to proceedings in insolvency. That case is clearly distinguishable; but it may be observed that the decision has not always been regarded with favour: Thakur Prasad v. Punno Lal (4), Munjuluri Sivaramayya v. Singumahanti Bujanga Rao (5); Abu Baker Sahib v. Secretary of State for India (6). There is also no analogy between the case before us and the decisions in Sharoop Das Mondal v. Joggesur Roy Chowdhury (7), Dulhin Mothura Koar v. Bansidhar Singh (8) and Srinivasa Aiyangar v. Secretary of State (9). A question of the description now before us must be determined by a reference to the terms of the Special Statute, and on a plain reading of the provisions of section 185, Bengal Tenancy Act, taken along with section 15, sub-section (2) of the Indian Limitation Act, we feel no doubt whatever that section 15 (2) cannot possibly be applied to extend the period of six months provided for the institution of suits under section 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In our opinion, the suit is barred by limitation in respect of the lands comprised in village Dakhin Baraj.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside. The suit will stand dismissed in respect of the lands in village Dakhin Baraj. With regard to the lands of Utter Dighe and Dhai Kukusria, the decree of this Court will declare that the plaintiff is a raiyyat and not a tenure holder and the case will be remitted to the Subordinate Judge to determine whether the plaintiff is an occupancy raiyyat or a non-occupancy raiyyat and then to ascertain the amount of fair and equitable rent payable by him according to his status. Each party will pay his own costs both here and in the Court below up to the present stage. The costs after remand will abide the result.

Oaths Act (X of 1873), s. 11—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 3—Plaintiffs, one of several, agreeing to be bound by defendant's oath—Other plaintiffs, whether bound by oath—Compromise of suit.

Section 11 of the Oaths Act shows that an oath is conclusive as against the person who offers to be bound by it; as against other persons it is not conclusive evidence and a court has no right to treat it as such. [p. 231, col. 1.]

F. and other plaintiffs sued M. for possession of certain land. After the plaintiffs' evidence had been recorded F. agreed to let the decision of the suit rest on M.'s oath. M. took the oath and on this the Court dismissed the suit as regards all the plaintiffs.

Held (1) that the suit was correctly dismissed as regards F.; [p. 231, col. 1.]

(2) that the oath was not binding as against the other plaintiffs unless the defendant could show that they joined in F.'s challenge to the defendant or agreed to the dismissal of the suit either personally or by agent duly authorised in that behalf. [p. 231, col. 1.]

(3) that the mere presence of the other plaintiffs or of their Pleader at the time of F.'s challenge was no proof of assent, inasmuch as a man may disapprove of what is being done, though if he thinks it is to affect some one else only and not himself, he may not trouble to express his dissent. [p. 231, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 28th January 1914, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st class, Gujranwala, dated the 3rd July 1913, dismissing the plaintiffs' claim.

Messrs. Ganpat Rai and Duni Chund, for the Appellants.

Babu M. N. Mukerji, for Mohkam Din, Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Fateh Din and other plaintiffs sued Mohkam Din for possession of land. After plaintiffs' evidence had been recorded Fateh Din agreed to let the decision of the suit rest on defendant's oath on the Koran. Defendant accepted this challenge and took the oath. The first Court then dismissed the suit as regards all the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs other than Fateh Din appealed to the Additional Divisional Judge, who held that the decree passed was one under Order XXIII, rule 3, and that no appeal lay under Order XLIII, rule 1 (m), and that the appellants' only remedy was, as pointed out in Ala Bakhsh Khan v. Kasim Ali Khan (1), an application for review or (in the case of fraud) a regular suit to set the decree aside, or an application to the Chief Court for revision. So the Divisional Judge dismissed the appeal. Hence this second appeal.

We are quite unable to see that, as regards the present appellants Order XXIII, rule 3, has any application; that is, assuming that their contention is correct, viz., that they never joined in challenging defendant to take the oath nor authorized the challenge by Fateh Din, and never agreed in any way to any adjustment of the suit. We note here, as regards Ala Bakhsh Khan v. Kasim Ali Khan (1), that that part of section 35 of the old Code which declared that the decree should be final is not embodied in Order XXIII, rule 3 of the present Code, and that Order XLIII, rule 1 (m), is a new provision, there being nothing in section 588 of the old Code allowing an appeal from an order under

Fateh Din would, of course, be out of Court, but not so other persons who never joined in the challenge. Section 11 of the Oaths Act shows that the oath is conclusive as against the person who offered to be bound by it. As against other persons it is not conclusive evidence, and the Court has no right to treat it as such. We are unable at present to hold that the present appellants are in any way bound by the oath, and we consider that they have the ordinary right of appeal from the decree.

So far as the record shows Fateh Din alone agreed to be bound by defendants' oath, but Counsel for respondent-defendant urges that Jhandu plaintiff and also the Pleader who represented all the plaintiffs were present when Fateh Din challenged defendant, and that Jhandu held a power-of-attorney from those plaintiffs who were not present. But mere presence is no proof of assent. A man may disapprove of what is being done, though if he thinks it is to affect some one else only and not himself, he may not trouble to express his dissent.

We accept the appeal and setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court we return the case to that Court for re-decision of the appeal. If the defendant can show that the appellants joined in Fateh Din's challenge to the defendant either personally or by agent duly authorized in that behalf, or that they agreed either personally or by agent as aforesaid to the dismissal of the suit, then the District Judge should dismiss the appeal; otherwise he should return the case to the first Court under Order XLII, rule 23, for decision of the suit, so far as appellants are concerned, on the merits. Costs in this Court to be costs in the cause.

Appeal accepted.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen out of a pre-emption suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent, Balkaran Singh. The two principal defendants in this case were Ram Dut Singh, defendant No. 1, and his brother Drig Bijai Singh, defendant No. 2. Both these men are admittedly members of a joint Hindu family. The case for the plaintiff was that the other defendants had, on the 16th of June 1915, transferred their property to the first two defendants in circumstances which gave him a right of pre-emption. What took place was this. On the 15th of June 1915 a mortgage of this property was executed in favour of the 2nd defendant, Drig Bijai Singh, to secure a loan of Rs. 100. The mortgage was a mortgage with possession and the period was 55 years. On the following day what purported to be a sale deed of the right of redemption was executed in favour of the other brother Ram Dut in consideration of a payment of Rs. 450, out of which Rs. 100 were left for the purpose of redeeming the mortgage which had been executed on the previous day. Both deeds were registered on the 18th of June. After the trial had opened and the pleas of the parties had been recorded, an amendment of the plaint was made and a new paragraph 5 (a) was introduced into the plaint alleging that although the transaction had been carried out by means of the two deeds just referred to, it was in reality one solitary transaction and amounted to a transfer by sale.

The Munsif gave the plaintiff a decree for pre-emption in respect of the sale of the 16th of June, but he held that the mortgage transaction could not be disturbed and that all the plaintiff was entitled to was to acquire the right of redemption which had been transferred to Ram Dut.

The plaintiff appealed to the learned Judge. He came to the conclusion that the dealings between the other defendants and the first and the second defendants were intended to deceive and that in fact the property was sold to these defendants under the guise of a mortgage followed by conveyance of the equity of redemption.

The point taken here before me on behalf of the first and second defendants is that the decision of the Court below is wrong. It has been argued that there was nothing illegal in the manner in which the property was transferred and that these appellants were entitled to resort to any device which was not illegal for the purpose of defeating the plaintiff's right of pre-emption. It need not be doubted that persons are entitled to defeat the operation of the law of pre-emption if they can do so by legitimate means, but it is not permissible to throw a transaction of transfer into a fraudulent form for the purpose of avoiding a claim for pre-emption. In the present case I think the learned Judge was entitled to hold that the transaction was a fraudulent one and intended to deceive. We have the admitted fact that both the transferees are brothers and members of a joint family and it is hardly to be doubted that it was the intention of the parties to effect a complete transfer by sale. In the course of the argument it was stated that the plaintiff had never set up a case that the transaction was one intended to deceive or defraud, but in view of the amendment made in the plaint to which I have referred above that argument seems to me to be untenable. When the plaintiff became aware of the facts set up by way of defence he took the plea that the dealings between the defendants, although thrown into the form of two separate transactions, amounted to only one transaction of sale. In this connection I may refer to what was stated by the first defendant in the 11th paragraph of his written statement. The plea taken there reads as follows:—"The sale has been effected for Rs. 450 and according to the market rate the price of the property sold is not less than Rs. 450." This practically amounts to giving away the whole of the case. I look upon this plea as a distinct admission by the first defendant that the intention was to effect a transfer by sale. In these circumstances I hold that it is not possible for the appellant here to argue that in dealing with the property as they did they were resorting merely to legitimate devices for the purpose of defeating a pre-emption suit. I think the Judge was entitled to find that the first and the second defendants had conspired to throw the transaction into a fraudulent form. The appellants are not, in my opinion, entitled to any relief. I affirm the judgment of the Court below and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 74—Interest, enhanced, whether penalty—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 22—Cross-objections, failure to file—Respondent, right of, to support decree.

MUHAMMAD ALI V. PARMA NAND.

The mere fact that for certain reasons the parties to a mortgage agreed on very low interest to begin with, is no sufficient reason for holding an agreement to pay enhanced interest at a reasonable and normal rate later on to be penal. [p. 233, col. 2.]

A party who is content to accept the lower Court's decision can resist an appeal from that decision on the ground that the decree errs in favour of the appellant. In such a case the respondent, not having appealed nor filed cross-objections, cannot ask that the decree should be altered in his favour, but he is entitled to urge that if he can show that the decree errs in favour of the appellant it should not be disturbed. [p. 233, col. 2; p. 234, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Multan, dated the 20th of April 1914, modifying that of the District Judge, Multan, dated the 29th of January 1914, decreeing the claim in part.

Lala Hargopal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff sues on a registered bond for Rs. 2,620. This sum of Rs. 2,620 was made up as follows:—principal amount due Rs. 2,487, costs of execution and registration Rs. 20 and interest in advance Rs. 113. The bond went on to provide for payment in two instalments, Rs. 1,310 on 15th August 1907, and Rs. 1,310 on 13th January 1908. If these instalments were paid by due date no further interest was to be charged, as the Rs. 113 was reckoned to cover interest on half the principal sum up to date fixed for payment of the first instalment, and on the other half up to date of the second instalment. In case of the instalment not being paid by due date interest was to run at 12 per cent. per annum and chilkana at 1 anna per rupee was also to be charged from date of default.

The plaintiff sued for Rs. 4,591-12-0 including Rs. 1,208 interest due on instalments from dates of default and Rs. 163-12-0 chilkana.

Both the lower Courts have held that the condition as to payment of interest is penal. The first Court allowed damages at the rate at which the Rs. 113 had been calculated, viz., a very low rate of about 2 per cent. per annum. The lower Appellate Court, on plaintiff's appeal allowed interest at 6 per cent. per annum and increased the first Court's decree from Rs. 2,911 to 3,779. Both Courts disallowed chilkana. Defendant has preferred a second appeal to this Court urging, (1) that the lower Appellate Court should not have allowed interest at a rate higher than that at which the Rs. 113 was calculated, and (2) that the lower Appellate Court should have allowed interest only from date of default.

As to (1) defendant's Pleader can quote no authority for the proposition that in such cases the rate of interest should not exceed the original rate. As to (2) the contention seems reasonable.

But plaintiff's Pleader urges in reply that the lower Courts are wrong in holding that the agreement to pay enhanced interest is penal. This contention is, we think, correct. Velchand Chhaganlal v. Flagg (1) and Avathani Muthukrishniah v. Sankaralingam Pillai (2), on which plaintiff's Pleader relies, are both cases in which an agreement to pay enhanced interest from date of default at an exorbitant rate was held to be penal. Here the enhanced rate is a perfectly reasonable and normal one, and though it is a good deal higher than the original rate we see no reason to regard it as penal. Even if the chilkana claim be included the increased rate is nothing at all unreasonable, though certainly it is not usual to charge chilkana in such cases. The mere fact that for certain reasons the party agreed on very low interest to begin with is no sufficient reason for holding an agreement to pay enhanced interest later on to be penal. We think, therefore, the lower Courts might well have allowed interest at the rate agreed upon, and had they done so the amount decreed, even calculating only from dates of default, would have considerably exceeded the amount which the lower Appellate Court has decreed.

Bhagat Govind Das urges that plaintiff cannot raise such a plea, as he has neither filed an appeal to this Court nor lodged cross-objections, and that he is not supporting the lower Appellate Court's decree as he is really urging, not that that decree is correct, but that that decree is less than the amount which should have been decreed. But we fail to see why a party who is content to accept the lower Court's decision should not resist an appeal from that decision on the ground that the decree errs in favour of the appellant. The respondent, not having appealed nor filed cross-objections, cannot ask that the decree should be altered in his favour.

but surely he is entitled to urge that if he can shew that the decree errs in favour of the appellant, it should not be disturbed.

We uphold the lower Court's decree and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 46—"Agreement," meaning of—Tender of agreement, how to be made—Notice accompanying agreement, whether necessary.

The word "agreement" in section 46 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not mean an agreement strictly so called but means an agreement which the landlord proposes that the tenant should execute. [p. 234, col. 2.]

What the landlord has got to do under the section is to tender a document containing the terms of the proposed agreement, but it is not necessary that a notice to the tenant should accompany the document. [p. 235, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where a landlord filed in Court under section 46 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the draft of a proposed agreement duly stamped, but the Court, thinking it safer not to part with the stamped document, served on the tenant an identical copy but without a stamp on it along with a notice:

Held, that there was perfectly good tender of the agreement as required by section 46 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, even though the notice was not in accordance with the terms of the Act as there is nothing in section 46 which requires a notice to be served along with the agreement. [p. 235, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

No. 3325 of 1915.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against the decision of the learned Additional District Judge of the Twenty-four Perganahs, dated the 2nd December 1915, affirming the decision of the Munsif of Basirhat. The suit was brought by the plaintiffs under the provisions of section 46 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The questions raised in the appeal are as follows:—Section 46 of the Bengal Tenancy Act mentions a suit for ejectment on the ground of refusal to agree to enhancement of rent. It states that such a suit shall not be instituted against a non-occupancy raiyat unless the landlord has tendered to the raiyat an agreement to pay the enhanced rent and the raiyat has within three months before the institution of the suit refused to execute the agreement. There seems to be a certain amount of confusion as to what is meant by that section. It is quite obvious that the word "agreement" mentioned in the first subsection of section 46 cannot be strictly construed, because an agreement cannot come into existence until it has been assented to by both parties and where it requires to be reduced to the writing until it has been executed. Therefore, the agreement mentioned cannot mean an agreement strictly. It is quite obvious from what the section says that the Statute means an agreement proposed by the landlord because a landlord cannot tender an agreement to the tenant that has already been executed. If you read that, the section is a perfectly straightforward section. What it means is this: that a landlord before he can institute a suit for ejectment on the ground of refusal to agree to an enhancement of rent has got to tender to the tenant the agreement which he proposes that the tenant should execute; and if the tenant fails to execute it, then certain other provisions in the section say what the landlord may do with reference to the property. Now, in this case it is quite clear that the landlord followed the provisions of the sub-section, which states that a landlord desiring to tender an agreement may file it in the office of the Court, that the Court is to direct it to be served in the prescribed manner and that when it is so served, it should be deemed to have been tendered. There is nothing stated in the section as to a notice going along with the agreement. The only requisite is that the agreement, that is, the document containing the terms of the proposed agreement, has got to be tendered. Now, what happened in this case was this: The landlord sent a draft of the proposed agreement duly stamped to the Court, and exercising a wise discretion the Court thought it safer not to part with the stamped copy but tender to the tenant or rather serve on him a copy identical but without a stamp on it. It also served along with that copy a notice. It is said that it was not the original of the agreement that was tendered to the raiyat but only a copy. Of course, there was an agreement with a stamp on; but they were both drafts of the proposed agreement; that being so, the tenant could have executed either draft and, if he had executed the draft tendered to him, it would have been a sufficient compliance within the terms of the section although perhaps, strictly speaking, the duty of paying the stamp would have fallen on the tenant. But the tenant did not do that; but being served with it, he set up the objection that he had been served with a copy of an agreement. The short answer is that there has not been an agreement. There never has been an agreement. The agreement could not come into being until executed by the tenant and not being in being, all copies of the draft of the proposed agreement are just as much originals as the other. That being so, it is quite clear that what was served on the tenant in this case was the proposed agreement in writing. The tenant could have, if he thought fit, executed it. I do not agree with the view taken by the learned District Judge on that point.

Then the other point urged is one which it is said that the learned Judge made himself and was not a matter raised in the arguments before him. He says that the notice accompanying the copy of the agreement or the proposed agreement that was served on the tenant was not in accordance with the terms of the Act. The short answer is that there is nothing in section 46 that requires a notice to be served along with the copy of the agreement. I have no doubt that it is convenient to do so. But the Statute does not make it obligatory and the form of the notice in this case did not tell the tenant that he would lose his rights if he did not execute before a particular date, but informed him that he should execute the agreement and that if he had any objection he could submit it to the Court. He did not make any objection, nor did he submit any to the Court. The notice is not shown to have been issued under a statutory obligation, and the tenant had his three months and the suit was not instituted until after the expiration of that time. In this case, there seems to me to have been a perfectly good tender of the agreement as mentioned in the section and, the tenant not having availed himself of that, the plaintiff was entitled to institute the suit. I think the decision of the learned District Judge must be set aside in this respect.

Then, as regards the cross-appeal. That was not disposed of by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court because he thought that the point which he had decided, although purely technical, was sufficient to dispose of the whole case. As regards the actual service of what is called in the Statute the agreement, that is, the proposed agreement, on the tenant, the fact that there was such a service has been adjudicated on. The case was decided against the plaintiff on the grounds, first, that the so called original had not been served, and secondly, that the notice that accompanied the original was not in accordance with the terms of the Statute. I have already dealt with these points. First of all, the document served on the tenant was just as much an original as any other copy, and secondly, no notice under the terms of the Statute was necessary. However, these points have been adjudicated on between the parties and you cannot have the same points argued in the cross-appeal as in the appeal.

But another point has not been adjudicated on, and that is as to whether the defendants are non-occupancy raiyats because section 46 of the Bengal Tenancy Act only applies if the landlord establishes that the tenants are rai-yats with non-occupancy rights. That point has not been decided and the case must go back to the Court of appeal below to have the rest of the cross-appeal decided as to whether or not the defendants are non-occupancy rai-yats. If the learned Judge decides that they are non-occupancy rai-yats, then he must proceed to settle the fair and equitable rent under the other provisions of section 46 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. If, on the other hand, the Judge finds that the defendants are rai-yats with rights of occupancy, then the other part of the case which has been kept in abeyance—what exactly that means I do not know—will be disposed of.

The present appeal is, therefore, allowed with costs both in this Court and in the lower Courts and the case is sent back to the Court of appeal below with the above remarks.

Small Cause Court, suit cognizable by—Jurisdiction —Contribution suit.

A suit for contribution is not exempted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes, [p. 238, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gonda, dated 8th May 1916, upholding that of the Munsif, Utraula (Gonda), dated 13th March 1916.

FACTS of the case appear from the following Order of Reference by the Judicial Commissioner:—

"I have decided after consideration to refer this case for disposal to a Bench.

The suit was one for contribution and the facts are as follows:—The plaintiff, the Maharaja of Balrampur, being the mortgagee of an 8 anna share in the Taluqa of Birwa Mahnon, brought a suit for arrears of rent against four persons who were the thekadars of a village called Kapurpur and obtained a decree. Subsequently the Maharaja and the defendant-respondent the Raja of Bilahra (who owned the other 8-anna share of the taluka) joined in issuing a notice of ejectment against these thekadars under the provisions of the Oudh Rent Act. A suit to contest the notice was filed by thekadars, who lost their case in the Court of first instance but won it in appeal with the result that the Maharaja and the Raja were cast in costs of considerable amount. Subsequent to the passing of the appellate decree the Maharaja of Balrampur applied for execution of his decree for rent against the thekadars; the latter applied for set-off of the sum awarded to them as costs in the ejectment suit and this was allowed, the consequence being that the entire costs were paid by the Maharaja. He now sues to recover from the Raja of Bilahra his proportionate share of those costs, and his suit has been dismissed by both the Courts on the ground that such a suit for contribution does not lie. They have relied upon two authorities of this Court, one a ruling of Mr. Chamier reported as Musammat Kanis Fiza Bibi v. Sheo Narain Misr (1), the other a recent ruling of Mr. Stuart reported as Jamshed Ali Khan v. Zahurul-Hosan Khan (2).

The facts of the case decided by Mr. Chamier were not the same as those of the case before me, for the plaintiff was seeking to recover from the defendant a share of certain costs which had been made payable under a decree to which the defendant was no party. Mr. Chamier, on the authority of the ruling in Punjab v. Pelam Singh (3), decided that the plaintiff could not recover. According to him the reasoning in the judgment just mentioned was unanswerable.

The facts in the case were similar to

(1) 10 O. C. 108.

(2) 33 Ind. Cas. 357; 18 O. C. 340.

(3) 6 N. W. P. H. C. R. 192

those of the case which Mr. Chamier was considering and the reasoning which Mr. Chamier accepted is set out at page 195 of the report in the following language:—

'We see no sufficient reason for departing from the ordinary rule with regard to costs. When a joint debt is incurred, it is in contemplation of the parties that it will be paid without suit. Although every one of the persons who may be under the joint liability must be presumed to engage to contribute his fair share to its satisfaction, they are not to be presumed to engage to pay their shares of the costs of litigation to which they may not be parties and over which, whether it be more or less protracted, they may have no control.

'If persons who are under a joint liability are jointly sued and a decree passes for the debt and costs against both of them, each being under a joint liability in virtue of a decree is bound to contribute in respect both of debt and costs his share of the decree. Where only one of several co-contractors is sued, he cannot call upon his co-contractors to contribute to the costs of the suit.'

Without committing myself to the wholehearted acceptance of this doctrine which appeared so strongly to the learned Judge responsible for the ruling in Musammatt Kaniz Pizsa Bibi v. Sheo Narain Misr (1), I may be permitted to observe that it does not appear to me to be applicable to the case where the joint liability of the parties to the suit for contribution has arisen out of a decree as distinguished from a contract. This indeed seems clear from the passage which I have underlined (italicised) above. Whatever state of mind may be imputed to parties who enter into an agreement which imposed upon them a joint liability for the payment of a sum of money, it is obvious that the contemplations of the parties can have nothing to do with the matter when the Court passes a decree imposing upon them a joint and several liability for payment of damages or costs on both. The liability is imposed regardless of the state of mind of the parties and they must accept the consequent legal relation, whether they like it or not.

Is that legal relation to be altered by the mere accident of the choice of a decree-holder, who under the law has the option of realising the judgment-debt from one or other of the judgment-debtors? When one of the debtors has been compelled to pay the whole debt, can the others turn round and claim that they have been released from their obligations by reason of the action of the decree-holder over which none of the judgment-debtors has any control? Surely not. If the case does not come under section 69 of the Contract Act (a matter regarding which there has been a conflict of judicial authority), it certainly seems to come under section 70, and I altogether fail to see why the judgment-debtor who has satisfied the whole debt should be debarred from suing his joint judgment-debtors to enforce the obligation arising out of the joint decree.

With regard to Mr. Stuart's decision in Jamshed Ali Khan v. Zahur-ul-Hasan Khan (2) the facts are not stated in the judgment. I have referred to the record and find that the case was one of a decree against two defendants. One of them was obliged in execution to discharge the whole amount awarded for costs and he sued his joint judgment-debtor for his share of the costs. According to the ruling the suit was not maintainable. Mr. Stuart followed the opinion of Mr. Chamier in the earlier case and I think I have succeeded in showing that the facts were different and that the ratio decidendi of the High Court which Mr. Chamier adopted is altogether inapplicable to the case where the joint liability of the parties to the contribution suit has its origin in a decree of Court. I cannot assent to the proposition laid down in the head-note to the ruling in Jamshed Ali Khan v. Zahur-ul-Hasan Khan (2) that a suit for contribution in respect of costs is not maintainable.

I have only to add a few words with respect to an observation of the learned Judge of the Court below in his judgment in the present case. Apart from the authorities just referred to, he thought the suit was not competent on the ground that a Court of Equity is not bound to decide a pecuniary dispute between two wrongdoers. No doubt the learned Judge had in mind what was laid down in the well-known case of Merryweather v. Nizan (4), (4) (1799) 5 M. L. C. (9th Ed.) Vol. II, 569; (12th Ed.) Vol. I, 443; 8 T. E. 186; 101 E. R. 1337; 16 R. R. 810.

namely, that there is no right of contribution between joint tort-feasors: but he has given far too wide an interpretation of this rule of law. It is well settled that there are limits to the application of this doctrine. Lord Danman in Betts v. Gibbins (5) observed:—'The general rule is that between wrong-doers there is neither indemnity nor contribution: the exception is where the act is not clearly illegal in itself: and the principle does not extend to cases where the plaintiff is a tort-feasor by inference of law only.'

And lastly it is to be observed that the issuing of a notice of ejectment under the Oudh Rent Act, even if the notice is set aside after contract, is not a tort, i.e., an actionable wrong. The parties to this present appeal are not joint tort-feasors. For the above reasons I refer this appeal to a Bench for decision."

Shaikh Shahid Husain, for the Appellant.

Syed Ali Muhammad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The hearing of this appeal has been referred to a Bench by the order of the Judicial Commissioner with special reference to a point of law. We regret that we are unable to express any opinion on the point referred. It escaped the notice of the Counsel of the parties and the learned Judicial Commissioner that the suit was a suit of which a Court of Small Causes could take cognizance. It was not a suit of the nature specified in the Second Schedule of Act IX of 1887. This is the conclusion at which the learned Judicial Commissioner arrived in Suraj Baksh Singh v. Raghubar Singh (6). The valuation of the suit was Rs. 406-2-0. It is thus clear that no second appeal can lie under the provisions of section 102, Act V of 1908. Such being the case, we feel ourselves precluded from expressing any opinion on the merits. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed. Costs on parties.

Appeal dismissed.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL.

RESPONDENT.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (iv) (c)—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 39—Suit to avoid registered deed—Court-fee payable

A plaintiff suing for the cancellation of a document under section 39 of the Specific Relief Act is not entitled to reduce the Court-fee payable on his plaint by an assertion that the suit falls under Chapter VI of the Act. [p. 239, col. 1.]

On an adjudication under section 39 of the Specific Relief Act that a deed is void the Court is required by law, if the instrument has been registered, to send a copy of its decree to the officer in whose office the instrument has been registered, and this forwarding of the copy of the decree to the Registrar is a consequential relief upon which an ad valorem Court-fee must be paid. [p. 239, col. 1.]

FACTS.—The plaintiff brought a suit to avoid a registered deed of gift executed by her in 1917 in respect of 23 bighas of land. The plaintiff stated in her plaint that the defendant had got her to execute the deed by falsely giving her to understand that it was a bond for Rs. 50, the money being required for a pilgrimage to Benares which was suggested by the defendant and which he afterwards got her to abandon by representing that cholera was rife at Benares. The plaintiff valued her relief at Rs. 6,000, but paid a Court fees of Rs. 10 only. The suit having been dismissed on other grounds, the plaintiff appealed to the High Court and again paid a Court-fees of Rs. 10 only on the memorandum of appeal. been paid under section 7, clause (iv), sub-section (c) of the Court Fees Act. The report of the Stamp Reporter was contested before the Taxing Officer and reliance was placed on Karam Khan v. Daryai Singh (6) and section 39 of the Specific Relief Act. The Taxing Officer, agreeing with the decisions of the Madras and Bombay High Courts, was of opinion that the case came under section 7, clause (iv) (c), of the Court Fees Act. The matter was referred to the Taxing Judge.

Messrs. Lichmi Narain Sinha and I. K. Jha, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is clearly a suit under Chapter V of the Specific Relief Act. I am of opinion that the plaintiff is not entitled to reduce the Court-fees payable thereon by an assertion that it falls under Chapter VI. In coming to this conclusion I have considered the cases of Tacoodeen Tewarry v. Nawab Syed Ali Hossain Khan (7), Karam Khan v. Daryai Singh (6), Parathayi v. Sankumani (1), Samiya Maval v. Minummal (2), Shrimant Sagajirao v. Smith (8) and Parvatibai v. Vishvanath (4). The latter decision, if I may say so, is clearly a correct decision. On the adjudication that a deed is void the Court is required by law, if the instrument has been registered, to send a copy of its decree to the officer in whose office the instrument has been so registered, and as held in the cases of Parathayi v. Sankumani (1) and Parvatibai v. Vishvanath (4), this forwarding of the copy of the decree to the Registrar is a consequential relief upon which an ad valorem Court fee must be paid. The plaintiff cannot avoid payment of this Court-fee by omitting to ask for this necessary consequence of the decree sought.

Appeal dismissed.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907, s. 16—Order of adjudication, effect of—Suit by undischarged insolvent after vesting order, maintainability of—Appeal, right of.

After the passing of an order of adjudication and the vesting of the insolvent's property in the Official Receiver under section 16 of Act III of 1907, the insolvent is ipso facto divested of the same and can have no vested interest in the property until after it is restored to him after administration. The insolvent cannot maintain a suit in respect of such property, nor has he a right of appeal against any decree passed in a suit instituted by him, the Official Assignee alone being competent to sue for enforcing the rights possessed by the insolvent at the date of adjudication. Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 815 of 1913, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kumbakonam, in Original Suit No. 50 of 1912.

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastriar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. T. Srinivasa Gopalachariar, A. Krishnasami Iyer and R. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case an objection has been taken that appellant has no right to appeal. Two grounds are put forward, (1) that plaintiff, being an insolvent, had no right to bring the suit and consequently has no right of appeal, and (2) that even if he had a right to sue, the right of appeal was taken away by the intervention of the Official Receiver after plaintiff obtained a decree in the Original Court.

At the date of suit the plaintiff was an undischarged insolvent, and under section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act all his property vested in the Official Receiver, who would then have the right to sue in respect of that property. It is, however, contended for the appellant that he had the permission of the Official Receiver to bring this suit, and, therefore, could do so inasmuch as there remained vested in him an interest in the property, as would appear from the fact that any residue of his estate after administration in insolvency would be returned to him. This contention must, however, be rejected, for when the property becomes vested in the Official Receiver, the insolvent must ipso facto be divested of the same, and can have no vested interest in the property until after it is restored to him after administration. Sadodin v. Spiers (1) is authority for the proposition that the Official Assignee alone is competent to sue for enforcing the rights to property possessed by an insolvent at the date of adjudication [vide also Ramasamy Iyengar v. Ramalinga Mudaliar (2) and Ramasami Aiyangar v. Paradai Chetty (3)] and there is no authority to the contrary. Reliance is then placed on Sriramulu Naidu v. Andalammal (4), where it was held that an undischarged insolvent could sue in respect of property acquired after his adjudication and before the intervention of the Official Receiver. That case, however, is based on the rule in Cohen v. Mitchell (5) that until the trustee intervenes, all transactions by a bankrupt after his bankruptcy with any person dealing with him bona fide and for value in respect of his self-acquired property, whether with or without knowledge of bankruptcy, are valid against the trustee." That rule now appears to be embodied in a modified form in section 47 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1914, and appears to be for the protection of a third party who deals bona fide with an undischarged bankrupt. Whether the rule can be applied so as to give a right to sue in respect of such property need not be considered now, for, as pointed out in Sundarappaiyar v. Arunachella Chettiar (6), the ruling in Sriramulu Naidu v. Andalammal (4) does not refer to property in the possession of the insolvent at the date of adjudication. We must, therefore, hold that plaintiff had no right to institute this suit and consequently the second objection taken need not be considered. This second appeal is dismissed with costs.

The Court-fee due must be paid to Government by appellant.

10th August the parties to the deed applied to the Munsif to sanction it and he re-transferred the proceedings to the Collector. On the 18th August the Collector made the endorsement "permission granted" on the sale-deed, which was registered on the 20th August. The learned Divisional Judge has held that the sale is void, as the Collector's sanction could not ratify a sale already made without his sanction. I am of opinion that the view taken by the learned Judge is incorrect. The sale was not complete until the deed was registered, as registration was necessary. The Collector sanctioned it before it was registered. The written permission was given while the sale was incomplete. I find nothing in Salu Bai v. Bajat Khan (1) that a sale which receives the written sanction of the Collector after execution but before registration is void. In this view of the case I reverse the decree of the Divisional Judge and restore the decree of the Subordinate Judge dated the 14th May 1915. Costs of the 1st Court will be paid as ordered by that Court. The defendants Nos. 2 and 3 will pay their own and plaintiff's costs in the two Appellate Courts.

The fact that the defendant, in a suit to recover money alleged to be due on accounts taken between the parties, sent to the plaintiff a hundi and a cheque which were dishonoured on presentation, cannot attract the application of Article 78 of the Limitation Act to the suit. [p. 242, col. 1.]

The mere delivery of such a hundi and cheque does not constitute an acknowledgment within the meaning of section 19 of the Limitation Act. [p. 242, col. 1.]

An application for amendment of a plaint in second appeal was refused by the High Court on the ground that if the amendment were granted, the plaintiff would be able to start afresh on allegations wholly inconsistent with those made in the original plaint. [p. 242, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of Rs. 3,954-4-0. The Court of first instance gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 976-6-0. Upon appeal, the District Judge has modified that decree, and we have before us an appeal by the defendant as also a memorandum of cross-objection by the plaintiff. The appeal and the cross-objection raise two questions upon which the Courts below have taken divergent views. The first question relates to a sum of Rs. 168-8-6; with regard to this, the defendant contends that the claim is barred by limitation. The second question relates to a sum of Rs. 2,000; with regard to this, the Court of first instance dismissed the suit, but the District Judge has granted the plaintiff leave to abandon his claim with liberty to institute a fresh suit under Order XXIII, rule 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908.

As regards the first point, there can be no doubt that the sum really accrued due more than three years prior to the institution of the suit. The plaintiff contends that the claim is not barred by limitation under Article 78 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act. He relies upon the circumstances that the defendant sent him on the 26th February 1911 a hundi for Rs. 300 and on the 22nd July 1911 a cheque for Rs. 50, which were dishonoured on presentation. His case consequently is that this attracts the application of Article 73, which provides that a suit by the payee against the drawer of a bill of exchange (which has been dishonoured by non-acceptance) must be instituted within three years from the date of the refusal to accept. The suit before us, however, is not one of this description. It is a suit to recover money alleged to be due on accounts taken between the parties; to a suit of this description, Article 78 can have no possible application. On behalf of the plaintiff, this was clearly realised and an endeavour was made to support the decree of the District Judge on the ground that the delivery of the hundi and the cheque constituted an acknowledgment within the meaning of section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act. In our opinion, there is no foundation for this contention. The decision in Raman v. Vairavan (1) is clearly distinguishable; there the cheque was accompanied by a letter which contained an acknowledgment sufficient for the purposes of section 19. We must hold that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge in this respect was correct and his decision should not have been revised by the District Judge.

As regards the second point, no order could properly have been made under rule 1 of Order XXIII. The plaintiff sought to recover Rs. 2,000 upon certain allegations which were found untrue by the Trial Court. On appeal the District Judge came to the same conclusion, but he held that the plaintiff might be permitted to abandon the claim, with liberty reserved to him to institute a fresh suit on the same cause of action. The plaintiff subsequently presented an application to the District Judge, whereupon an order was made under rule 1 of Order XXIII. The plaintiff, however, notwithstanding this order, has preferred a cross-objection to this Court, to the effect that the view taken by the Courts below as to this sum of Rs. 2,000 is not correct. We are of opinion that, in such circumstances, the order under rule 1 of Order XXIII should not have been made.

As a last resort, the plaintiff seeks for leave to amend his plaint. We are not unmindful that under rule 17 of Order VI very wide powers of amendment are vested in the Court: but we are clearly of opinion that the application of the plaintiff for leave to amend his plaint at this stage should not be entertained. The object of the proposed amendment is to abandon the claim deliberately put forward in the Trial Court and persistently reiterated in the Court of Appeal below. If the amendment is granted, the result will follow that the plaintiff will start afresh on allegations wholly inconsistent with those made in the original plaint, and, to support the new allegations, he must bring forward evidence directly contradictory to the evidence already placed by him on the record. Such a feat he should not be encouraged to perform: Kokulasari Das v. Mohunt Rudranand Goswami (2), Ghurphekni v. Purneshwar Dayal Dubey (3), Mohesh Chunder Bose v. Radha Kishen Bhattacharjee (4), Kisandas Rupchand v. Rachappa Vithoba Shilwant (5), Ramji Ram v. Salig Ram (6), Sri Rang Behary Lal v. Ranchheyra Lal (7).

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored, subject to this variation that interest will run at the rate of six per cent. per annum as allowed by the District Judge. This order will carry costs both here and in the Court of Appeal below.

Apart from the provisions of section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act, however, an equitable right may arise in favour of the owner of a limited interest who makes improvements on the property in his possession. [p. 245, col. 1.]

But this right can only come into existence if it can be shown that the true owner stood aside and abstained from asserting his rights. There must be in such cases some equity arising out of the conduct of the true owner and further, apart from the conduct of the owner in this connection, the right cannot come into existence unless it is found that the person in possession was under a mistaken belief that he had a permanent interest in the property. JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for ejectment brought by the plaintiff-respondent Beni Bahadur for the purpose of recovering possession of a house. There was also a claim for mesne profits.

The facts of the case are a little complicated and require to be set out at some length. The property in dispute consists of a plot of land situated in the city of Lucknow upon which there is at present standing a pacca house. It is said that this plot belonged originally to one Ram Prasad Kayastha who died some time in the year 1876. It is stated that at the time Ram Prasad died the only buildings standing on this plot of land were a "kacheha dalan" and a "kothri." In fact the ground appears to have been used as a small garden and these buildings were for the residence of the mali.

Ram Prasad left a widow Musammat Chhogar Kuar, who survived him for many years. It is admitted that she died in the month of December 1908. On the 14th of October 1891 Musammat Chhogar Kuar sold the plot of land in dispute to her brother Madho Prasad. The property was sold for Rs. 80 and in the sale-deed which was executed the property was described as consisting of "a piece of land used as a garden with a dalan and a kothri". The price paid by Madho Prasad was Rs. 80. It has been found that after Madho Prasad acquired this property he set about building a house which he erected, it is said, at a cost of Rs. 1,500 or Rs. 2,000. In the year 1900 shortly before his death Madho Prasad made a gift of this property to his Guru, a man named Baba Baram Bilas. Baram Bilas in his turn sold this property to Mir Buniad Husain on the 3rd of June 1902. Mir Buniad Husain was the father of the defendant-respondent Mir Etizad Husain. The plaintiff in this case Beni Bahadur claims to be the reversioner of Ram Prasad. He is, it appears, the son of Ram Prasad's sister and the Courts below have found that he is the only relation of Ram Prasad who can claim as his heir. There is no longer any dispute as to this matter.

A variety of defences were set up in the Court below but for the purpose of disposing of this appeal it will not be necessary to refer to them all. It is now conceded that the legal title to this property is with the plaintiff and the only question outstanding is whether the defendant-appellant is entitled to any compensation before an order for his dispossession is made.

The case as to compensation was dealt with by both the Courts below with reference to the provisions of section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act. The Munsif was of opinion that in the circumstances the defendant could not be ejected without compensation being paid to him by the plaintiff. It has been found that the house which now stands upon the land in dispute was constructed by Madho Prasad after his purchase from the widow; and it has also been found that since the date of the purchase by Buniad Husain a sum of about Rs. 500 has been spent on repairing the property. For various reasons the Munsif thought the case was covered by section 51 and accordingly, while giving the plaintiff a decree for ejectment, he ordered the payment of compensation to the defendant, or in case the compensation was not paid, he directed the defendant to pay to the plaintiff the value of the land. This decree has been reversed in appeal by the Additional Judge. He was of opinion that the case could not be brought within the purview of section 51 and that consequently the plaintiff was not liable to pay any compensation as a condition precedent to his obtaining possession of the property.

The first point which has been argued before me is with reference to this question of compensation and the terms of section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act. This section lays down that when the transferee of immoveable property makes any improvement on the property, believing in good faith that he is absolutely entitled thereto, and he is subsequently evicted therefrom by any person having a better title, the transferee has a right to require the person causing the eviction either to have the value of the improvement estimated and paid or secured to the transferee, or to sell his interest in the property to the transferee. In dealing with the law as laid down in this section, the learned Judge observed that the question which had to be determined was the position which Madho Prasad occupied with respect to the land in suit. It is to be noted that the present defendant cannot be said to have improved the property for, as has been mentioned, the pacca house was built on the plot by Madho Prasad. Whether the repairs which were done by the defendant after the date of his purchase could be treated as improvements under this section is a matter of some difficulty. I shall refer to this point later on. The Judge came to the conclusion that Madho Prasad was not a transferee who believed, or who could have believed, in good faith that he was absolutely entitled to the property. The Judge pointed to the fact that Musammât Chhogar Kuar was a Hindu widow who had, therefore, only a limited interest in the property. Ordinarily she could not transfer the property except for the period of her life. The Judge found that no legal necessity for the transfer had been proved. Certain evidence was put forward on behalf of the defendant for the purpose of showing that there was a legal necessity, but this evidence has been rejected as unreliable. The learned Judge also referred to the fact that Madho Prasad being the brother of the lady must have been acquainted with the circumstances and must also be taken to know the Hindu Law relating to the power of widows to transfer the property which they have acquired from their husbands. He found that Madho Prasad must have been aware that there was no legal necessity for the sale and that in these circumstances he could not claim to be a transferee who believed in good faith that he had an absolute title to the property he had acquired. This finding of the lower Appellate Court has been criticized here on a variety of grounds; but it seems to me that I must hold that what the Judge has found amounts to a finding of fact with which I am not competent to interfere.

The expression "good faith" is defined in section 3, clause 20, of the General Clauses Act, which lays down that a thing is deemed to be done in good faith where it is in fact done honestly, whether it is done negligently or not. Certain facts have been found by the Judge to which I have referred above, and it appears to me that on those facts it was open to him to find that Madho Prasad could not have had an honest belief that he was the absolute owner of the property. Consequently, as the Judge observes, if Madho Prasad were alive he could not have set up a claim to compensation under section 51. The conclusion of the learned Judge on this part of the case is supported by a ruling of the Madras High Court reported as Nanjappa Goundan v. Peruma Goundan (1). There it was held that where a purchaser knows, or must be presumed to know, that the vendor could sell only under certain circumstances and he either knows that such circumstances do not exist or wilfully abstains from making any inquiry on the subject, the mere fact that he purchased for consideration will not suffice to show good faith; and he will not be entitled to claim compensation for improvements effected by him. So much for the case set up by the appellant under section 51 of the Transfer of Property Act. It follows that if Madho Prasad acquired no right under this section, the defendant-appellant, who has taken a transfer of such title as Madho Prasad had, cannot lay claim to any higher rights than Madho Prasad would have had himself. It may be, as argued, that Buniad Husain gave full value for the property to the person to whom Madho Prasad had made a gift. But that does not affect the legal question under consideration. If no right had arisen to Madho Prasad under section 51, then no such right could have passed by purchase to the appellant.

(1) 4 Ind. Cas. 18; 32 M. 530; 6 M. L. T. 284; 19 M. L. J. 454.

A further question then arises. If section 51 does not apply to the case, is there any other ground upon which compensation could be awarded to the defendant in this case? Madho Prasad certainly did not come into possession of this property as a trespasser. He was in any case the purchaser of a limited interest which would endure for the life of the widow. I think there can be no doubt that on the authorities, and apart from the provisions of section 51, an equitable right may arise in favour of the owner of a limited interest who makes improvements on the property in his possession. But this right can only come into existence if it can be shown that the true owner stood aside and abstained from asserting his rights. There must be in such cases some equity arising out of the conduct of the true owner; and further, apart from the conduct of the owner in this connection, the right cannot come into existence unless it is found that the person in possession was under a mistaken belief that he had a permanent interest in the property. This doctrine has been appealed to by the appellant's learned Counsel for the purpose of assisting the case of his client; but it seems to me that the conditions are not satisfied which would justify me in holding that an equitable right had arisen in the appellant's favour. To begin with we have the finding of the Court below that Madho Prasad could not have been under the belief that he had any permanent interest in this property. Coming now to Buniad Husain, the predecessor-in-interest of the appellant, it is probably the fact that he was under the belief that he had acquired an absolute interest in this land which would have entitled him to hold on to it as long as he chose. But then it cannot be pretended that the improvements erected on the land in dispute were made by Buniad Husain. It is true they were purchased by him but they were not made by him; and so on this ground it appears to me that the defendant-appellant has not made out a case for equitable relief.

Then again there is another point to be considered. In order to entitle the holder of a limited interest in the property to equitable relief in this manner there must, as I have said, be some conduct on the part of the true owner in virtue of which the person in possession was encouraged to make the improvements. The law in this matter has been expounded in a ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (2). After setting out an extract from a decision of the Allahabad High Court reported as Gopi v. Bisheshar (3), their Lordships observe as follows:—

"It is to be regretted that the loose and inadequate statement of the rule of equity, which is reported in Gopi v. Bisheshar (3), should have been accepted, apparently without much consideration, by the learned Judges of both Appellate Courts. The proposition, if it were carefully supplemented, might possibly be made to apply to the case where the owner of land sees another person erecting buildings upon it, and knowing that such other person is under the mistaken belief that the land is his own property, purposely abstains from interference with the view of claiming the building when it is erected."

In dealing with this part of the case we have to consider the position of the present plaintiff Beni Bahadur. Up till the time of Musammam Chhogar Kuar's death at the end of 1908 Beni Bahadur was in no sense an owner of the property in dispute. He was the prospective heir of the property, being the nearest relative of Ram Prasad then in existence. But he cannot in any sense be described as the owner of the property; and it seems to me, therefore, impossible to apply this equitable doctrine on the footing that Beni Bahadur was the owner of the property in suit and could and should have interfered in order to prevent the appellant or his predecessor from erecting buildings on the land. It is pointed out that Beni Bahadur in the lifetime of Chhogar Kuar brought several declaratory suits relating to certain alienations which Musummat Chhogar Kuar had made and it is claimed to be a significant fact that he never brought any such suit with respect to the property with which we are now concerned. All the same I cannot accept the argument that Beni Bahadur was necessarily under any obligation to bring such a suit, and his omission to bring a suit of this kind cannot, in my opinion, be considered as amounting to any act on the part of the owner by reason of which the person in possession was encouraged to lay out money in improvements. Beni Bahadur in the course of his evidence was asked to explain why he had never brought any suit in the widow's lifetime regarding this property, and his answer was that he did not consider that he had any right to the property so long as Musummat Chhogar Kuar was alive. In short it seems impossible to treat a mere reversioner as an owner for the purpose of applying this doctrine of equity. A may be a reversionary heir and he may do acts which encourage the person in possession to erect buildings of a permanent character. When the reversion falls in on the death of the life-tenant, B is the nearest heir in existence and not A. Would it be possible for the person in possession to set up an equitable right against B, on the ground that A who was the previous reversionary heir had encouraged the holder of a limited interest to suppose that he was in with a permanent title? I think not. It seems to me therefore that neither under section 51, nor under this doctrine of equity to which I have referred, can the appellant be said to be entitled to compensation in this case.

It has been suggested that at any rate the lower Court ought to allow the defendant to remove the materials of the house before the plaintiff is given possession. Here again I think the argument fails. The reversioner is entitled to the property as it stands at the time of the widow's death. Here we have the fact that the widow died in 1908 and at that time the house had been built.

It has further been suggested that the appellant is entitled to the money which he laid out by way of repairs. This argument must fail for the same reason. It seems from the accounts which were put in by the defendant that the money he spent on repairs of the house was spent for the benefit of the tenant of the premises from whom the appellant was receiving rent. It is also made to appear from the accounts that the money was expended in the year 1907, that is, before the date of the widow's death. I can see no reason why the plaintiff should not have the benefit of the law which entitled him to possession of the property as it stands at the time when the succession opens. The case may be a hard one, but the defendant-appellant is in no worse position than any other person who has bought property from another holding under a defective title. He cannot set up the hardship to himself as any ground for resisting the claim of the rightful owner; and least of all when he has not been able to show that the rightful owner has done anything which would give rise to an equitable right in his (appellant's) favour.

I am satisfied, therefore, that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct and I dismiss this appeal with costs accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151, O. XXI, rr. 18, 19—Execution of decree for smaller sum, whether can be issued against party to whom larger sum is payable by applicant—Appeal—Appellate decree, whether supercedes original decree which it affirms.

When an appeal has been decided, the original decree becomes merged in the appellate decree and for purposes of execution as for purposes of amendment the [appellate decree, even] when it merely affirms the original decree, is to be taken as embodying and superseding that decree. [p. 248, col. 1.]

By a decree in a partition suit A became entitled to recover the sum of Rs. 2,130 from B. A preferred an appeal against that decree, which was dismissed and he became liable to pay to B Rs. 506 by way of costs of the appeal. Thereafter A applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council but this application was rejected and he was directed to pay to B further costs to the extent of Rs. 80.

Held, that on the principles embodied in Order XXI, rules 18 and 19, and in section 51, Civil Procedure Code, B was not entitled to take out execution for the smaller sums of Rs. 506 and Rs. 80 payable to him by A when a larger sum payable by him to A against whom he sought execution was due and remained unpaid. [p. 248, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, 24 Pergannahs, dated the 17th May 1915.

FACTS appear from the Judgment.

Babu Sarat Chandra Rai Chowdhury (with him Babu Kshitish Uthandra Chakrabarty), for the Appellant.—The decree of the Subordinate Judge of Alipur in the original suit was taken on appeal before this Court. The original decree merged in the High Court's decree. There was then an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty's Council. The costs awarded in the regular appeal as well as those in the hearing of the application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council are together less than the amount payable to my client under the original decree.

The present application for execution is not maintainable.

Refers to Order XXI, rule 19, Civil Procedure Code. Vile Madappa Ganapa Hedge v. Jaki Ghosal Gabri Ghosal (1).

Babu Shib Chandra Palit (with him Babu Biswanath Bose), for the Respondent, distinguished the case of Madappa Ganapa Hedge v. Jaki Ghosal Gabri Ghosal (1) and submitted that the provisions of Order XXI, rule 19, Civil Procedure Code, did not apply to the facts and circumstances of the present case.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of execution proceedings.

It appears that in a suit for partition brought by the present respondent under a decree made on an arbitration awarded on the 12th March 1906, the present appellant Bepin Behari Sen and his mother Thakurani Dasi Dabi each became entitled to recover a sum of Rs. 2,130 from the present respondent Krishna Behari Sen. Against this decree Bepin Behari and Thakurani Dasi appealed and under the decree of this Court dismissing their appeal on the 8th July 1908 they became liable jointly and severally in a sum of Rs. 506 by way of costs to Krishna Behari. Thereafter they applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, and by the order dismissing that application on the 6th April 1909 they were directed to pay further costs to the extent of Rs. 80.

In 1913 they next brought a suit to have the decree on the award on which it was based set aside; that suit was finally dismissed in April 1915.

Meanwhile the respondent Krishna Behari had twice applied in execution in order to realise the sums awarded to him by way of costs. The first application was dismissed for non-prosecution on the 13th September 1911. The second was instituted on the 25th July 1914. To this application Bepin Behari took two objections, namely, (1) that it was barred by limitation, (2) that it should be held in abeyance pending the disposal of the suit of 1913. Both these objections were overruled on the 22nd February 1915.

The suit of 1913 having been dismissed in April on the 8th of May 1915, the judgment-debtor-appellant next objected that the sum of Rs. 586 due to the respondent by way of costs should be set off against the sum of Rs. 2,130 due to the appellant under the original decree and that the application for execution should be dismissed. This objection was overruled on the 17th May 1915.

It is against this order of the Subordinate Judge and subsequent orders bringing the property of the appellant to sale and confirming the sale thereof to the decree-holder-respondent that the present appeal is directed.

It is not disputed that the sum to which the appellant became entitled under the decree of 12th March 1906 remains due and unpaid, but on behalf of the respondent it is contended that his application is for execution of the appellate decree, that the appellate decree does not specify the sum due to the present appellant Bepin Behari and that in any case the costs (Rs. 80) awarded to the present respondent by the order dismissing the application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council cannot be set off in the way proposed.

Now it is no doubt the case that notwithstanding the pendency of an appeal the decree of the Court of first instance may be executed. But when the appeal has been decided then the original decree is merged in the appellate decree and for purposes of execution as for purposes of amendment, the appellate decree, even when it merely affirms the original decree, is to be taken as embodying and superseding that decree. The respondent, therefore, cannot be allowed to take advantage of the fact that the decree as drawn up does not recite in so many words that under that decree a sum of Rs. 2,000 is payable by the plaintiff-decree-holder to the defendant-appellant. In this view Order XXI, rule 19, is applicable in terms and the respondent before us should not have been permitted to take out execution for the smaller sum due to him under the appellate decree.

By section 36 of the Code the provisions relating to the execution of decrees are made applicable to the execution of orders. The order by which the appellant before us is made liable in the sum of Rs. 80 by way of costs to the respondent was made in the course of the same litigation as the decree of which the respondent sought execution. That decree placed before the Court by the applicant for execution showed that the sum of Rs. 2,000 was payable by the applicant to the person against whom he sought execution. It is admittedly due and unpaid. Thus whether Order XXI, rule 19, be or be not applicable in terms, yet on the principles embodied in Order XXI, rules 18 and 19, and in section 151 of the Code execution in respect of this smaller sum also should have been refused.

For these reasons we set aside the orders complained of and the sale of the appellant's property.

The appeal is accordingly decreed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at five gold mohurs.

Appeal allowed.

Right to sue, want of, plea as to—Plaintiff suing on behalf of others as well as for himself—Defendant, knowledge of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908). s. 65—Auction-purchaser, right of, to claim profits from date of sale.

Where a defendant in a suit brought by the Manager of the Court of Wards knows that the Manager is suing on behalf of the ward as well as on behalf of other persons interested in the property in dispute, he cannot resist the suit on the ground that the ward is not the sole owner of the property. [p. 249, cols. 1 & 2.]

An auction-purchaser of a share in a village is entitled to claim profits from the date of the sale, and not only from the date when mutation is effected in his name in the village papers. [p. 249, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the Deputy Commissioner, Sitapur, dated the 10th November 1916.

Syed Nabi Ullah, for the Appellant.

Rai Nagendra Nath Ghoshal Bahadur, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Hashmat Ali was defendant in a suit in the Court below brought under section 108, clause 15, of the Oudh Rent Act for the recovery of profits for the years 1320 to 1323 Fasli. The profits were sought in respect of a 6 annas share in the village and the total sum claimed was Rs. 6,320-7-0. The Court below gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff to the extent of Rs. 3,167-10-0 with costs and future interest at 6 per cent. The first point which has been raised in appeal here is with respect to the right of the plaintiff to bring this suit. The plaintiff was the Special Manager of the Court of Wards in charge of the estate of one Jai Indar. The case for the appellant is that Jai Indar was not the sole owner of the 6-annas share in respect of which the claim was made. In order to understand the matter raised by this argument it is necessary to refer to certain facts. It appears that the defendant Hashmat Ali executed a bond in favour of Raja Balbhadar Singh of Mahewa. After the death of the Raja a suit was brought by his widow on the bond and a decree was obtained. While execution proceedings were pending, Rani Raghubans Kuar died and was succeeded by one Rajendra Bahadur, who became the Talukdar of the Mahewa Estate. Rajendra Bahadur took steps to execute the decree and the result was that after a number of objections raised by Hashmat Ali had been disposed of, the property was eventually brought to sale by a public auction and was purchased by Rajendra Bahadur on the 27th of May 1912. Various other objections were afterwarde raised by the judgment-debtor but the sale was confirmed on the 28th of June 1912, and a sale-certificate was issued on the 21st of December 1914. By the time this sale-certificate came to be issued, Rajendra Bahadur had died and had been succeeded by his son Jai Indar whose property is under the management of the Court of Wards, and it is on the strength of this sale-certificate that the present suit has been brought by the Court of Wards as representing Jai Indar. It is to be observed that in the sale-certificate which was granted on the date above mentioned it was expressly stated by the Subordinate Judge who was dealing with the case that the certificate was being granted to the Special Manager as guardian of Jai Indar for his own benefit and also for the benefit of three other persons who were the legal representatives of the Rani. It is clear on all hands, and in fact it has been admitted by the learned Counsel for the Court of Wards, that Jai Indar is not the sole owner of the 6-annas share in respect of which the profits are claimed. It is admitted that the Court of Wards is managing the property on behalf of Jai Indar and in a way as trustee for the other three persons who now represent the deceased Rani Raghubans Kuar. It is a pity I think that these facts were not set out in the plaint, for the omission to state them has given Hashmat Ali an opportunity of raising the plea which at first sight appears to be a plausible one. On examination, however, of the facts of the case it is altogether clear that Hashmat Ali's plea has got no substance in it. He has been contesting the claim all along since the time the decree was obtained and execution was sought and he very well knew the facts. It is made to appear that the entry in the revenue papers is in favour of Jai Indar alone and having regard to the facts which I have already mentioned it appears to me that Hashmat Ali is not in the present suit in a position to contest the right of the Court of Wards to bring forward this claim, it being of course understood that they are claiming not only on behalf of Jai Indar but on behalf of the three other legal representatives of Rani Raghubans Kuar also. I am satisfied therefore that the plaintiff had the right to bring this suit and that the plea which has been raised to the contrary cannot be sustained.

The next point taken is that the plaintiff was not in a position to sue for profits accruing prior to the date on which mutation was obtained in favour of Jai Indar. Here again I think the plea must be rejected for, as the lower Court observed, the provisions of section 65 of the Code of Civil Procedure apply to the case and in virtue of those provisions it is clear that the title to the 6-annas share accrued to the auction-purchaser from the date on which the property was sold. It may or may not be the case that the revenue papers show only Jai Indar as being in possession of the share since 1916 but the entry, whatever its value may be as prima facie evidence, is contradicted by the other evidence on the record, which shows that Jai Indar is one of four persons who are beneficially interested in the share since the date of the purchase. It is impossible, I think, to say that a good title to this 6-annas share having accrued to Jai Indar and these other legal representatives on the date of the sale they are not to have the profits of this property from that date. I see no reason whatever for holding that the plaintiff and his co-sharers would only be entitled to recover profits from the date the mutation was made. It is argued in this connection that Hashmat Ali, being the lambardar, could not be made responsible to persons who are not recorded co-sharers, and it was suggested that he might before the date of this sale have paid away the profits to other persons who were so recorded. There is no virtue in this plea, for the point was never raised in Hashmat Ali's defence. He never pretended that he had paid any money to any other co-sharer in the village and so this defence is without merit. The only other point raised is one which must be determined in favour of the appellant. The lower Court decreed the claim only in part. According to the decree which has been prepared the plaintiff has been awarded full costs and the learned Counsel who appears for the respondent admits that this is wrong. The decree will have to be corrected, for in the circumstances the plaintiff was only entitled to proportionate costs in accordance with the amount of his success. A fourth point relating to one of the items of the account between the parties was sought to be argued, but it was brought to the learned Counsel's attention that the point was not raised in the memorandum of appeal and the argument was, therefore, withdrawn. The result is that the appeal is allowed in part, that is to say, the decree of the lower Court will be corrected by insertion of the proper order giving the plaintiff only proportionate costs. In other respects the appeal is dismissed. I make no order as to costs in this Court.

Appeal partly allowed.

Decree for rent—Execution, condition imposed upon, validity of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, O. IX, r. 13—Res judicata—Fraud—Suit to set aside decree obtained by fraud—Question of fraud already considered in proceedings to set aside ex parte decree, effect of.

A Court decreeing a suit for arrears of rent has no right to impose a condition as to the mode of execution of the decree by making the decree executable only against the defaulting jama. [p. 251, cols. 1 & 2.]

The decision on the question of fraud in a proceeding under Order IX, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code, for setting aside an ex parte decree will operate as res judicata on the question of fraud raised in a subsequent suit between the same parties for setting aside the ex parte decree in only so far as that fraud consisted in the suppression of service of summons. [p. 251, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Officiating Additional Subordinate Judge, Backerganj, dated the 16th of August 1915, confirming the decree of the Officiating Additional Munsif, Barisal, dated the 12th of September, 1913.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Gunada Charan Sen, for the Appellants.—The suit is to set aside a decree for rent for fraud. The Courts below have found that there was no fraud so far as defendant No. 12 was concerned. But the Courts have limited the execution of the decree by sale of the defaulting jama only. The Courts have no jurisdiction to limit the execution of the decree in this way. Arrears of rent are a first charge on the land, though the landlord is not bound to proceed against the defaulting jama first of all. He may, if he likes, proceed against other properties of the defaulting tenant—see Jatindra Nath Roy v. Morajer Ali Khan (1).

My second point is that this identical question of fraud, i.e., suppression of summons has been investigated in the proceeding under Order IX, rule 13. The question, therefore, cannot be re-opened in this suit. The question of fraud, so far as plaintiff No. 1 is concerned, is barred by the principle of res judicata.

[CHITTY, J.—These questions have been considered in Khirdode Chandra Roy v. Ashtulla Bee (2). Where the whole suit is fraudulent, as in the present case, that question can be decided in a subsequent suit. The allegation of fraud so far as service of summons is considered may not be re-opened.]

Babu Kali Prasunno Piploi (with him Babu Suresh Chunder Talukdar), for the Plaintiff No. 2, Respondent.—The Court found fraud so far as service of summons was concerned. In this case two distinct kinds of fraud were alleged: (1) the suit itself was fraudulent, (2) the summons was fraudulently suppressed. The Courts found that there was fraudulent suppressions of summons. Therefore, the Court has found fraud and the decree is liable to be set aside.

(1) 16 O. W. N. xxxi (3i) (Notes portion).

(2) 35 Ind. Cas. 557; 20 C. W. N. 845;

CHANDRA KUMAR ROY CHOWDHURY v. ASWINI KUMAR DAS.

In view of the clear findings of fact of both Courts that plaintiff No. 2 was never in possession of the jama, the direction about the execution of the decree is equitable. If a person executes a kabuliyat in favour of another but never gets possession of land, he is not bound to pay rent. Liability to pay rent must arise from possession of land. The direction about execution should, therefore, be retained.

JUDGMENT.

CHITTY, J.—This is an appeal by defendants Nos. 1 to 3, really on behalf of themselves and defendants Nos. 4 to 11 who are their co-sharers. Aswini Kumar Das, plaintiff No. 1, brought the suit to set aside an ex parte decree passed against him and Kashish Chandra Das, defendant No. 12, on the ground of fraud. That decree was passed in Rent Suit No. 1502 of 1910. Aswini Kumar Das alleged that there was fraud, not only because he was not served with summons, but also because the suit against him was bad ab initio on the ground that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant subsisting between him and defendants Nos. 1 to 11. Defendant No. 12, Kashish Chandra Das, was made a pro forma defendant to the present suit and in his written statement he alleged that the return of service against him also was fraudulent and collusive. At the same time, while raising no objection to relief being granted to Aswini Kumar Das, he did not ask for any relief for himself. On the other hand he objected to having been made a party to the suit with which he said he had nothing to do. On 12th September 1913 Kashish Chandra Das was transferred on his own petition from the category of defendants to that of the plaintiffs. Both the Courts have agreed in their findings of fact. They have set aside the ex parte decree in the rent suit as regards Aswini Kumar Das but have held that it must stand against Kashish Chandra Das, with this reservation that the rent lands only are to be liable for the decretal amount.

Two points have been raised before us by the appellants. First of all they say that the decree against Kashish Chandra Das must be executed in the ordinary way and that the Courts deciding this suit had no right to impose a condition as to the mode of execution of that decree. In this contention the appellants are clearly right and the decree of the lower Appellate Court cannot be supported in this respect. It is not seriously argued for Kashish Chandra Das that it can be supported on that ground. The learned Pleader for Kashish Chandra Das has endeavoured to raise questions as to the findings of fact of the lower Court regarding his client and the service of summons upon him, but we do not think that in second appeal we can go into those questions.

The second point raised by the appellants was that the question of fraud raised by the plaintiff No. 1, Aswini Kumar Das, was res judicata inasmuch as he had brought an application under Order IX, rule 13, Civil Procedure Code, to set aside the ex parte decree against him on the ground that service of the summons had been fraudulently suppressed, and that application had been dismissed. This might be a good ground if the allegations of the plaintiff with regard to fraud were confined to the service of summons against him. They were not, however, confined to that but were directed to the whole suit as being bad, Aswini Kumar Das alleging that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant as between him and defendants Nos. 1 to 11. The question was considered in the case of Khirode Chandra Roy v. Ashtulla Bee (2), to the judgment in which case I was a party. There it was pointed out that if the fraud was confined to the non-appearance of the defendant in a suit it might be res judicata under section 108 of the Code of 1882, i. e., Order IX, rule 13 of the present Code, but not so when the question was whether the whole suit was bad ab initio.

I would accordingly allow the appeal on the first ground and set aside so much of the decree of the lower Appellate Court as directs the execution of the rent decree to be confined to the jama. The decree must stand against Kashish Chandra Das as a personal decree. The appeal against Aswini Kumar Das fails. Defendants-appellants must have their costs of this appeal against plaintiff No. 2, Kashish Chandra Das, but they must pay the costs of plaintiff No. 1, Aswini Kumar Das.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Erroneous decision on question of law, whether res judicata.

An erroneous decision on a question of law between the parties to a suit may nevertheless amount to res judicata in a subsequent suit between the same parties.

In a previous suit between the parties it was decided on an issue of law that the defendants were liable to pay interest on arrears of rent. In a subsequent suit for arrears of rent and interest the claim for interest was resisted on the ground that the defendants were thekadars and were, therefore, not liable under the provisions of section 141 of the Ondh Rent Act to pay interest on arrears.

Held, that the matter, having been in issue in the former suit and having been heard and finally determined, was conclusive in the subsequent suit as to the liability of the defendants to pay interest, even although the earlier decision was a wrong decision in law.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 8th December 1916, modifying an order of the Assistant Collector,
Gonda, dated the 29th September 1916.

Mr. Shahid Hussain, for the Appellant.

Babu Ram Chandra, for Respondents
Nos. 1 and 3.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals (Nos. 20 and 21 of 1917) can be disposed of by one judgment. They were dealt with in one judgment by the lower Appellate Court. The simple question for determination is whether in the circumstances disclosed the plaintiff appellant who is the taluqdar is entitled to claim interest from the defendants respondents on arrears of rent. The claim for interest was resisted on the ground that these defendants were thekadars and, therefore, were not liable under the provisions of section 141 of the Ondh Rent Act to pay interest on arrears. Accordingly the learned Judge held that it was for the plaintiff to show that there was some agreement or contract to pay interest. It was held by the first Court which dealt with the cases that the question of the liability to pay interest was res judicata between the parties. The learned Judge thought that this opinion of the Court of first instance was wrong on the ground that in the present suits the array of parties was not the same.

He further thought that the decision of the Assistant Collector in the earlier suits could not be res judicata, because arrears of rent become due every year and any question connected with the payment of interest on such arrears is a recurring question which cannot be settled once and for all by any judgment. This opinion of the learned District Judge is not correct.
It is admitted in the first place that the previous litigation to which reference was made by the Assistant Collector was between the same parties. It is also admitted that in the previous litigation it was decided on an issue of law between the parties that the present defendants-respondents were liable to pay interest on arrears of rent. The question must be taken to be res judicata between the parties. In view of the authorities of this Court it cannot be maintained that an erroneous decision on a question of law may not amount to res judicata. I am aware that some of the High Courts in India entertain another opinion; but so far as this Court is concerned the rule is settled and I need only refer to a Bench judgment of this Court reported as *Chaudhri Ganga Singh
v. Lachmi Narain* (1), in which Mr.
Scott quoted with approval a previous decision of a Judge of this Court reported as Mohammad Bahadur v. Ram Pershad
(2). The matter, having been in issue in the former suit and having been heard and finally determined, is conclusive in the present suits as to the liability of these defendants-respondents to pay interest, although it may be, as argued, that the earlier decision was a wrong decision in law.

The result is that these two appeals must be allowed. I set aside the decree of the Court below and restore the decrees of the Court of first instance. The appellant is entitled to his costs both here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Under the Hindu Law the mother is the natural guardian of a minor in the absence of the father, irrespective of the family being joint or separate. [p. 254, col 1]

Order XXXII, rule 3, clause 4, of the Civil Procedure Code requires that a notice for the appointment of a guardian ad litem should be served upon the natural guardian of the minor. [p. 254, col. 1.]

Where a guardian ad litem of a minor defendant is guilty of negligence and no attempt is made by him to protect the interests of the minor in the suit, the decree obtained in the suit will not bind the minor. [p. 254, col 2.]

Where a decree which cannot be split up is set aside on the ground of fraud at the instance of one of several judgment-debtors, the entire decree must be set aside. [p. 255, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Mozufferpore, dated the 8th February 1917, affirming a decision of the Munsif, First Court, Mozufferpore, dated the 20th June 1916.

Mr. Saroshi Charan Mitter, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Rajendra Prasad and Audh Behari Chaubey, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The defendants are the appellants in this case. This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent to set aside two ex parte decrees obtained against him by the appellants on the ground of fraud and gross negligence on the part of the guardian. The plaintiff is a minor. The decrees sought to be set aside are (1) dated the 8th of June 1912 and (2) 18th of November 1914. Prior to the obtaining of the aforesaid decrees the defendants-appellants had brought a suit in 1907 against the father of the present plaintiff for rent in respect of the property in suit, alleging that the rent was at the rate of Rs. 1-7-0 per annum. The plaintiff's father contested the suit and the suit of the defendants-appellants was dismissed on merits on the 13th January 1908. Thereafter the appellants brought a suit for assessment of rent on the 30th September 1909, being suit No. 1322 of 1909 against the father of the plaintiff and his uncle Anjani Kumar. The appellants claimed assessment at the rate of Rs. 48 in place of their claim in the former suit at the rate of Rs. 1-7-0 per annum. The defendants in that case, namely, the plaintiff's father and his uncle, filed written statements taking pleas similar to those taken in the former suit of 1907, namely, that the land in dispute was the lakheraj of the defendants and that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties. The case after several adjournments was fixed for hearing on the 27th of May 1910, but on the 16th of May 1910 the father of the present plaintiff died and the appellants applied for the substitution of the plaintiff in place of his deceased father and named defendant No. 2, his uncle, as guardian ad litem. The defendant No. 2 was subsequently appointed guardian ad litem of the present plaintiff.

It has been held by the Courts below that no notice was served upon the natural guardian of the minor, viz., his mother, and that the uncle of the plaintiff did not give his consent for his appointment as the plaintiff's guardian ad litem. Ultimately the plaintiff's guardian defaulted and did not prosecute the suit, which was decreed ex parte on the 8th June 1912 in favour of the appellant.

The second decree concerned in this appeal which the plaintiff seeks to set aside was obtained in a suit brought by the appellants against the plaintiff-respondent and his uncle in 1913, being No. 542 of that year. This suit was for recovery of rent for the years in suit from the plaintiff and his uncle on the basis of the aforesaid ex parte decree, dated the 8th June 1912. The uncle was not made guardian in this case, but one Babu Mathura Prasad was appointed guardian ad litem for the plaintiff. The said guardian ad litem filed a written statement in consultation with the mother of the plaintiff impugning the claim of the appellant as false and fraudulent, yet the case of the plaintiff was not prosecuted and the Pleader guardian also made default, the result of which was that the suit was decreed ex parte against the plaintiff and his uncle on the 18th November 1914.

The Courts below have concurrently held that the guardian of the plaintiff in respect of the decree obtained in June 1912 was guilty of fraud and gross negligence and that absolutely no attempt was made by the guardian to defend the action of the appellants against the minor and to protect his interests. The lower Courts have also held that the requirements of Order XXXII, rule 3, clause 4, and rule 4, clause 3, were not complied with in the appointment of the guardian in the case. There is a further finding that the defendants-appellants were guilty of fraud in obtaining the appointment of the guardian and the decree. On the basis of those findings of facts the Courts have concurrently held that the decree obtained by the appellants was tainted with fraud and liable to be set aside.

On behalf of the appellants it has been strenuously contended that the irregularities in the appointment of the natural guardian were not material in this case inasmuch as the family was a joint Mitakshara one in which the uncle of the plaintiff as the karta represented the interest of the minor and was, therefore, properly appointed a guardian by the Court. The contention is obviously without any substance. The guardian of an infant has been expressly named in the Mitakshara to be the parents and that the father has preference over the mother and after the death of the father, the mother is the natural guardian of the infant. The guardianship of an infant is irrespective of whether the family is joint or separate. The learned Vakil for the appellants has not been able to show any direct authority on the point for his contention that the mother in a joint Hindu family is not the natural guardian of the minor. Order XXXII, rule 3, clause 4, requires that the notice for the appointment of a guardian ad litem should be served upon the father "or other natural guardian of the minor," the reason being that the natural guardian is the best person to have a voice in the appointment of the guardian ad litem. Again the first Court held that the minor's father was separate from his uncle. This finding was not upset by the lower Appellate Court. Thus on the finding of the first Court the uncle was not the karta of the minor plaintiff. The mother was the only guardian of the minor. I agree with the view of the Courts below that the rule of the Code of Civil Procedure has been contravened. Again there can be no doubt, and in fact it has not been seriously contested, that Order XXXII, rule 3, clause 4, has not been at all complied with in this case, inasmuch as no consent of the guardian was obtained for his appointment. This provision newly added to the present Code of Civil Procedure is wholesome and is intended to safeguard the interests of the minor by obtaining the actual consent of the guardian ad litem for his appointment and thus ensuring that he has taken upon himself the onerous duty of defending the interests of the minor.

It has then been contended that the aforesaid non compliance with the provisions of the Code amounts only to irregularities which would not vitiate the decree obtained in the case. Reliance has been placed on Waliam v. Banke Bhari Pershad Singh (1), but that authority does not at all help the appellant. In that case it was expressly held that the interests were duly protected and all possible care that a diligent person would take was taken by the guardian and hence the mere irregularities in the appointment of the guardian would not vitiate the proceedings. But where the guardian is guilty of negligence and no attempt has been made by him to protect the interests of the minor, the decree so obtained will not bind the minor. This is reiterated in the recent case of Bhagwan Dayal v. Param Sukh Dass (2). It has to be seen in the circumstances of the present case whether there has been any negligence on the part of the guardian appointed. The decision between the parties in the former litigation, dated the 13th January 1908, referred to in the early part of the judgment, will clearly show that the appellants' claim for rent against the father of the plaintiff was dismissed on contest. That was a good and substantial defence to be put forward in any Court of Justice. The guardian in this case did not attempt to put forward that defence and to place the judgment in that case before the Court but suffered the case to be decreed ex parte against the minor. This is sufficient to show that there was the greatest possible negligence on the part of the guardian ad litem of the minor plaintiff. The appellants are guilty of the procurement of the appointment of such a guardian without any notice to the natural mother as required by law.

The result is that I agree with the view of the Courts below and I hold that the appellants are guilty of fraud and that the guardian is guilty of negligence and that the decree is not binding upon the plaintiff-respondent and is liable to be set aside.

The second decree of 1914 is a decree for rent based upon the fraudulent decree of 1912. The Pleader guardian of the minor plaintiff also did not produce the most valuable evidence afforded by the aforesaid decision of the inter-party case, dated the 13th January 1903. Then the mother of the plaintiff in this case was not at all informed and no notice was served upon her for the appointment of the proposed guardian. Thus the minor's interests in this case also were not protected. This decree, based as it is upon the fraudulent decree of 1912, should also be set aside.

It is next contended by the learned Vakil for the appellants that the entire decrees cannot be set aside and that only the decrees against the minor should be set aside keeping them in fact as against the uncle of the minor, Anjani Kumar, who was also defendant in the aforesaid cases. The liabilities of the defendants under the decrees are indivisible. Therefore, the decrees are not liable to be split up, and if they are set aside as against one of the defendants, they must be set aside as against the other. The principle has been well laid in the case of Bhura Mal v. Har Kishan Dux (3) and later in the case of Judubansa Narain v. Mohunt Hari Charan Bharati (4).

Lastly it is argued on behalf of the appellants that the suits should be revived and tried de novo on the plaintiff's guardian ad litem having been properly appointed. I am unable to accept this contention. There is no provision in the Code of Civil Procedure for such a procedure. The decrees in question are set aside as having been tainted with fraud and gross negligence of the guardian. The analogy of Order IX, rule 13, of the Code of Civil Procedure and the other cognate rules in that Chapter does not apply when a decree is set aside in a regular suit on the ground of fraud. The applications for the setting aside of ex parte decrees and for the restoration of suits dismissed for default are made in the same Court and give rise only to miscellaneous proceedings in the same suit. The setting aside of an ex parte decree or of the order dismissing a suit for default naturally revives the original suit. Such cannot be the result when a final decree is set aside on the ground of fraud or gross negligence by means of a separate and independent suit.

The result is that all the contentions of the learned Vakil for the appellants fail and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Muhammadian Law—Pre-emption—Ceremonies, performance of, time of.

To create a right of pre-emption it is necessary that the Muhammadian ceremonies be performed immediately upon hearing of the sale. The date of performance is not an equitable question, so that ceremonies performed not immediately upon hearing of the sale but within a reasonable time are not good ceremonies and do not create a right of pre-emption [p. 256, col. 2.]

In a pre-emption suit the plaintiff stated that though the sale took place on the 10th of June, he heard of it only on the 8th of August, and forthwith performed the necessary ceremonies. It was found as a matter of fact that the plaintiff heard of the sale in July of the year, and then performed the ceremonies after being advised by a Pleader to do so:

Held, that the ceremonies were performed too late to create a right of pre-emption.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Godda, dated the 8th April 1915.

Mr. Naresh Chandra Sinha, for the Appellants.

Mr. Atul Krishna Ray, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

ROE, J.—This appeal arises from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Godda dismissing the plaintiffs' claim to pre-empt the property in suit. The plaintiffs are co-sharers to the extent of two-thirds of this property, the remaining one-third has been sold to the defendants. The sale is dated the 10th June 1913.

The plaintiffs' case is that they heard first of the sale on the 8th August 1913 and forthwith performed the necessary Muhammadan ceremonies by crying aloud in the presence of witnesses that they were the buyers of the property and by going to the spot and inviting the attention of the vendors to the fact that they claimed pre-emption.

There are three main issues before us:—Firstly, whether the law of pre-emption prevails in the Sontal Parganas at all among Hindus;

Secondly.—Whether the plaintiffs made any claim to pre-empt on the 8th August; and Thirdly.—Whether the 8th of August was as they state the date on which they first heard of the sale.

I do not think it necessary to go into the first and second questions, for the reason that it is patent on the record that the 8th of August was not the date on which the plaintiffs heard that the property had been sold to the defendants. It is proved beyond possible doubt that the defendants entered into possession of the property in June. It is idle to suppose that the plaintiffs would not have received information of this entry into possession earlier than August. Moreover, the plaintiffs themselves betray their case in the most disingenuous way. They were asked from whom they got the information as to the manner in which the tulab i mowasibat should be performed and said "about two or three days before performing the ceremony, we sent a man to Bhagalpore and he there found out about the ceremony from a Pleader at Bhagalpore." The inference is obvious that they heard of these sales sometime in July, if not earlier, and sent a man into Bhagalpore for advice as to what to do in the matter, and received the advice that they should go through the ceremonies necessary to pre-emption; they proceeded to go through those ceremonies at the earliest possible opportunity, after the return of their messenger from Bhagalpore. In my view that date was too late for the performance of the ceremonies. Mr. Naresh Chandra Sinha suggests that the date of the performance is an equitable question only and that if the ceremonies are performed within a reasonable time, they are good ceremonies and should create a right of pre-emption. With that point of view I am not in agreement at all. A right to pre-emption is based entirely upon the Muhammadan law. It has been accepted by Hindus in certain districts in consequence of their close contact with Muhammadans in those districts. To create a right of pre-emption it is necessary that the Muhammadan ceremonies be performed immediately upon hearing of the sale.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

CHAPMAN, J.—I agree.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 247, 403—Acquittal of accused on default of prosecution—Fresh complaint, whether barred—Autrefois acquit, plea of, when available.

A judgment of acquittal following on complainant's default of prosecution under section 247, Criminal Procedure Code, does not entitle the person acquitted to plead autrefois acquit on a fresh prosecution on the same facts and section 403 does not operate as a bar to the Court taking cognizance of a second complaint. [p. 257, col. 2]

The word "tried" in the early part of section 403 (1) should not be treated as surplusage, and the section does not apply to a case where even the particulars of the offence were not stated to the accused under section 242. [p. 257, col. 2]

Case referred for the orders of the High Court, under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, by the District Magistrate, Kistna, in his letter, dated the 30th November 1916.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The complainant in this case, K. Venkayya, presented a complaint to the Taluk Magistrate, Nandigama, on 8th August 1916 against accused B. Kottayya and others, charging them with an offence under section 426, Indian Penal Code. The case was duly taken on file and posted for hearing, and eventually adjourned to 20th September 1916; on which date, in consequence of the absence of complainant, an order of acquittal was passed under section 247, Criminal Procedure Code.

Subsequently on 22nd September 1916, complainant presented a fresh complaint of the same offence based on the same facts and explained his absence on 20th September 1916 to the satisfaction of the Magistrate. The Magistrate thereupon took cognizance of this second complaint and directed the issue of process to the accused.

The sole question is whether section 403, Criminal Procedure Code, is a bar to the Magistrate's taking cognizance of the second complaint by reason of the order of acquittal passed on 20th September 1916.

In our opinion it is not. Section 403 only bars the re-trial of a person, who has once been tried and convicted or acquitted, and in this case, it does not appear that the accused were tried on the first complaint. The trial of a summons case cannot be said to begin until the particulars of the offence are stated to the accused under section 242, Criminal Procedure Code, and there is nothing in the record to indicate that this was done. In fact, from the Magistrate's explanation it may be safely inferred that it was not. No trial having even commenced on the first complaint, section 403 does not bar the Court from taking cognizance of the second complaint.

Our attention has been drawn to the ruling in Guggilapu Peddappa, In re (1) in which a different view of section 403 has been taken; but with all respect, we feel unable to concur in the reasoning of the learned Judge who decided that case. In our opinion some meaning must be attached to the word "tried" in the early part of section 403 (1). It should not be treated as mere surplusage, as the learned Judge would seem to do. It would have been quite simple to word the section thus:

(1) "A person who has once been convicted or acquitted by a Court of competent jurisdiction of an offence shall, while such conviction or acquittal remains in force, not be liable to be tried again for the same offence, nor on the same facts for any other offence, for which a different charge from the one made against him might have been made under section 236, or for which he might have been convicted under section 237."

This would clearly include an acquittal under section 247 at the very outset before anything had been done in the case. But since the word "tried" has been inserted, we must give it due weight. We are unable to see that this construction renders the provisions of section 247 nugatory or that any inference can be drawn from the omission to refer to section 247 in the explanation to section 403. None of the three Calcutta cases quoted in Guggilam Peddya, In re (1) appear to us to be in point. In Punchu Singh v. Umor Mahomed Sheikh (2) the Court simply deals with the power of the District Magistrate to direct further enquiry under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code, and the effect of section 403 is not considered at all. Bishun Das Ghosh v. King-Emperor (3) deals with exactly the same point and the order in the first proceedings was one under section 258, not section 247. The judgment in the last case of Kedar Nath Biswas v. Adhin Manji (4) simply follows the two previous rulings and deals also with an order under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code. Assuming that it is not within the power of a District Magistrate or Sessions Judge to direct a Magistrate to make further enquiry into a case which has been acquitted under section 247, Criminal Procedure Code, it does not follow that the Magistrate may not himself entertain a fresh complaint on the same facts. He is only debarred from doing so by section 403, which is not even referred to in any of these rulings.

(1) 9 Ind. Cas. 253; 9 M. L. T. 93; 12 Cr. L. J. 41; 34 M. 253.

ELAHI BAKSHA V. EMPEROR.

The case relied on by the District Magistrate in his Order of Reference, Suraiya Sastri v. Venkata Rao (5), is easily distinguishable. The accused in that case not only appeared, but "answered to the charge."

Another good reason for declining to treat the word "tried" as mere surplusage is, that it is essential to a plea of autrefois acquit under English Law. The law is stated in Russell on Crimes at page 1983 of the 7th Edition: "At common law a man who has once been tried and acquitted for a crime may not be tried again for the same offence if he was in jeopardy upon the first trial. He was so in jeopardy if (1) the Court was competent to try him for the offence, (2) the trial was upon a good indictment, (3) the acquittal was on merits, that is, by verdict on the trial or in summary cases by dismissal on the merits followed by a judgment or order of acquittal". It is clear that the mere fact of a judgment of acquittal is not in England sufficient to entitle the person acquitted to plead autrefois acquit. The matter was exhaustively considered by the Court of King's Bench and the law was laid down as follows by the Lord Chief Justice: "The true meaning of this great fundamental maxim is that a man shall not twice be put in peril after a verdict has been returned by the Jury, that verdict having been given on a good indictment and one on which the prisoner could be legally convicted and sentenced. It does not, however, follow that if from any particular circumstance a trial has proved abortive, that the case should not again be submitted to the consideration of a Jury and determined as right and justice may require". The law being so clear in England and its requirements having been reproduced in the Indian law, we are satisfied that we cannot eliminate the word "tried" from the section. The accused has not been tried and the Magistrate acted in accordance with law in taking the complaint on his file. The papers will be returned.

The provision in Order XVIII, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code, requiring a deposition to be read over to the witness is in its nature directory; non-compliance with it does not make the deposition entirely inadmissible in evidence (even in a prosecution for perjury in respect of the deposition) and the deposition can be proved in some way other than by calling in aid the provisions of section 80 of the Evidence Act. Appeal against the conviction and sentence passed by the Additional Sessions Judge, Dacca, dated the 26th September 1917.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal and Upendra Lal Roy, for the Appellant

Mr. Monnier, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—The appellant was tried before the Additional Sessions Judge of Dacca and a Jury on charges of abetment of forgery and abetment of the use of forged documents framed under sections 467 and 471, Indian Penal Code, read in each case with section 109 of the same Code. The Jury returned a unanimous verdict of guilty on both the charges and the learned Sessions Judge accepted the verdict and sentenced the appellant for each offence to six years' rigorous imprisonment, directing, however, that the sentences should run concurrently. The charges relate to a series of seven bonds. The case for the prosecution is that these seven bonds were forged by or with the connivance of one Sridam in order to take the place of seven genuine bonds. It appears that Sridam and his brothers had borrowed money from Nakari Gope, the father of Mohim Chandra Gope, the complainant in the present case. It is alleged that on the 3rd Aswin 1316 (September 1909) Sridam executed seven bonds in favour of Nakari, on which Nakari's son Mohim, Nakari himself having in the meantime died, instituted a suit on the 15th August 1913. The suit was against Sridam and his brothers. On the 18th November 1913 the latter filed their written statement and with it they filed the bonds which are alleged to be forged. The endorsements on the back of those bonds, purporting to show that the bonds were satisfied by payment on the 31st Chaitra 1319, are also said to be forgeries. Mohim's suit was tried by the Munsif, who found that the bonds produced by the plaintiff were genuine and that the bonds produced by the defendants with the endorsements were forged. After that decision Mohim presented an application for leave to prosecute Sridam and his brothers for forgery and other offences. The learned Munsif who tried the suit refused to grant the sanction. Mohim then moved the District Judge who, under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, directed that Sridam and his brother should be prosecuted for certain offences including forgery. A motion against that order was made to the High Court, but the Court refused to entertain it. Then followed further proceedings, the result of which was that Sridam and his brothers were tried for forgery and that Sridam was convicted of the offence. The order of the District Judge under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, also directed the prosecution of the present appellant Elahi Baksha Kazi. The latter was tried for perjury and was acquitted of that offence. He was then placed on his trial on the charges of which he has now been convicted.

The learned Pleader for the appellant has contended before us that the trial in the Court below is vitiated by the reception of evidence which is not admissible under the law. The contention relates to the deposition of the appellant in the suit brought by Mohim, and the point taken is that the formalities required by rules 5 and 6 of Order XVIII, Civil Procedure Code, were not observed. It is not disputed that the evidence was given on oath. But it is said that after the deposition had been written down by the Munsif, it was not read over to the witness as rule 5 requires or at any rate that it was not read to the witness in the presence of the Judge. Upon that it is argued that the deposition is not legally a deposition at all and that the Judge was wrong in allowing it to go to the Jury. In support of the contention reference is made to the cases of Mayadeb Gossami, In the matter of the petition of (1) and Kamatchinathan Chetty v. King-Emperor (2). If as a matter of fact the appellant's deposition was not interpreted and read over to him in the prescribed manner, the cases cited support the contention advanced, unless the rule laid down is to be confined, as it seems to have been in the past, to prosecutions for perjury. Our attention, however, has also been drawn to the case of Bogra, In re (3), where a different note, and as it seems to me, the true note is struck. The cases of Muyadeb Gossami, In the matter of the petition of (1) and Kamatchinathan Chetty v. King-Emperor (2) have been followed in other cases, for instance, Emperor v. Jogendra Nath Ghose (4). Speaking for myself, however, with great respect I am not sure that I clearly understand the principle of those decisions. Under section 80 of the Indian Evidence Act the deposition of a witness taken in accordance with law and purporting to be signed by a Judge or Magistrate proves itself. No other proof is required than the production of the deposition. I should have thought that a provision requiring a deposition to be read over to a witness was in its nature directory, and that if it were not complied with in a particular case, the deposition, while it might perhaps lose the benefit of section 80 of the Evidence Act, might still be proved in some other way. No doubt section 91 of the same Act says that in all cases in which any matter is required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, no evidence shall be given in proof of such matter except the document itself. But even if a deposition comes within that enactment, no question arises of proving the contents of a deposition except by the production of the deposition itself. The question is how is the deposition to be proved. There is no provision in the Code of Civil Procedure which expressly precludes a deposition from being received in evidence unless it has been read over to the witness in the presence of the Judge. In the case of a document which requires registration but is not registered, it is inadmissible in evidence not by reason of the provisions of section 91 of the Evidence Act, but by reason of the express provisions on the subject contained in the Registration Act. As at present advised I can see no reason why even in a prosecution for perjury failure to comply with the provisions of rules 5 and 6 of Order XVIII should render a deposition entirely inadmissible in evidence, or why, if section 80 cannot be called in aid, the deposition should not be proved, for instance, by the Judge who took it down or by the admission of the deponent. If it can be proved in some such way, section 91 will have no application. But it is not necessary to determine this question in the present case, because the learned Pleader for the appellant has not been able to satisfy me on the record as it stands that the deposition of the appellant was not in fact read over to him as the Code requires. The Munsif was put in the witness-box for the prosecution. The Pleader for Sridam's brother was also examined. Neither was asked in cross-examination whether the appellant's deposition was read over to him after it had been recorded by the Code. The deposition bears the signature of the Munsif. It also bears the signature in Bangali of the appellant. The presence of the appellant's signature at the end of the deposition certainly supports the inference that the document was read over to him. There is nothing in the record to show that this was not done. The signature was presumably affixed in token that the deposition had been correctly recorded. No doubt the words which sometimes appear at the end of a deposition "read over and admitted to be correct" do not appear in the present case before the appellant's signature. But the Code does not require that those words should be inserted. From my experience of the practice of the Courts below I may be more disposed to doubt whether the reading over of the deposition took place in the presence of the Munsif. But it still remains that there is no suggestion in the evidence that the law was not complied with. In my opinion, as the record stands, there is no ground for the contention that this deposition was not admissible in evidence. The point, I may add, was not taken in the Sessions Court.

As to the substance of the matter, there is no shadow of a suggestion that the appellant did not say what he is recorded as having said. The objection taken to the trial is an entirely technical one, and it is conceded that apart from this technical objection, the propriety of the appellant's conviction cannot be contested. In view of the charge of the learned Sessions Judge there appears to be no doubt and in fact no dispute that the appellant was the writer of the documents which have since been found to be forged documents and if his deposition was, as I hold, properly received in evidence, the Jury had ample grounds for finding that the part which he took was a fraudulent and dishonest part.

The learned Pleader for the appellant has asked us to use our powers under section 428, Criminal Procedure Code, and to examine or to direct the examination of the Peshkar of the Munsif's Court at the time when the appellant's deposition was recorded in the civil suit. In support of that application the learned Pleader has filed a copy of the deposition given by the Peshkar in the course of the trial for perjury. I have read that deposition and come to the conclusion that no useful purpose would be served by directing additional evidence to be taken at this late stage.

In the result, I would affirm the conviction. As regards sentence I think that four years' rigorous imprisonment would sufficiently meet the ends of justice. I would, therefore, reduce the sentence from six years to four years' rigorous imprisonment under each charge and maintain the order that the sentences are to run concurrently. With this modification, the appeal should be dismissed.

BEACHROFF, J.—I agree. I have always felt doubt as to the correctness of the decision in the case of Mayadeb Gossami, In the matter of the petition of (1) and take this opportunity of endorsing the opinion expressed by my learned brother on the point decided in that and other similar cases.

Section 91 of the Evidence Act is based on the principle that the only proper evidence of the contents of a document is the document itself. And the object of the provision in Order XVIII, rule 5, Code of Civil Procedure, requiring a deposition to be read over to a witness is to ensure accuracy. I confess I do not see why on principle a Court should be precluded from ascertaining what is in a document, from the document itself, merely because the contents of the document may not in fact be correct. Failure to take the necessary precautions to ensure accuracy may create doubts as to whether the record correctly represents what the witness said, but, in my opinion, it cannot affect the admissibility of the document in evidence if the making of the document is otherwise proved.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.
CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 85 of 1917.
CASE REFERRED No. 9 of 1917.
May 4, 1917.

Present:—Sir John Wallis, Kt., Chief Justice.

In re DUDEKULA LAL SAHIB—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 247, 403, 494—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1840), ss. 341, 447—Withdrawal from prosecution before service of summons, effect of—Acquittal of accused, whether operates as bar to further proceedings—Autrefois acquit, plea of.

The statutory acquittal under section 494 of the Criminal Procedure Code in a summons-case operates as a bar to further proceedings on the same facts. [p. 266, col. 2.]

The provisions of section 403 clearly imply that every order of acquittal, so long as it is in force, is a bar to further proceedings except in the circumstances specified in the section itself, and the words in sub-section (1) do not affect an order of acquittal under section 494 or section 247 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 262, col. 2; p. 263, col. 2.]

The Police filed a charge-sheet under section 417 of the Penal Code against a person before a Magistrate with second class powers, whereupon a summons was issued but before it was served the Public Prosecutor, with the consent of the Court, withdrew from the prosecution under section 494 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the accused was acquitted as required by that section. Thereafter the person on whose field the offence of criminal trespass was alleged to have been committed, preferred upon the same facts a complaint charging the accused with offences under sections 143, 447 and 341 of the Penal Code. The accused was convicted and sentenced separately for each of the offences:

Held, (Napier, J. dissenting) that the previous order of acquittal operated as a bar to further proceedings and that the conviction was, therefore, bad in law and must be set aside [p. 266, col. 2; p. 267, col. 1.]

Per Napier, J.—Section 403 of the Criminal Procedure Code is intended to reproduce what is the law in England, namely, the plea of autrefois acquit, but in order to plead autrefois acquit successfully in India, the accused must have been put in peril either before the Jury or the Magistrate. [p. 265, col. 1.]

DUDEKULA LAL SARIE, In re.

Case referred for the orders of the High Court, under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, by the District Magistrate, Guntur, in his letter, dated the 20th January 1917.

This case coming on for hearing on the 20th March 1917 after service of notice on the accused and Counsel not appearing on his behalf, upon perusing the letter of reference and the records submitted therewith, and upon hearing the arguments of the Public Prosecutor on behalf of the Crown, and the case having stood over for consideration till the 17th April 1917, the Court (Abdur Rahim and Napier, JJ.) made the following

ORDER.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The question of law which we are asked to consider in the letter of reference arose under the following circumstances:—The Police had filed a charge-sheet under section 447 of the Indian Penal Code against a certain person before a Magistrate with second class powers; a summons was issued, but before it was served the Public Prosecutor with the consent of the Court withdrew from the prosecution under section 494, Criminal Procedure Code, and the accused was then acquitted as required by that section. Thereafter the person on whose field the offence of criminal trespass was alleged to have been committed, preferred upon the same facts a complaint charging the accused with offences under sections 143, 447 and 341 of the Indian Penal Code. That case was tried and the accused convicted and sentenced separately for each of the offences. The convictions were on appeal confirmed but the sentences reduced. The District Magistrate under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code has asked us to revise the conviction and sentence under section 447, on the ground that the acquittal under section 494 in this case, where no charge was required to be framed, operated as a bar to further trial for the same offence.

The effect of an order under section 494 in a summons case does not appear to have been the subject of any decision so far as the present question is concerned. I had, however, sitting singly to consider the effect of an acquittal under section 247 in a case of Guggilapu Peddaya; In re (1) and held that it operated as a bar to further proceedings for the same offence so long as the order remained in force. But a Divisional Bench consisting of my learned brother and Ayling, J. have in a recent case, Criminal Revision Case No. 866 of 1916 [Bezawada Kotayya v. Konathalapalli Venkayya (2)] held otherwise. It seems to me that no distinction can be drawn between an acquittal under section 247 and one under section 494 for the purposes of the present question; and I need hardly say that in deference to the views expressed by Ayling and Napier, JJ., I have carefully reconsidered the matter. But even a more detailed examination of section 403 and the other provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code and of the authorities has only confirmed me in my former opinion.

The question turns on the construction of section 403. Its sub-section (1) says that "a person who has once been tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction for an offence and convicted or acquitted" is not liable to be tried again for the same offence, while sub-sections (2) and (4)—sub-section (3) does not throw much light on the question as all convictions must be after trial, in dealing with certain cases where the previous acquittal or conviction would not bar further trial, speak of 'a person acquitted or convicted of any offence,' dropping the words 'who has once been tried.' It can hardly be doubted that by the words "a person who has once been tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction for an offence and 'convicted,' in sub-section (1) and "a person 'acquitted' or 'convicted' of any offence" in sub-sections (2) and (4) the Legislature contemplated the same set of facts. Now, what is the sense in which the Legislature has used the two phrases? In the first place, it must be taken to be a clear implication of sub-sections (2) and (4) that in cases other than those mentioned therein, the provisions of sub-section (1) should apply and the person who has been 'acquitted' or 'convicted' should not be tried again. Then the explanation to the section is important in ascertaining what is intended by sub-section (1). It mentions the orders which are not to be regarded as acquittals for 'purposes of the section' and this can have little signification, if all orders of acquittal passed in accordance with the express provisions of the Code were not intended to have the effect defined by the section, viz., the barring of further proceedings. There is no attempt made to discriminate between different orders of acquittal.

(2) 45 Ind. Cas. 257; 40 M. 977 (Foot Note.)

An examination of the other provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code shows at once the solicitude evinced by the Legislature on the question of the form of orders which the various Criminal Tribunals are to pass in different kinds of proceedings in given circumstances, with a view mainly to indicate their respective effects and to provide suitable remedies in case of wrong orders of each category. The list of the orders terminating proceedings given in the explanation seems to be exhaustive and of these the main classes are orders of 'discharge' and 'acquittal.'

In summons-cases the proceedings against an accused person commence with the issue of process (Chapter XVII) on the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence in one of the ways mentioned in the previous chapters. But if in a case of 'complaint' he refused to take cognizance, his order would be one dismissing the complaint (section 203). If the Magistrate took cognizance and issued process, the proceedings are to be terminated by an order either of 'acquittal' or 'conviction' (section 245), unless the proceedings are stopped under section 249. The order of 'acquittal' is to be passed if after hearing the evidence the Magistrate finds the accused not guilty (section 245), or if the complainant does not appear (section 247), or upon withdrawal of the complaint by the complainant (section 248), or upon the Public Prosecutor withdrawing from the prosecution (section 494).

In warrant-cases tried by a Magistrate the accused is to be 'discharged' where no case is made out and so no charge need be drawn (section 253) or the Public Prosecutor withdraws from the prosecution before a charge is framed (section 494); he is to be 'acquitted' if the Magistrate finds him not guilty after a charge has been drawn (section 258) or the Public Prosecutor withdraws from prosecution (section 494, after the framing of the charge. Similarly also in sessions cases the Legislature has carefully provided when an order terminating proceedings is to have the effect of a 'discharge' and when it will operate as an 'acquittal' (see sections 209, 213, 305, 307, 333 and 494). Then we find that express provisions are made for the setting aside of orders of discharge (see sections 436, 437, 438 and 439) and of acquittal either under section 417 or under the general powers of revision of the High Court (section 439). All this leaves no room for doubt that the Legislature intended that a person once 'acquitted' shall not be liable to be prosecuted for the same offence so long as the acquittal is not set aside by the High Court. Even in cases of discharge it has been ruled that no fresh proceedings can be had with respect to the same matter unless the order has been first set aside as provided for in the Criminal Procedure Code. It is suggested in the judgment of Ayling and Napier, JJ., in Criminal Revision Case No. 866 of 1916 [Bezwaia Kotayya v. Konathalapalli Venkayya (2)] that it does not follow from their construction of section 403 that an order of acquittal when there has been no decision on the merits, such as for instance an acquittal under section 247, would be nugatory, but, so far as I can find, they do not point out, nor can I see for myself, what other effect it can have if it is to be no bar to further proceedings for the same offence.

Not only do the provisions of section 403 itself clearly imply that every order of acquittal so long as it is in force is a bar to further proceedings except in the circumstances specified in the section itself, but I do not think that the words of sub-section (1) necessarily deny that effect to an order of acquittal under section 494 or section 247. In summons-cases the 'trial' commences as soon as the Magistrate has taken cognizance of the matter and issued process. The mere fact that Chapter XX is headed 'of the trial of summons-cases by Magistrates' and section 242 lays down that the first thing that a Magistrate has to do when the accused appears or is brought before him is to ask him to show cause why he should not be convicted, does not indicate that the 'trial' did not commence at an earlier stage within the meaning of the Code. In fact Chapter XVII shows that the proceedings before the Magistrate commence with the issue of process, and that the draftsman did not think of distinguishing between 'commencement of proceedings' and 'commencement of trial,' will be apparent from the way both the phrases are used in the marginal notes of section 271 and in the heading. The word 'tried' or 'trial' has not been defined anywhere. If the trial of a summons-case commences as soon as the process is issued, is there any good reason for saying that an order of acquittal would not come within the meaning of sub-section (1) of section 403, unless it was passed at a particular stage? It seems to be conceded that if the accused on being questioned under section 242 denied that he committed the offence and he is acquitted, then sub-section (1) of section 403 would apply. But such an order may be made without any decision on the merits, on the ground of absence of the complainant (section 247) or withdrawal from prosecution (section 243 or section 494). It would follow, therefore, that section 403, sub-section (1), does not require that there should have been a finding on evidence that the accused is not guilty, and if it is not correct to say that in summons-cases proceedings commence only after the accused has been questioned under section 242, it seems to me that the only possible meaning we can give to the words "who has once been tried" is 'against whom proceedings have been commenced in Court, i. e., against whom the Court has taken cognizance of an offence and issued process.' On comparing sub-section (1) with the sub-sections (2) and (4) it is clear that the draftsman intended to assign the same scope to the phrase in question in sub-section (1) as to the phrase 'a person convicted or acquitted' in sub-sections (2) and (4) so far as this matter is concerned, though it was not a happy idea of his to use different expressions to signify the same thing. I think that if we are not to frustrate the clear intentions of the Legislature we must not construe the words 'who has once been tried' in subsection (1) in any sense other than what I have suggested.

The decided cases, so far as they go, support the view of the law which I expressed in Guggilapu Peddarya, In the matter of (1). One important case which was not then brought to my notice is reported as Suraiya Sastri v. Venkata Rao (3). There it was held by Kernan and Wilkinson, JJ., that a second charge for the same offence against an accused person, who was erroneously "discharged," but who ought to have been "acquitted" on withdrawal by the Public Prosecutor from the prosecution under section 454, Criminal Procedure Code, at the Court of Session, was bad. If a narrow meaning were to be given to the word "tried" in section 403, it could not be said that the 'trial' had commenced at the date of withdrawal, because up to commitment the proceedings are described in the Criminal Procedure Code as "enquiry" and the word "trial" is used only in connection with proceedings after commitment. The Public Prosecutor withdrew from the prosecution before any charge was framed in the Sessions Court, according to the practice then obtaining. This makes it clear that the charge framed by the Committing Magistrate could not have been read to the accused and he could not have answered to any charge in the Sessions Court, when the Public Prosecutor withdrew on the ground that the sanction on which the prosecution was based was bad. The ruling in Suraiya Sastri v. Venkata Rao (3) related to a summons case and it was held there that since the accused had appeared and answered to the charge, apparently meaning that he had been questioned under section 242, Criminal Procedure Code, he had been "tried" within the meaning of section 403, but it was not laid down that if he had not appeared and been questioned, section 403 would not apply. In Panchu Singh v. Umor Mahomed Sheikh (4) an order of "dismissal" in a summons-case under section 247, Criminal Procedure Code, with respect to the case of an accused person who did not appear, was treated as a bar to the revival of the charge, against him. The two cases in Bishun Das Ghosh v. King-Emperor (5), Kedar Nath Biswas v. Adhin Manji (6), it may be said, do not specifically deal with the question under consideration, because it is not stated that the fresh proceedings were quashed on the ground that section 403, Criminal Procedure Code, applied. The ground of the decisions, however, was that the acquittal of persons other than petitioners on the same allegations had not been set aside in accordance with the law.

I do not propose to discuss the provisions of English Law relating to "autrefois acquit", as the system of Criminal Procedure in this country is obviously so different from that of England that to draw any sort of inference from the state of law on the subject in England, where no such clear distinctions exist between different kinds of orders terminating proceedings and which does not provide similar measures for rectifying wrong orders of acquittal and discharge, would to my mind be only misleading.

I, therefore, agree with the District Magistrate that the conviction and sentence under section 447 of the Indian Penal Code are bad in law and should be set aside.

My learned brother holds a different view of the law. The paper will, therefore, be placed before his Lordship the Chief Justice for such orders as to the disposal of the case as he may think fit to pass. I may mention that as the question involved is one of importance, it is desirable, in my opinion, that it should be decided by a Full Bench.

NAPIER, J.—I adhere to the opinion expressed by me in Criminal Revision Case No. 866 of 1916 [Bzwada Kotayya v. Konathalapalli Venkoyya (2)] that it is impossible to treat the words "once been tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction" in section 403, Criminal Procedure Code, as surplusage, or to apply the word 'tried' to a case where a man has not even been served with the summons. I have no doubt that the section is intended to reproduce what is undoubtedly the law in England, namely, that to plead autrefois acquit successfully the accused must have been put in peril either before the Jury or the Magistrate.

As my learned brother takes a different view the case should, I think, go before a third Judge under sections 439 and 429 of the Criminal Procedure Code but, as my learned brother thinks otherwise, the matter will be laid before the Chief Justice for orders.

This case coming on for hearing on the 1st May 1917 under sections 439 and 429 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and Counsel not appearing on behalf of the accused, upon perusing the letter of reference and the records submitted therewith, and upon hearing the arguments of the Public Prosecutor on behalf of the Crown, and the case having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court made the following ORDER.—Two learned Judges having differed in a criminal revision case, section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure read with section 429 requires the case to be decided by a third Judge and precludes any further appeal under the Letters Patent or any reference to a Full Bench under the Rules of the Court.

With reference to this case I have arrived at the same conclusion as Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim.

If sections 403 and 494 of the Code of Criminal Procedure had been originally enacted at one and the same time, I should find it very difficult to come to that conclusion. But seeing that the Code of Criminal Procedure, which is founded on the English Law of Criminal Procedure, has been repeatedly modified in the successive Codes of 1861, 1872, 1882 and 1898, when an apparent conflict arises between what would appear to be the intention of the Legislature in one section and what would appear to be its intention in another section, the best method of ascertaining what the intention of the Legislature really is appears to me to be to examine what is the English rule upon the subject and how far that rule has been adopted and what modifications have been subsequently introduced in the successive Codes.

Now in English Law a plea of autrefois acquit or convict can only be raised in bar of subsequent proceedings when the conviction or acquittal has been for the same offence in a trial had before a Court of competent jurisdiction. The Attorney-General at any stage of a criminal prosecution may enter "a nolle prosequi" and bring the proceedings to an end. But that does not bar fresh proceedings against the accused. Consequently in England when the prosecution desire not to go on with the case, the practice is not to tender further evidence and for the Judge then to direct the Jury to acquit. That rule of English Law was embodied in the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1861 in section 55 as follows: "A person who has once been tried for an offence and convicted or acquitted of such offence shall not be liable to be tried again for the same offence,"—words which with certain explanations are still retained in section 403 of the present Code. Under that Code Public Prosecutors were directed by the Calcutta Court not to withdraw the graver charge and proceed upon the lesser charge, because such a course would have the effect of depriving the accused of the benefit of acquittal on the graver charge (5 Sutherland's Criminal Letters 41). Then came the Code of 1872, section 61: "A Public Prosecutor may, with the consent of the Court, withdraw any charge against any person in any case of which he is in charge; and upon such withdrawal, if it is made whilst the case is under inquiry, the accused person shall be discharged. If it is made when he is under trial, the accused person shall be acquitted." This was an entirely new departure, because it entitled the accused to an acquittal by Statute on the withdrawal by the Public Prosecutor and without any reference to the evidence at the trial. It has never been doubted that when the Public Prosecutor withdraws under this section and the accused is acquitted, he cannot be subsequently charged for the same offence. Yet, it seems difficult to bring such an acquittal within the language of section 460 of that Code (now section 403) and say that he is a person who has been "tried" for an offence and convicted or acquitted. Supposing the Public Prosecutor to intervene immediately after the case is taken up by the Sessions Judge and to withdraw and the accused then to be acquitted, I find great difficulty in saying that the accused has been "tried" and acquitted within the meaning of section 403 of the present Code. It seems to me that in section 61 of the Act of 1872 the Legislature introduced a fresh form of statutory acquittal under that section, which was intended to have the same operation as an acquittal in accordance with the English rule under section 460 (now section 403).

(5) 7 C. W. N. 493.

DUDEKULA LAL SAHIB, In re.

So much for the Code of 1872. It was only in the Code of 1882 that the alteration was made which has given rise to the present case. Section 494, dealing with the withdrawal by the Public Prosecutor, provided that "if the withdrawal is made after a charge has been framed, or when under this Code no charge is required, he shall be acquitted."

The reference in the latter part was clearly to summons-cases which deal with more trivial offences, and it seems to me the intention of the Legislature was that the withdrawal by the Public Prosecutor at any stage in those trivial cases was to have the same effect as his withdrawal under the previous part of that section, that is to say, that there was to be a final bar of fresh proceeding.

A similar change was introduced as regards this class of cases into what is now section 247 of the Code, as regards non appearance of the complainant in a summons-case.

In the Code up to that time such failure to appear by the complainant had merely led to a dismissal of the complaint. But in 1882 to make the law more stringent it was provided, as it still is, that on the non-appearance of the complainant the Magistrate might acquit the accused unless he chose to adjourn. Here, again, I think that the intention of the Legislature was that the acquittal should operate as a final bar of further proceedings. The history of the legislation shows, to my mind, a distinction between what I may call the common law plea of autrefois acquit as embodied in section 403 of the Code, and the statutory acquittals which have been introduced in sections 494, 247 and 345.

It has not been suggested in this case that the withdrawal from the prosecution by the Public Prosecutor was irregular, and in these circumstances I agree with the conclusion

—Confession—Certificate as to voluntary confession, omission of, effect of—Admissibility of confession.

Where a Magistrate in recording a confession refuses to make the memorandum referred to in section 164 (3), Criminal Procedure Code, on the ground that in his opinion the confession has not been voluntarily made, such confession cannot form part of any judicial record and is, therefore, inadmissible in evidence. Emperor v. Kadar Ghulam Mahmud, 8 Bom. L. R. 950; 5 Cr. L. J. 4, followed.

Appeal against the order of the Sessions Judge, Gonda, dated the 7th September 1917.

FACTS of the case appear from the following order, dated the 8th November 1917, and the Order of Reference, dated the 21st December 1917, passed by Lindsay, J. C.:—

"The appellant in this case is Ram Sudh, a Lonia who has been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Gonda on a charge of having murdered his wife. The principal piece of evidence against the accused is a confession recorded by a Magistrate on the 11th of July. The record of his confession is a long one, and it appears that after the statement was made the Magistrate put a number of questions to the accused before he closed the making of the record of his statement. Under law a certificate is required to be attached to a statement made in these circumstances, and the Magistrate has appended a certificate in which he expresses his opinion that the confession made by the accused was not a voluntary confession. A question of law, therefore, arose before the learned Judge for disposal. His view was that he was not bound by this expression of the Magistrate's opinion and for a variety of reasons which I shall have to consider later on, the Judge came to the conclusion that the statement made by the prisoner was admissible; and he has relied upon it for the purpose of convicting the accused. While I am disposed to agree with the learned Judge's view that the opinion expressed by a Magistrate after taking the statement of confession made by an accused man is not conclusive upon the Court, nevertheless it has to be conceded that the opinion is a matter which has to be carefully weighed when dealing with the question whether the statement should be availed of for the purpose of convicting the accused. In cases where there has been an omission to furnish the certificate required by the section, the practice is to call the Magistrate and examine him as a witness; and similarly I think in a case like this if the learned Judge had reasons to doubt the soundness of the opinion which the Magistrate had expressed, he ought to have sent for the Magistrate and examined him as a witness. I think, before I dispose of this appeal, my proper course is under section 428, Criminal Procedure Code, to send the case back to the learned Judge with directions to take the statement of the Magistrate touching the grounds of the opinion he has expressed in the certificate attached to the record of confession. The evidence, after it has been taken, will be submitted to this Court along with the record. The evidence, of course, will be taken in the presence of the accused. Let the case be put up again as soon as the evidence has been certified to this Court." (8th November 1917.)

"I think it desirable that this appeal should be referred for disposal to a Bench of two Judges. It is the appeal of a man named Ram Sudh, who was convicted in the Court of the Sessions Judge of Gonda on a charge of murder and sentenced to transportation for life. The case was up before me on the 8th of November last and it appeared at that time that the learned Judge had relied upon a confession made by Ram Sudh for the purpose of finding him guilty. This confessional statement had been recorded by a Magistrate who, after it had been taken down, put a certificate at the bottom of it declaring his belief that the statement was not a voluntary one. The learned Judge in dealing with this point stated that he did not consider himself bound conclusively by the certificate attached by the Magistrate to the record of confession. I observed at the time that the Magistrate had not been called as a witness at the Sessions trial for the purpose of deposing to the grounds of the belief entertained by him that the statement was not a voluntary one; and so by my order of the 8th of November I directed the learned Sessions Judge to record the evidence of the Magistrate and to call upon him to explain for what reasons he thought the statement made before him by this accused-appellant was not a voluntary statement. The learned Judge has now recorded the evidence of the Magistrate and it has been called into this Court. In the statement which the Magistrate has now made before the Sessions Judge as a witness he gives certain reasons for considering that the statement made by the accused was not a voluntary one. The question whether the confession to which this evidence of the Magistrate relates ought to be used in evidence against the accused, seems to me to be a somewhat difficult one and in the circumstances I deem it advisable to have the case referred to a Bench for disposal. The appeal is a jail appeal and no one appears on behalf of the appellant. Let the case be laid before a Bench as soon as may be after the Christmas holidays." (21st December 1917.)

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has been referred by the Judicial Commissioner for disposal to a Bench of two Judges. The reason why the reference was made is as follows:—The appellant made a confession before Mr. Sinha, a Deputy Magistrate. Mr. Sinha refused to record the memorandum to which reference is made in section 164 (3), Code of Criminal Procedure. He was of opinion that the confession was not voluntarily made. The point for decision is whether in these circumstances the confession is admissible in evidence. The view taken by the learned Sessions Judge is that it is for the trial Court to decide whether a confession has or has not been voluntarily made and that, if the Court is satisfied that a confession has been voluntarily made, it ought to be admitted in evidence, although the officer who recorded it is of a contrary opinion and has refused to append the necessary certificate. In Emperor v. Kadar Ghulam Mahmad (1), a case which was decided by a Bench of the Bombay High Court, the view was taken that the word "record" in section 164 (3), Criminal Procedure Code, must necessarily mean "making a part of a judicial record" and not merely "writing out." We are in agreement upon that point with the learned Judges who decided that case. It follows that Mr. Sinha was precluded from making the confession part of any judicial record. He had written out the confession and the act of writing out could not be undone, but the confession could not be placed upon the record. The Committing Magistrate should not have accepted it as part of the record and the Sessions Judge should not have considered it. It is no more admissible than a confession would have been which had been recorded by a Police Officer.

With regard to the merits of the appeal it is clear that, once the confession is excluded, there is not sufficient evidence to justify a conviction on any charge.

We, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the appellant be set at liberty.

Appeal allowed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195
—Sanction for prosecution granted by successor of Judge who heard case—Delay, effect of.

PREM CHAND V. SONATAN SAHA.

On the application of the defendant in a Small Cause Court suit, the successor-in-office of the Judge who had decreed the suit granted, after an inordinate delay, sanction for the prosecution of the plaintiff for perjury in respect of a false statement in his deposition. This sanction was affirmed on appeal to the District Judge:

Held, that as the Court record of the deposition was not read over to the plaintiff and he was not cross-examined on the statement, and as the sanction was granted after a long delay by a Judge who did not try the case, the sanction should be revoked, especially as this sanction, if not revoked, would be used by the defendant in terrorem both as regards execution under the decree passed against him and as regards the suit which he had brought for setting aside that decree and which was pending. JUDGMENT.

CHITTY, J.—On the 18th December 1916 the petitioner, Prem Chand Gorai, filed a suit in the Small Cause Court at Midnapore against Sonatan Shaha alias Sonaula Saha to recover a sum of Rs. 437 for the price of goods sold and money advanced on an account between the parties. The suit was heard by the Subordinate Judge, Babu S. C. Chakravarti. From the record it appears that the plaintiff stated in examination-in-chief that he paid an income tax of Rs. 250. The Subordinate Judge in his judgment remarked that it was unlikely that the plaintiff as a Mahajan of standing would prefer a false claim for so small an amount as Rs. 437. There is nothing to indicate that this remark had a direct reference to the statement of the plaintiff regarding income tax, though of course that may have been the case. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff on 28th March 1917. On 30th March 1917 the plaintiff decree holder applied for execution, but the judgment-debtor's property was not attached and that execution case was dismissed in default of the decree-holder taking further action. Babu S. C. Chakravarti was then transferred, and on the 15th May 1917 the defendant applied to his successor, Babu H. K. Bose, for sanction to prosecute the plaintiff for perjury for stating that he paid an income tax of Rs. 250 whereas in fact he paid nothing at all.

It is conceded that at the time in question the plaintiff was paying no income tax. The plaintiff, in reply, stated that his answer must have been incorrectly recorded and that what he said or intended to say was that his income was Rs. 250 a month and not that he paid an income tax on that amount. The proceedings being in a Small Cause Court the deposition of the witness was not read over to him, nor was he at all cross-examined in regard to this answer or his credit generally. The question of sanction was before the Subordinate Judge, Babu H. K. Bose, for close upon 7 months when on 11th December 1917, after this inordinate delay, sanction was granted. An application to the District Judge to revoke it was rejected and the petitioner has now applied to us to exercise over revisional powers and set it aside.

For several reasons I think that the Rule should be made absolute. In the first place, I think that there is reason to doubt whether the statement was made as recorded. The only evidence of its having been so made that could be at all relied upon is the Court record. It is obvious that oral statements of the opposite party such as appear in the affidavit now filed before us are of little value. The accuracy of the Court record is open to this comment that the deposition was not read over to the witness (it is true that the law does not require it), and that the statement did not attract the attention of the cross-examining Pleader, and so the plaintiff had no opportunity of correcting it, if it was inaccurate. Secondly, it was not the trying Judge who thought that the plaintiff should be prosecuted. The matter was brought before his successor by the defendant, the unsuccessful party in the suit, and Babu H. K. Bose, after allowing the matter to drag on for nearly 7 months, has granted the sanction because the statement is false, without any consideration of the surrounding circumstances, of which indeed he was not in a position to judge. Thirdly, we find that in July 1917, the defendant filed a suit to set aside this decree. It appears to me obvious that this sanction, if granted, will be used by the defendant in terrorem both as regards execution under the existing decree, and as regards the suit now pending. This appears to me to be a case in which the personal element bulks largely, and I do not think that the Courts should assist the defendant by putting this weapon into his hands. In any view of the case I think that criminal proceedings should not be allowed to commence until the decision of the defendant's suit. But I think that the interests of justice do not require the prosecution of the petitioner at all and I would, therefore, make the Rule absolute and revoke the sanction.

SMITHER, J.—I think we should, at this stage, rely upon the presumption that the record is correct: but as it is now about a year since the evidence was given, and as I find, on examining the record, that the applicant for sanction was himself responsible for much of the delay that occurred before sanction was granted, I agree in the order passed. When a person wants to prosecute criminally he must not be dilatory.

Rule made absolute.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 233, 235, 537—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 71, 218—Joinder of charges—Police Officer preparing incorrect record consisting of several documents—Separate charge in respect of each document, whether necessary—Irrregularity.

Accused, a Police Inspector, was charged in one trial with having prepared certain documents incorrectly in order to screen one H. and to save him from legal punishment. He was convicted of an offence under section 218 of the Penal Code. The documents set forth in the charge were a ruqqa addressed to the officer in charge of the Police station, a first information report based upon the ruqqa, seven Police diaries relating to the investigation held in the case and the final report to the Magistrate:

Held, (1) that the various documents formed part of one continuous whole, the same purpose, namely, the saving of H. from legal punishment, running through them all, and that, therefore, the offences having been committed in the same transaction they could all be tried in the same trial under section 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code; [p. 271, col. 1.]

(2) that the documents in question together comprised the Police record of an investigation into a charge and that the accused being charged with having prepared an incorrect Police record, there was nothing defective in framing a single charge in respect of all the documents; [p. 271, col. 2.]

(3) that even if it were held that the accused should have been charged with separate offences in regard to each document, the trial was not illegal merely because one charge was framed in regard to all the documents, the irregularity being covered by section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Criminal revision from the order of the Sessions Judge, Ambala, dated the 14th May 1917.

Mr. Mul Chand, Public Prosecutor, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Bechey and Vaughan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Muhammad Hussain, an Inspector of Police, Karnal, was tried by a First Class Magistrate and convicted of an offence under section 218, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to a fine of Rs 500. His appeal was heard by the Sessions Judge of Ambala, as was also an application by Government for enhancement of sentence. The learned Sessions Judge held that the charge was defective and that the accused had been somewhat prejudiced thereby, and setting aside the conviction and sentence ordered a re-trial. From this order an application for revision has been made on behalf of Government, and Muhammad Hussain has also applied for revision on the ground that instead of a re-trial having been ordered he should have been acquitted.

The facts are sufficiently set forth in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge; and need not be repeated at length. Briefly, the charge against Muhammad Hussain was that he prepared certain documents incorrectly in order to screen one Habiba, son of Mamun, and to save him from legal punishment. The documents set forth in the charge were P. R., a ruqqa addressed to the officer in charge of the Police station; P. S., a first information report which was based upon P. R, P. Q., seven Police diaries relating to the investigation held in the case; and P. W., the final Police report to the Magistrate which is known as the chalan.

The objection taken to the charge is that the accused was charged with ten, or at least four, distinct offences in the same charge, which, therefore, contravenes the provisions of section 233 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Two contentions were raised before the learned Sessions Judge :—

(1) That the preparation of each document was a separate offence, and that there should have been separate charges regarding each ; and

(2) That the offences could not all be tried together in the same trial.

As regards the second objection the Sessions Judge held that section 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code was applicable, as the various acts attributed to the accused comprised one series, so connected together as to form the same transaction. His view was that the various acts were so related to one another in point of purpose as to constitute one continuous action. The same purpose ran through all the offences, namely, to save Habiba, son of Mamun, from legal punishment, and, therefore, they must be considered as parts of the same transaction. We have no difficulty in agreeing with the learned Sessions Judge that the various acts form parts of one continuous whole, the same purpose, namely, the saving of Habiba, son of Mamun, from legal punishment running through them all. They were all prepared with the same object.

As the offences, if any, were committed in the same transaction, they could all be tried in the same trial under section 235 of the Criminal Procedure Code. But it is urged that there should have been a separate charge in regard to each document which accused was said to have framed incorrectly.

The first point argued by Mr. Mul Chand on behalf of the Crown is that all the documents in question form parts of one record. Now, what the accused is really charged with having done is having prepared an incorrect Police record. There is no definition of the word "record" in the Indian Penal Code, but it is sometimes used as including a number of documents. For instance, the judicial record of a case includes all the depositions of witnesses and all the documentary evidence in the case. The documents in question in the present case, commencing with the ruqqa addressed by the accused to the officer in charge of the Police station and ending with his final report to the Magistrate, comprised, in our opinion, the Police record of the investigation into a charge against a number of persons that they had committed an offence under section 401, Indian Penal Code. On this ground alone we hold that there was nothing defective in the charge. The case appears to be such as is provided for by section 71, Indian Penal Code. The alleged offence of preparing an incorrect Police record is one made up of parts, namely, the preparation of the different documents comprising that record; the incorrect preparation of each one of them would be itself an offence.

Mr. Mul Chand has further argued that even if there ought to have been a separate charge in regard to each document under section 233 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the error was not so fatal as to vitiate the trial, but was a mere irregularity within the meaning of section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In support of this argument he has referred us to Musai Singh v. Emperor (1), wherein it was held that a single head of charge, relating to three offences of the same kind, is defective for duplicity and not misjoinder; but a trial under such charge is not bad unless the accused has been prejudiced thereby.

Mr. Beechey, on the other hand, has cited Asgar Ali Biswas v. Emperor (2), wherein it was held that a single charge relating to several distinct offences is illegal having regard to section 233 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The ruling in Musai Singh v. Emperor (1) is, however, a later one, and was followed in Ram Subhag Singh v. Emperor (3). In that case it was held that the first portion of section 233, Criminal Procedure Code, is not so imperative as to render a trial null and void if the direction enjoined therein is disobeyed. It was also pointed out that in the case of Subrahmaniam Ayyar v. King-Emperor (4) the Privy Council did not decide that a defect under section 233, Criminal Procedure Code, is fatal to the trial. They, in effect, stated that a disregard of the second part of section 233, by joining charges beyond the limits specified in section 234, vitiated the trial. It was further remarked in Ram Subhag Singh v. Emperor (3) that the object of the section is that an accused person shall not be convicted of an offence of which he has not been charged. This object is not frustrated, and the accused is not prejudiced, if the accusations against him are written in one sentence or on one sheet of paper instead of in two sentences or on two sheets of paper.

We agree with the decision in Ram Subhag Singh v. Emperor (3) and with that reported as Musai Singh v. Emperor (1), and hold that, even if it be considered that the accused should have been charged with separate offences in regard to each document, the trial was not illegal merely because one charge was framed in regard to all the documents. We, therefore, allow the revision and setting aside the order of the learned Sessions Judge remand the appeal to him for decision in accordance with law. The application for revision on behalf of Muhammad Hussain is rejected.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 155, 157—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1895), s. 162—Statements made to Police, whether can be used as corroboration—Hostile witness, whether can be impeached by reference to Police diary

Statements of witnesses made to the Police should not be used to corroborate the n except in very special circumstances. [p. 273, col. 1.]

The evidence of a witness who is hostile to the Crown may be impeached by reference to the Police diary. [p. 273, col. 1.]

If in the course of a trial a witness is called upon to say that he saw the offence committed by the accused and when called upon says that the offence was committed by an entirely different person, it is only fair that the Crown should be allowed to use section 155 of the Evidence Act to disabuse the jury of the effect made by a wilfully false statement. There is nothing in section 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code to prevent this course being adopted. That section provides only for facilities to the accused to obtain copies of Police papers. [p. 273, col. 1.]

Revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Patna, dated the 25th August 1917, affirming that of the Sub-Divisional Officer, Dinapore, dated the 28th July 1917.

Messrs S. Sinha and H. L. Nandkeolynr, for the Petitioners.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

ROE, J.—In this case we are asked to set aside the conviction and sentences on two grounds, firstly, that the statements made before the Police in the course of the enquiry have been used as substantive evidence in the case, and, secondly, that the Police diaries have been used for the purpose of impeaching a Crown witness or rather one who should have been examined as a Crown witness but was examined by the Court and not by the Crown.

The first argument seems to us to be based upon a misappreciation of the finding in the judgments of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and the Sessions Judge. We are unable to find anywhere in the two judgments any use of the statements made as substantive evidence in the case.

The second argument is based upon section 162 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and it is urged that that section overrides the provisions of the Evidence Act, sections 155 and 157. The case quoted in support of this contention is Emperor v. Akbar Badu (1). But even in that case Mr. Justice Heaton said that "it may be that what the witnesses said was admissible by way of corroboration within the terms of section 157 of the Evidence Act." All that he did protest against was the record being loaded with statements of this (1) 7 Ind. Cas. 933; 34 B. 599; 12 Bom. L. R. 663; 11 Cr. L. J. 542.

HARJI V. EMPEROR.

description and to that extent we are, if we may say so, in cordial agreement with him. Statements of witnesses made to the Police should not be used to corroborate them except in very special circumstances, but even in the case quoted there is no authority for the proposition that the evidence of a witness who is hostile to the Crown may not be impeached by reference to the Police diary. If in the course of the trial a witness is called upon to say that he saw the offence committed by the accused and when called upon says that the offence was committed by an entirely different person, it seems only fair that the Crown should be allowed to use the Evidence Act, section 155, to disabuse the Jury of the effect made by a wilfully false statement. There is certainly nothing in section 162 to prevent this course being adopted, and, as we understand it, the section provides only for facilities to the accused to obtain copies of Police papers. The Legislature has not thought fit to make provision for equal facilities to the prosecution, for the reason that the papers are always in the hands of the prosecution. I would reject this application and direct that the petitioners surrender to their bail and serve out the remainder of their sentences.

IMAM, J.—I agree. I would only wish to add that the contention of the learned Counsel that the statement made by Dhuku Singh before the Police was used in this case against the accused is not borne out by an examination of the judgments of the lower Courts. It appears that this man Dhuku Singh was called as a Court witness. The trying Magistrate called him as such, because it was alleged at a very early stage of the trial that Dhuku had been gained over by the defence. When examined in Court, he made statements that were inconsistent with the statements that he made before the Police in the course of the Police investigation. The subsequent appearance of the Sub-Inspector for examination on the point was as to whether he had or had not made these statements. It appears that this was done, not with a view to substantiate the offence against the accused, but to clear the doubt as to whether or not the prosecution was right in condemning this man Dhuku as a witness who had turned hostile since his examination by the Police. I have carefully considered the judgment of the trying Magistrate as also that of the learned Judge who heard the appeal, and I find that there is nothing in the two judgments to show that the statements made by Dhuku before the investigating officer have been used as evidence against the accused. On the contrary, I find in the judgment of the learned Judge who heard the appeal that these statements were used only for a certain purpose, and that was to ascertain the fact as to whether the allegation of the prosecution as to the hostility of Dhuku was established or not. In the circumstances the petition must be rejected.

Petition rejected.

Evidence:—First report, value of—Report made by accused, admissibility of.

A first report is generally very valuable corroborative evidence of the testimony of the person who makes it; but where it is made by an accused, it is not admissible in evidence at all and constitutes no corroboration either of the case against himself or of that against any other co-accused. [p. 274, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, the whole of the evidence was disbelieved by the Sessions Judge but the accused were convicted on the strength of a report made by one of themselves:

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Karnal, dated the 29th March 1917, convicting the appellants.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Mul Chand, R. S. (Public Prosecutor) for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Four brothers Harji, Kala Hira and Gokal, sons of Ram Jas, were committed to the Sessions Court charged with the murder on the night of the 24th January 1917 of Sudhan Jat of their village.

The story for the prosecution was that early in the night of the occurrence the accused discovered that one of their she-buffaloes was missing, that they suspected the deceased and his brother Udmi of its theft and thereupon proceeding towards their house, found Sudhan asleep in the lane in front of his cattle shed. Sudhan was at once murdered with gandas with which the accused had provided themselves, and then all four culprits, going to the house where Udmi was asleep, called him out and when he opened the door struck at him and wounded him on the head. The learned Sessions Judge agreeing with the assessor came to the conclusion that the story as told by the prosecution witnesses was entirely false, but also in agreement with the assessors he held that a report made by Hira, one of the accused at the Thana, almost simultaneously with the first information report justified the conviction of Harji and Kala. Hira and Gokal accordingly have been acquitted whilst Harji and Kala have been sentenced to transportation for life and the two latter have appealed to this Court.

Now the report made by Hira, whose authorship Hira denied, but of which we agree with the learned Sessions Judge that he was the maker, sets forth that Harji and Kala had a fight with Sudhan and Udmi, whom they found in the act of leading away a she-buffalo and its young belonging to Kala. Now this first report made by Hira is not evidence. First reports may be and generally are very valuable corroborative evidence of the testimony of the person who makes them, but in this case Hira, the maker, was not a witness but an accused person and consequently his report to the Police constituted no corroboration of either the case against himself or of that against his brothers. In fact his first report was not admissible in evidence at all. As the whole of the rest of the evidence has been discredited by the learned Sessions Judge and the assessors, it follows that there is nothing on which the conviction can properly repose. The learned Counsel for the Crown admits that this position is correct, but he has asked us to maintain the conviction on the evidence which was rejected by both the Judge and the assessors in the Court below.

We have accordingly studied the evidence in detail and quite apart from the fact that the Sessions Judge has noted with regard to nearly all the chief witnesses in the case that their demeanour in the witness-box was very unsatisfactory, we have come to the conclusion that the evidence in this case is not trustworthy and that though there can be little doubt but that some of the four brothers were concerned in the murder of Sudhan, there is no legal acceptable evidence as to how, when and where and by whom Sudhan was killed. The offence appears to have taken place at about 9 or 10 p.m., yet the report to the thana was made at only 3 o'clock the next morning, in spite of the fact that the thana is only five kos distant and that the rival parties are said to have raced to make their respective reports. Again, in the first report no mention is made of any eye-witness, whilst regarding Musammal Basanti it is said that she saw the culprit running away. In Court, however, Pirbbu and Har Nath came forward as eye-witnesses of the whole affair and so does Musammal Basanti. So also does Musammal Jia, who says she was on the spot before Musammal Basanti. As Jai Lal who made the report to the thana is said to have seen those witnesses near the corpse before starting to make his report, it is impossible that if these witnesses had really seen what they profess now to have seen they would not have mentioned the fact to Jai Lal and that the circumstances would not have found mention in his report. Another remarkable circumstance in this case is that though the Police diaries show that the evidence of all these witnesses was recorded on the first day of the enquiry, the witnesses themselves have stated, almost without exception, that their statements were not recorded on the first day of the enquiry and we note on referring to the diaries that they reached the Sadar on a belated date, a circumstance into which the Sessions Judge should have made enquiry. The learned Sessions Judge says that there appears to be some substratum of proof in the statement of Akhi

BROJENDRA NATH BAKSHI v. EMPEROR.

Ram, but the statement in itself is not conclusive or very convincing and the learned Sessions Judge has not indicated with any precision what portion of this man's statement he regards as containing some fraction of truth. It is a matter for surprise to us that Udmi, the brother of the deceased, who was very lightly hurt indeed, did not himself proceed to the thana and we are not greatly impressed by the argument advanced by the learned Counsel that his reason for holding back was his apprehension that the culprits might waylay him on the road.

It is a matter for regret that the Police do not appear to have investigated the version of the affair told by Hira. Had this been done and the spot indicated by Hira closely examined, it is possible that the truth of the affair might have been elucidated.

The result of this case is very unsatisfactory, but holding as we do that the opinion of the lower Court regarding the credibility of the prosecution evidence is sound and that the material upon which it convicted the appellants was inadmissible in evidence, we have no alternative but to accept the appeal and acquit the appellants and we order accordingly.

Appeal accepted.

Stamp Act (II of 1899), s. 64—Failure to stamp document—Fraudulent intent.

Mere non-payment of a proper stamp duty does not make a person liable to prosecution under section 64 of the Stamp Act, unless it is proved that he had an intention to defraud the Government of its stamp revenue.

Criminal revision from the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer, Goalando.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Manmatha Nath Mukherjee, for the Petitioner.—In this case the Sub-Divisional

Officer of Goalando granted sanction to prosecute the petitioner under section 64 of the Stamp Act, although no prima facie case showing the fraudulent intention of the petitioner had been made out. As the petitioner never refused to pay the requisite stamp duty, he cannot be said to have intended to defraud or to deprive the Government of its stamp revenue, and as the proceeding under section 64 was taken without giving the petitioner any chance of paying the necessary and proper stamp duty he is not liable to prosecution. Refers to sections 27, 40 and 64 of the Stamp Act. Mere non-payment of the full amount of the stamp duty payable is not enough, the prosecution must also establish a fraudulent intention on the part of the petitioner, and that has not been done in this case.

Mr. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.—The petitioner is an educated District Court Pleader, and he was fully aware of the Stamp Law, and he did not give the requisite stamp duty merely because he had in his mind an intention to avoid paying the proper stamp. Farther this motive of the petitioner is also borne out by the exceedingly low rate of rent, viz., Rs. 15 per annum, settled in perpetuity for 500 bighas of land.

JUDGMENT.—In this case we do not think that any prima facie case of an intention to defraud on the part of Brojendra Nath Bakshi has been made out which would justify his prosecution under section 64 of the Indian Stamp Act. The fact that a sum of money had been advanced by his father for the marriage expenses of the grantees of the kabuliyat was fully set out in the kabuliyat. The only thing that was not set out was the precise amount advanced and the rate of interest which it was intended to carry. The petitioner should have been asked to specify those amounts in order that the stamp duty might be assessed. Instead of giving him that chance the authorities at once proceeded against him under section 64. The stamp duty, so far as we can judge, would not have been more than Rs. 15 for the whole amount of principal and interest. We are not satisfied that there was any intention on the part of the petitioner to defraud the Government of that trifling sum. The Rule is accordingly made

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 522—Criminal force, use of—Show of criminal force, whether enough.

The dispossession contemplated by section 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code must be accompanied by criminal force and as a result of the criminal force used, and the mere show of criminal force is not enough for an order under that section. [p. 277, col 1.]

The foundation of an order under section 522 of the Criminal Procedure Code should be the finding of the Court to the effect that the person in whose favour the order is made has been dispossessed of a specific property by use of criminal force, which forms the material ingredient in the matter of criminal conviction. [p. 276, col. 2.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Deputy Magistrate, Palamau.

Messrs. Akbari and Harihar Prasad Sinha, for the Petitioners.

JUDGMENT.—We are concerned in this case only with the order under section 522 of the Code of Criminal Procedure passed by the Deputy Magistrate of Palamau, directing that the disputed Bhunder be restored to the possession of the complainant Mr. De. The order was passed on a conviction of the petitioners under sections 143 and 379 of the Indian Penal Code. On appeal the Judicial Commissioner of Ranchi set aside the conviction under section 379, on the ground that the charge of theft laid by the complainant's servants was exaggerated and was not true. The conviction under section 143 was, however, upheld. There is no reference to the order under section 522 by the Judicial Commissioner in his judgment and hence that order of the Deputy Magistrate remains. The petitioners have, therefore, come to this Court aggrieved by the said order of the Deputy Magistrate.

The conviction under section 143 is based upon the following finding of the Judicial Commissioner, which substantially is also the finding of the Deputy Magistrate:—

"I consider this evidence as establishing the fact that Mr. De's servants were actually in possession of this Bhunder. The evidence further satisfies me that the accused after some previous threats turned up in a body and threatened all the servants of the Bhunder, whereupon the servants left the village and came to Court where they lodged a complaint. During the interval between their departure and the Police coming on the scene, Bundi Singh (one of the accused) again established himself in possession of the Bhunder."

The above finding clearly shows that the dispossession took place subsequent to the complainant's servants having left the village and gone to the Court to complain of the offence under section 143 of theft committed by the petitioners. There is no finding that the dispossession took place during the course of the offence under section 143 of which the petitioners were convicted. There is also no finding that the dispossession took place on account of any force having been used by the petitioners. The conviction under section 143 in itself is not one which is attended by 'criminal force'. The common object mentioned in the charge under section 143 is to take forcible possession of the complainant's master's Bhunder and to remove the grains stored therein. The offence under section 143 is not necessarily attended by 'criminal force' and in this particular case there is no finding that it was so attended. No "criminal force", as defined in sections 349, 350 of the Criminal Procedure Code, was at all held to have been used by the petitioners. It was held so far back as in Mohunt Luchmi Dass v. Pallat Lall (1) that 'the foundation of an order under section 534 (corresponding to the present section 522) should be the finding of the Court to the effect that the person in whose favour the order is made has been dispossessed of a specific property by use of criminal force, which forms the material ingredient in the matter of criminal conviction'. The leading case of Ram Chandra Boral v. Jityandria (2) reiterated that principle. All the High Courts appear to be in agreement in respect of the interpretation of the expression used in section 522 'attended by criminal force' and later in the section 'by such force any person has been dispossessed of any immovable property'. The result of the authorities has been that the dispossession must be accompanied by 'criminal force' and as a result of the 'criminal force' used, and further 'the mere show of criminal force' is not sufficient for an order under section 522. It may be mentioned here that the inequity of such an interpretation of the section and perhaps of the expression used by the Legislature has been felt by more Judges than one, notably in the case of Chhakoo Mandal v. Emperor (3), where the anomaly of the position has been fully dealt with. The words in the section put a peaceful man, who yields to the threats and show of force and gives up possession of a property, to a great disadvantage and hardship. The Full Bench case of Mohini Mohan Choudhru v. Harendra Chandra Chawthry (4) felt that the construction put upon the section is too narrow. I may say that I am in full accord with the views of the learned Judges who decided the above cases and would go further than that and hold that the interpretation works as a hardship, but as all the Courts have followed it, I feel bound to accept it. More so, because the rule of construction of a Statute does not permit a Court to use words not expressly mentioned in the section. To give effect to the inequitous position felt by the Judges already adverted to will necessitate the reading into the section the words 'or by show of criminal force'. I, therefore, in concurrence with the views held by all the Courts, hold that the order in this case passed by the Deputy Magistrate under section 522 is illegal and without jurisdiction. It is accordingly set aside.

EMPEROR.—PROSECUTOR.—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 155, 164, 172—Police Officer investigating non-cognisable offence—Diary, whether necessary to be kept—Statements recorded under s. 164—Procedure.

A non-cognisable case can, under section 155 of the Criminal Procedure Code, be investigated by a Police Officer only under the orders of a Magistrate of the first or second class who has power to try such case or commit the same for trial. But when such order is given and the Police Officer proceeds in accordance therewith to make an investigation, such investigation is made under Chapter XIV, which includes both sections 153 and 172. [p. 281, col. 1.]

It is incumbent upon a Police Officer, who investigates a non-cognisable case under the orders of a Magistrate, to keep the diary for which provision is made in section 172 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the omission to keep such diary deprives the Court of the very valuable assistance which such diaries can give, if legitimately used. [p. 281, col. 1.]

The indiscriminate use of the provisions of section 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code is to be deprecated. No statement should be recorded under that section unless the person making it is a free agent and voluntarily agrees to have his statement taken down. [p. 281, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from the order of the Special Magistrate of the 1st Class, appointed under section 14 of the Criminal Procedure Code, with jurisdiction to try cases throughout the Punjab, dated Ludhiana, the 8th November, 1917, convicting the appellant.

Messrs. Beechey and Lal Chand Mehra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Herbert, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In consequence of a resolution passed by nineteen members of the Gurdaspur Bar Association on the 18th of April 1917, and of various rumours that were rife concerning the conduct of Mr. Ephraim Tej Bhan, Senior Subordinate Judge and Magistrate, 1st Class, Gurdaspur, the District Magistrate acting under section 155, Criminal Procedure Code, empowered Sardar Bahadur Sukha Singh, Deputy Superintendent of Police, C. I. D., to investigate into matters, and as a result of those enquiries the Local Government on the 24th August 1917 granted sanction under section 197 (1) of the Code for the prosecution of the said Mr. Bhan in respect of offences under section 161, Indian Penal Code, alleged to have been committed by him, and under the provisions of section 197 (2) of the Code directed that the trial of the accused should be held in the Court of Mr. D. J. Boyd at Ludhiana. By Punjab Government Notifications No. 3648—S., dated 25th August 1917, and No. 19503—A., dated 25th October 1917, Mr. D. J. Boyd was appointed under section 14 of the Code a Special Magistrate with all the powers of a Magistrate, 1st Class, in regard to cases generally throughout the Punjab for a period of three months with effect from the 25th August 1917.

On the 27th August Sirdar Bahadur Sukha Singh filed a complaint against Mr. Bhan and one Hira Lal Kapur in respect of offences committed by them under sections 161, 162 and 163, respectively, of the Indian Penal Code. The complainant was duly examined upon his complaint on the same date, Mr. Bhan being present in person, and at the conclusion of the complainant's examination the Magistrate directed that a summons should issue to Hira Lal Kapur to answer charges under sections 162 and 163, Indian Penal Code. The trial commenced on the 4th September 1917, and after forty-three witnesses for the prosecution and the two accused had been examined the Magistrate on the 24th of September discharged Mr. Bhan and framed the following two charges against Hira Lal Kapur, namely:—

"First.—That you, on or about the 26th day of May 1916, at Simla did accept Rs. 300 from Mahant Vaishnu Das as a motive or reward for inducing, by corrupt or illegal means or by personal influence, Ephraim Tej Bhan, a public servant, to show favour to the said Mahant Vaishnu Das in the exercise of his official functions as Senior Subordinate Judge trying the civil case "Vaishnu Das v. Ram Das" and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 162 or 163 of the Indian Penal Code within my cognizance."

"Secondly.—"That you, on or about the 26th day of May 1916, at Simla did abet the acceptance of Rs. 3,000 by Mrs. Ephraim Tej Bhan as a motive for inducing, by corrupt or illegal means or by personal influence, her husband Ephraim Tej Bhan, a public servant, to show favour to Mahant Vaishnu Das in the discharge of his official functions as Senior Subordinate Judge trying the civil case "Vaishnu Das v. Ram Das" and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 162/09 or 163/109 of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance."

After the charges were framed the witnesses for the prosecution were cross-examined, many of them at inordinate length, and thirty witnesses for the defence were also examined and cross-examined. On the 8th November the Magistrate passed an order convicting Hiral Lal Kapur upon both charges and sentenced him to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 300 or in default three months' rigorous imprisonment upon the first charge and to one year's rigorous imprisonment and to a fine of Rs. 200 or in default three months' rigorous imprisonment upon the second charge, the order directing that the substantive terms of imprisonment should run concurrently.

Hira Lal Kapur presented an appeal to the Sessions Judge, Ludhiana, against his conviction and sentences, but upon the representation of the learned Sessions Judge that he had personal reasons for not desiring to hear the appeal it was transferred along with other appeals of a somewhat similar character to this Court by an order of the Chief Judge under section 526, Criminal Procedure Code, and it has been heard by us as a Division Bench, Mr. Beechey and Mr. Lal Chand Mehra addressing us on behalf of the appellant and Mr. Herbert, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, on behalf of the Crown.

The case for the prosecution depends mainly upon the evidence of the three witnesses Beli Ram (P. W. No. 4), Vaishnu Das (P. W. No. 5) and Harbhaj Rai (P. W. No. 6), which is to the following effect:—

Vaishnu Das is a Mahant who claims to succeed to a certain gaddi in the Gurdaspur District to which property of very large value is attached, and he brought a suit to establish his right against his rival, one Ram Das. The suit was instituted in 1909 and after many hearings eventually came in its later stages before Mr. E. T. Bhan, who was then Senior Subordinate

HIRA LAL C. EXPEROR.

Judge at Gurdaspur. In the summer of 1915 Vaishnu Das and his supporters had reason to suspect that the defendants and their party had bribed the Subordinate Judge, and it was decided that they should also raise money and approach the Judge for a similar purpose. Accordingly in November 1915 a sum of Rs. 5,000 was raised by Vaishnu Das and his sewaks and later on Vaishnu Das asked Sardar Bhadau Singh, who was said to have bribed the same Judge in another case, to advise him as to the means of effecting his object. Harcharan Singh, Sardar Bhadau Singh's brother, suggested to Vaishnu Das the advisability of getting into touch with a Mrs. or Miss Das, a Christian lady living in Lahore, who was said to be a friend of Mr. and Mrs. Bhan. Negotiations with this lady ensued but nothing came of them. In the meantime Vaishnu Das recollected that one Beli Ram P. W. No. 4, one of his sewaks, had told him that Hira Lal Kapur would be able to render assistance to Beli Ram if the latter at any time had business in Bhan's Court. Vaishnu Das accordingly sent for Beli Ram and spoke to him on the subject and then deputed him and Harbhaj Rai (P. W. No. 6), whom he described as his Munshi, to interview Hira Lal Kapur at Lahore. The two proceeded to Lahore and Beli Ram told Hira Lal Kapur the object of their visit and asked him to give the help he had promised either by writing a letter of recommendation to Mr. Bhan or by personal interview with the latter. Hira Lal Kapur replied that he was ready to help but that mere sifarish would effect nothing, and that if Vaishnu Das was prepared to spend money something could be done. Beli Ram did not approve (so he says) of bribery and took no further part in the conversation, but Harbhaj Rai informed Hira Lal Kapur that he and his friends could raise Rs. 5,000, if necessary, Hira Lal Kapur stated that in that event he would arrange for Rs. 4,500 to be given to Mr. Bhan and that he would keep Rs. 500 for himself. The couple then left Hira Lal Kapur and Beli Ram took no further part in the transactions. Harbhaj Rai, however, informed Vaishnu Das of what he had heard from Hira Lal Kapur and stated that the latter had arranged to send one Faqir Chand in a day or two to Gurdaspur to find out when the money could be handed over to Mr. or Mrs. Bhan. It is alleged that Faqir Chand came twice to Gurdaspur for this purpose but that nothing could be done through him. Later Vaishnu Das and Harbhaj Rai heard that Mrs. Bhan was going to Simla, via, Lahore, and as Hira Lal had told Harbhaj Rai that in "big matters" money was given through Mrs. Bhan, Vaishnu Das sent Harbhaj Rai with Rs. 5,000 to Hira Lal at Lahore. Hira Lal informed him that Mrs. Bhan had not come to Lahore and asked him whether he had really got the Rs. 5,000, whereupon notes for Rs. 5,000 were shown to him and he replied "all right, when she comes to Lahore we shall arrange the matter here." Harbhaj Rai returned with the money to Gurdaspur and informed Vaishnu Das of what had happened. Three to four days later the two again proceeded to Lahore under the impression that Mrs. Bhan had arrived there. They saw Hira Lal, and found that Mrs. Bhan had gone to Simla, whereupon Vaishnu Das asked Hira Lal Kapur whether he would go to Simla with him and help him in the matter of bribery. Hira Lal Kapur expressed his readiness to go next day and stated that he would send a telegram that day informing Mrs. Bhan of his coming. Vaishnu Das then handed Harbhaj Rai Rs. 40 in notes for Hira Lal Kapur's expenses to Simla and himself returned by the night train to Gurdaspur in order to get the money. The following morning Harbhaj Rai, Hira Lal Kapur and the latter's servant Ram Singh started by the mail train from Lahore, Hira Lal travelling in second class and the others in the servants' third class compartment. At Amritsar station Harbhaj Rai got out and Vaishnu Das travelled by the same train in an intermediate carriage. At Tara Devi station the registers kept for plague purposes bearing entries dated 26th May 1916 show that Hira Lal Kapur, Vaishnu Das and Ram Singh were passengers by the train which arrived at Simla at 7 A.M. that day. It is said that on their arrival a servant of Mrs. Bhan met Hira Lal Kapur and gave him a note, which Hira Lal Kapur read and gave back to the man after writing something on it. The three then proceeded to the "Hindu Hotel", where Hira Lal Kapur entered their names in the Hotel register. After breakfast Hira Lal Kapur and Vaishnu Das proceeded to the house where Mrs. Bhan was staying; the former entered the house and in about one-half hour the servant who had met the party at that station came out and told Vaishnu Das that he was wanted. He went and found Hira Lal and Mrs. Bhan seated in a room and states that at the request of Hira Lal he handed Rs. 3,000 in notes tied up in malmal to Mrs. Bhan. Hira Lal told him in Mrs. Bhan's presence that he was "to arrange quickly" the balance of Rs. 1,500. Vaishnu Das agreed to give it within a week but remarked that it would be more convenient to pay it at Gurdaspur. Mrs. Bhan observed that the sum was small considering the value of the case and that the other side were ready to pay larger sums, but that she would write to her husband and tell him that she had seen Hira Lal and Vaishnu Das and had received the money. Hira Lal Kapur and Vaishnu Das then left the house and on the way Hira Lal Kapur asked for the Rs. 300 for himself and Vaishnu Das handed the same over to him. They returned to the hotel and left Simla by the 6 p. m. train that evening. Vaishnu Das returned to Gurdaspur and subsequently recovered Rs. 1,500 which he had lent to a Vakil for a few days and thereafter proceeded with Harbhaj Rai to Lahore with the balance of the money. Hira Lal Kapur returned with them to Gurdaspur by the train which arrived at midnight and next morning, as the early train was leaving the station, Hira Lal informed Vaishnu Das that he had seen Mr. Bhan, who had said that he had not yet seen the file of the case, that he meant to take leave in July and thought of writing his judgment at Simla, where Vaishnu Das was directed to take the balance of Rs. 1,500 as Mr. Bhan might have to make some enquiries from him there. On the 16th June 1916, Vaishnu Das received a parwana directing him to appear in Court as some enquiries had to be made from him, and in compliance therewith he proceeded to the Court with Harbhaj Rai and his Pleader, Lala Moti Ram. On their arrival they found that the other party had already put in an appearance and had brought a band which was waiting in the garden of the Kutchery. To Vaishnu Das's surprise Mr. Bhan gave judgment forthwith, dismissing his suit as utterly false and expressing his readiness to entertain applications for sanction to prosecute witnesses who had given evidence in Vaishnu Das' favour. On the 17th June 1916 Vaishnu Das wrote a postcard, Exhibit H. D. 10, to Hira Lal Kapur to the effect that "the inauspicious day that was dreaded" had arrived and calamity had fallen upon him as judgment had been given and his suit dismissed. On the 18th June 1916 a postcard, Exhibit H. P. 13, which admittedly bears the signature of Hira Lal Kapur, was written in reply and is to the effect that the postcard has been received and that the writer is extremely sorry to hear that the labour of eight years has been lost, that no greater calamity could be conceived, that they must trust in God, and that a copy of the judgment should be obtained so that the reasons for it might be ascertained.

From the decision of Mr. Bhan, Vaishnu Das preferred an appeal in October 1916 to the Chief Court but admittedly made no complaint to the authorities as regards the conduct of the Subordinate Judge.

Before proceeding to deal with the case on its merits it is necessary to refer to one or two points of a general nature upon which Mr. Beechey laid great stress.

In the first place the learned Counsel expressed great indignation at the course adopted by Government in taking no action against Mrs. Bhan and urged that it was most unfair to that lady to make accusations against her indirectly and yet to abstain from putting her in the dock. As to this it is only necessary to say that Mrs. Bhan has herself not protested against the omission on the part of the authorities to prefer a charge against her, and that Mr. Beechey, who does not in any sense represent her, can hardly complain of a procedure which enabled his client to call Mrs. Bhan as a witness for the defence. Her evidence for what it is worth would have been lost to the appellant had the lady been a co-accused in the case. Apart from this, moreover, as it is obvious that the sole evidence against Mrs. Bhan would have been that of Vaishnu Das and it is in the highest degree improbable that a conviction would have been obtained upon that evidence standing by itself and uncorroborated, it appears to us, therefore, that Government were well advised in not harassing the lady by a prosecution which must have failed.

HIRA LAL v. EMPEROR.

In the next place, Mr. Beechey urged that the Police Officers who made the investigation in this and the other cases against Mr. Bhan acted in contravention of the provisions of section 172, Criminal Procedure Code, in omitting to record their proceedings in the usual Police diaries. In our opinion there is force in this contention. It was urged by Mr. Herbert that it is not the practice for the Police to keep diaries when investigating non-cognisable cases, and we have no doubt whatever that it was on this account and without any ulterior or sinister purpose that diaries were not kept in the cases with which we are now dealing. At the same time section 172 of the Code provides that "every Police Officer making an investigation under this chapter shall day by day enter his proceedings in the investigation in a diary," etc. A non-cognisable case can, under section 155 of the Code, be investigated by a Police Officer only under the orders of a Magistrate of the first or second class who has power to try such case or commit the same for trial. But when such order is given and the Police Officer proceeds in accordance therewith to make an investigation such investigation, is obviously made under Chapter XIV which includes both sections 155 and 172. In our opinion, it is incumbent upon the Police Officer who investigates a non-cognisable case under the orders of a Magistrate to keep the diary for which provision is made in section 172, and we might add that in any event the omission to keep such diary deprives the Court of the very valuable assistance which such diaries can give, if legitimately used, in the judgment of Edge, C. J., in Queen-Empress v. Mannu (1).

Next Mr. Beechey complained of the action of the Police Officers having the statements of the principal witnesses recorded at the earliest possible opportunity under section 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The indiscriminate use of the provision of that section is undoubtedly to be deprecated and we agree with the view expressed by Plowden, J., in Lalu v. Queen-Empress (2) that no statement should be recorded under that section unless the person making it is a free agent and voluntarily agrees to have his statement taken down. In a case such as that with which we are dealing the investigation by the Police was of a difficult character and we cannot accept the contention that they had no justification for taking a course they did, and we are certainly not satisfied that the persons whose statements were recorded were unwilling to make those statements or were forced to do so.

Turning now to the merits of the case, we find that the direct evidence given by Vaishnu Das and Harbhaj Rai is corroborated in many material points and that the prosecution have succeeded in establishing the guilt of the appellant. The corroboration to which we refer can be summarised as follows:—

(i). The evidence of Beli Ram (P. W. No. 4), who proves that the idea of bribing Mr. Bhan emanated from Hira Lal. This witness cannot be regarded as an accomplice in the offence, for, as he himself tells us, he at once declined to take any further part in the proceedings after the suggestion of a bribe had been made. He is, however, a person in no way inimical to Hira Lal, who admittedly on a former occasion applied to him for assistance in the case between Hira Lal and Pandit Rambhaj Datt. He had no motive, therefore, for giving false evidence in this case and the postcards written by him to Vaishnu Das and Harbhaj Rai (Exhibit H. P. 14, dated 29th April 1916, and Exhibit H. P. 15, dated 30th May 1916) materially corroborate the evidence he has given in the case.

(ii). The evidence of a number of sewaks or disciples, who depose that the idea of bribing Mr. Bhan was discussed and money raised to enable Vaishnu Das to give the bribe. A number of bonds and a bahi were produced to support this evidence (see Exhibits H. P. 17—26).

(iii). The evidence of Gurdit Singh (P. W. No. 2), the Secretary of the Gurdaspur Bar Association, which proves that Vaishnu Das made a statement to the witness in February or March 1917 to the effect that a bribe had been given by Vaishnu Das. The gist of this statement was taken down in writing by Gurdit Singh (see Exhibit

(1) 19 A. 390; A. W. N. (1897) 174; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 254.

HIRA LAL V. EMPEROR.

H. P. 12), but Mr. Beechey argues that this statement is not admissible in evidence. In our opinion this objection is valid, as the statement was not made at or about the time when the bribe is alleged to have been given, but it is unnecessary for the prosecution to refer to the exhibit itself, inasmuch as the searching cross-examination of Vaishnu Das has with extraordinary thoroughness brought upon the record practically all that was contained in that document. It is proved, therefore, that Vaishnu Das informed Gurdit Singh of what had occurred and that this information was given a considerable time before the Police investigation.

(iv). The register of travellers who passed the inspection post at Tara Devi on the 26th May 1916 has entries showing the names of Lala Hira Lal Kapur and Mahant Vaishnu Das, travellers to Simla (Exhibit H. P. 2).

(v). The C. I. D. confidential diary kept by H. C. Zafar Hussain (P. W. No. 38) has similar entries regarding Hira Lal Kapur and Mahant Vaishnu Das, the former travelling second class and the latter intermediate. The entry regarding Vaishnu Das runs as follows:—Mahant Vaishnu Das, chela Brahm Das, Buiragi, Gurdaspur se aya, aur Hindu Hotel theregi, waste mulaqat Tej Bhan, Senior Sub-Judge, aya.

(i). Exhibit H. D. 10, a postcard written on the 17th June 1916 by Vaishnu Das to Hira Lal Kapur, and Exhibit H. P. 13, a postcard dated 18th June 1916 addressed to Mahant Vaishnu Das and signed by Hira Lal Kapur, prove the great interest that Hira Lal Kapur was taking in the case in which Vaishnu Das was concerned.

(ii). The evidence of Harbans Singh (P. W. No. 35) and his Hotel registers (Exhibits H. P. 4 and 5) prove that Hira Lal Kapur and Vaishnu Das went together to the Punjab Hotel at Simla on the morning of the 26th May 1916, that Hira Lal wrote the name of Vaishnu Das in the register as one of his party, that they all left on the evening of the same day and that Hira Lal Kapur paid the expenses of the party.

(iii). Finally, it is in evidence that Hira Lal Kapur and Mr. Bhan were well known to each other. Ganga Parshad (P.

W. No. 43) proves that Hira Lal had charge of Mr. Bhan's house in Lahore in 1914-15, a fact which is further proved by the two cheques drawn by Hira Lal Kapur in favour of Mr. Bhan (Exhibits 35 and 36 and letter Exhibit H. F. 38 and cheque H. P. 39) as explained by Faqir Chand D. W. No. 2.

For the defence it is urged that this case has been engineered against Hira Lal by Pandit Ram Bhaj Datt and his brother Jaswant Rai, a Gurdaspur Pleader, and by Sardar Bahadur Sukha Singh all of whom bear enmity towards the appellant. We have carefully considered all that Mr. Beechey had to urge with regard to this alleged enmity on the part not only of the three persons above named but also of the Gurdaspur Pleaders and Barristers as a whole, but we are unable to find any real foundation for the charge brought against those persons. There is nothing to show that Pandit Rambhaj Datt took any part in getting up this case against Mr. Bhan and Hira Lal Kapur, and the part which Jaswant Rai, as one of the Gurdaspur Pleaders, took in the proceedings was very minor and in no way suggests any particular animosity on his part. No attempt was made to show that any of the other members of the Gurdaspur Bar Association were inimically disposed towards Hira Lal Kapur, whatever may have been their feelings against Mr. Tej Bhan.

As regards Sardar Bahadur Sukha Singh, the allegation is that he lent his aid to this conspiracy against Hira Lal Kapur, because the latter (1) in 1906 published an article in his vernacular paper, the "Samachar," severely reflecting on Sukha Singh's official conduct in a certain case; (2) was responsible for the eviction of Sardar Sukha Singh from a house which he had taken in Kucha Saroopo, Lahore, some 2 or 3 years ago; and (3) had in October 1916 given grave offence to Sukha Singh by insisting on his withdrawing from a tent in front of which the members of the "Serving Club" (of which Hira Lal was president) were about to be photographed.

It is difficult to deal seriously with these absurd allegations, and we do not think we need say more than that, as regards the first, the article was written about 12 years ago, mentions no Police Officer by name and that Sukha Singh was not the only Inspector concerned in the proceeding-; as regards the second, that Sukha Singh has explained that he left the house because plague had broken out in the neighbourhood and that the sole witness who deposes to his alleged involuntary eviction is one Mnl Chand, the brother-in-law of Hira Lal; and as regards the third, that the witness who refers to it (Bhagat Singh, P. W. No. 25) admits that Sukha Singh on hearing that objection was taken to his presence in the tent, got up and went away and that there was no further conversation on the subject. It is putting a premium on our credulity to ask us to believe that for reasons such as these a responsible Police Officer of Sukha Singh's standing would deliberately join a conspiracy to ruin Hira Lal who was not, moreover, the person against whom investigation was primarily directed.

So far then as we can gather from the materials before us, there was no such conspiracy on the part of the Pleaders and Sukha Singh, and no attempt was made to show that Vaishnu Das, Harbhaj Rai and Beli Ram or any of them had any reasons to implicate an innocent man in this case. As a matter of fact Hira Lal had in June 1917 (after the Police investigation had commenced) taken Harbhaj Rai into his employment and there is nothing on the record to justify the suggestion that Vaishnu Das, Harbhaj Rai and Beli Ram perjured themselves by falsely and maliciously dragging into the case a man, who, for ought the Police knew, had no connection with it. The investigation was directed against Mr. Tej Bhan and it was against him and not against any other individual that the Police were searching for evidence.

The result of our conclusions then is that there is no foundation for the contention that Hira Lal has been implicated falsely owing to enmity, and the sole question that remains is whether the witnesses who give evidence against him are to be believed. Two of them no doubt are accomplices, but the evidence of these two is materially corroborated by the evidence of Beli Ram, who is in no sense an accomplice, and by the admitted facts that Hira Lal did go up to Simla on the 26th May, stayed at the same hotel there with Vaishnu Das, returned to Lahore on the same date and in the same train by which Vaishnu Das travelled and subsequently corresponded and sympathised with Vaishnu Das about the result of the latter's case. Hira Lal explains that he suddenly decided to visit Simla and by a curious coincidence actually went there on the very day that Vaishnu Das arrived, because he had thought of opening an agency there for the benefit of one Mohkam Chand, the son of Lala Hari Chand, a Magistrate at present in Lahore. In support of this explanation he called four witnesses, (1) Balmokand (D. W. No. 7), a member of his own brotherhood; (2) Munshi Ram (D. W. No. 11) his servant (who, however, deposes that the agency was to be opened for his benefit); (3) Kartar Singh (D. W. No. 21) another servant of his; and (4) Kahan Chand (D. W. No. 22) whom he has recently appointed Editor of his vernacular paper. On the other hand Fakir Chand (D. W. No. 2), who has for many years been a trusted employee of his and whom he is said to regard as a son, admits that until Hira Lal's return on the 27th May he had not heard of the idea of opening a Simla agency and neither Mohkam Chand nor Lala Hari Chand (who would have been a witness of great weight) was called to corroborate the story that Lala Hari Chand had asked Lala Hira Lal to start this agency for the benefit of his son. Furthermore, it is an extraordinary fact that after taking the trouble and incurring the expense of a journey to Simla from Lahore at the end of May, Hira Lal on his arrival there merely spent an hour or two in wandering aimlessly about the place and though anxious to secure premises for the business, paid no visits to any of the house or estate agents in Simla. His explanation is indeed absurd and we have no hesitation in rejecting it.

The result is that we are satisfied that Lala Hira Lal Kapur did accept Rs. 300 from Vaishnu Das as a motive or reward for inducing by corrupt or illegal means or by personal influence Mr. Tej Bhan, a public servant, to show favour to the said Vaishnu Das in the exercise of his official functions as Senior Subordinate Judge and that he thereby committed an offence punishable under section 162, Indian Penal Code.

As regards the second charge it is not proved that Mrs. Tej Bhan actually accepted the Rs. 3,000, but we have no doubt that Hira Lal Kapur did attempt to abet the acceptance by her of the said sum with a view to inducing her by such corrupt or illegal means or by personal influence to induce her husband Mr. Tej Bhan, a public servant as aforesaid, to show favour to Vaishnu Das in the exercise of his official functions. Hira Lal Kapur is thus guilty upon the second charge of an offence punishable under sections 163/116, Indian Penal Code, and is, therefore, liable to three months' simple imprisonment and fine. We alter the conviction accordingly and in lieu of the sentence awarded by the Magistrate, we sentence Hira Lal Kapur under sections 163/116, Indian Penal Code, to three months' simple imprisonment and to a fine of Rs. 200 or in default of payment to a further period of 2 weeks' simple imprisonment. The substantive sentence of imprisonment in this latter case to run concurrently with the substantive sentence of imprisonment upon the first charge.

The conviction and sentence upon the first charge are upheld.

Appellant must surrender to his bail and undergo the sentence of imprisonment awarded to him.

Sentence reduced.

JUDGMENT.

CHITTY, J.—The appellant Rokun Ali was convicted by the 4th Presidency Magistrate of an offence under section 9 of Act I of 1878, that is to say, of being in possession of opium without a license, and was sentenced to nine months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 300. The case for the prosecution depended on the evidence of the Excise Officers—Inspector Dinesh Chandra Sen Gupta, Sub-Inspector, Kiran Chandra Guha and Mojjum Hussain. There is also the evidence of Abdul Aziz the diver, who recovered a bundle of opium from the river, and of Tookal Ali Guasi, a Jamadar. On the second day of hearing Rai Sahib S. K. Baha, the Superintendent of Excise, was also called and he spoke to an admission made by the appellant, in which he confessed to being in possession of the opium and explained that he was taking it for shipment on a steamer on account of a Chinaman, whom he suggested the Superintendent should endeavour to arrest. The appellant called on his behalf a number of Customs Officers—three of whom deposed, directly contrary to the story for the prosecution, that the appellant had been arrested not in the boat, as alleged by the Excise Officers, but on the shore, and that no opium was in fact found in the boat. The learned Presidency Magistrate disbelieved the evidence of these witnesses, pointing out a number of discrepancies in their statements and also finding that they had come forward to give false evidence in consequence of their jealousy and chagrin at having been deprived of the case by the Excise Officers. The only question before us is whether the evidence of the Excise Officers is to be preferred to the statements of the appellant and his witnesses.

A question, however, of law arose with regard to the admissibility of two pieces of evidence with which it will be convenient first to deal. Mr. Fitzgerald, the Inspector of Customs, was called and was asked to corroborate the statements from the posting register in order to show that the Preventive Officers were in fact at or near Prinsep's Ghat on the night in question, i. e., 22nd and 23rd August. This was disallowed. The recollection of the learned Counsel and Pleader on either side is not the same with regard to what took place in the Police Court; but it appears from Mr. Fitzgerald's statement that he declined to put in the book as it was a confidential book. The defence now say that this plea of privilege was put forward by him at the instance of the prosecution. However that may be, it is obvious that no question of privilege could arise in respect of this posting register. There might be entries in that book which were privileged and could not be disclosed, but the entry in question is merely a note of the times when particular Preventive Officers were ordered to be at their stations. It is obvious, therefore, that it did not refer to matters of State which could be excluded from disclosure under section 123 or 162 of the Evidence Act. The other question was also one of privilege in regard to Mr. Boyd's evidence. Mr. Boyd, the Superintendent of the Customs Preventive Service, was called and the defence wished to find out from him whether or not Inspector Dinesh Chandra Sen Gupta had made a particular admission on the morning of the 14th, when admittedly Mr. Boyd and Mr. Raha had a conference and the witnesses Dinesh Chandra Sen Gupta, Thomson and Fitzgerald were present. Mr. Boyd appears to have stated that he treated what took place at that interview as confidential; in other words, he claimed privilege under section 124 of the Evidence Act. As to this, again, there can be no question of privilege. What took place between Mr. Raha and Mr. Boyd might possibly be privileged under that section, but that one of the subordinate officers had made a statement regarding the events of that particular night in the hearing of the various people at that conference could not possibly be withheld from the Court under that section. We accordingly intimated that we would record the evidence of these two witnesses on the two points referred to. They were called before us on Tuesday last and further examined. Their examination did not carry the case any further as neither of them remembered what had taken place, nor could they say definitely that Dinesh Chandra Sen Gupta had, in fact, made any such statement. The posting register was produced and put in. That, too, does not carry the case very much further, as it only shows orders that particular officers should be at particular places at particular times. There seems to be no reason to suppose that these Customs Officers were not at or near Prinsep's Ghat sometime or another on the night in question. They obviously interfered to some extent in the proceedings, but that does not mean that they were there precisely at the point of time, i. e., 9 p. m. or just before, when the appellant was arrested by the Inspector of Excise.

The evidence of the prosecution witnesses shows that, acting on the information of an informer, the Inspector of Excise came up from Babu Ghat in a boat to Prinsep's Ghat arriving there just before 9 p. m. Just off the Prinsep's Ghat he came alongside the boat in which were the appellant and two other Mohammadans. The other two Mohammadans at once jumped into the river and swam away. The appellant is said to have taken up a bundle in the boat and thrown it into the water. He was then arrested by the Inspector and another bundle containing opium was found in the boat. He was then put under arrest and brought to the shore. On the shore another man was certainly arrested but he was let go for want of anything to incriminate him. The appellant was detained at the Ghat, to which the Inspector's taxi had come, for some hours, while the Excise Officers sent for divers and endeavoured to recover the bundle which was thrown into the river. It was not recovered that night and the appellant was accordingly removed in custody. Early the next morning the divers, after long operations, were successful and the second bundle was recovered and was found to contain a large quantity of opium. The amount of opium seized altogether amounted to between 50 and 60 seers.

ROKUN ALI V. EMPEROR.

The appellant's case, as stated in his plea to the Magistrate on 26th September, was that he had been arrested on the shore and that no opium was, in fact, found on the boat. To corroborate this plea the witnesses for the defence were called. The only question is whether they can possibly be believed.

The evidence for the prosecution is perfectly clear and it cannot be disputed that the opium was found on that night in the manner stated by them. The only question really is whether the appellant was the man who threw one of the bundles into the river and was arrested on the boat in possession of the other one. There seems to be no reason to disbelieve the statements of these witnesses who have given their evidence very fairly. It was argued that if there were discrepancies in the defence evidence there were equal discrepancies in that for the prosecution. The discrepancies, however, which the learned Counsel endeavoured to point out, seem to be really no discrepancies at all. They amount rather to a statement by one witness on a particular point and an admission to another witness that he did not see or had no knowledge of the fact deposed.

There is also the important evidence for the prosecution of the Superintendent of Excise. It was stated that the confession made by the accused to him on the 24th was inadmissible in evidence. There is, however, no suggestion of anything like inducement, threat or promise which would shut it out under section 24 of the Evidence Act. Then it was argued that the evidence of that confession was produced at a very late stage. The first hearing of the case was on 26th September. On that day in the cross-examination of the Inspector Dinesh Chunder Sen Gupta it was elicited not only that the appellant had made an admission to him but also that he had made a further admission to Mr. Raha. Mr. Raha was not that day present in Court. He attended, however, at the next hearing, i. e., 3rd October and gave evidence with regard to this confession by the accused. There does not seem to have been such delay as would cast a doubt on the accuracy of the Superintendent's statement. There is no reason to suppose that he was called at the later stage to bolster up what might be a failing case, nor that he would deliberately come forward to perjure himself for the mere sake of obtaining a conviction against the appellant.

Turning to the evidence of the defence, the learned Presidency Magistrate has pointed out a number of inconsistencies in their statements which are more serious. It is unnecessary for us to recapitulate them at this stage. It is sufficient to say that the view that the Magistrate has taken on this point appears to be quite correct.

The most important witness called for the defence is Mr. Thomson. I am sorry to have to say it, but it does appear to me that he has deliberately come to support what was a false case. The evidence which he gave is altogether improbable and incredible. At one time he says that the Excise Officer offered to give him the case and be a witness against the accused. At another time he says that he found no opium in the boat, that the accused was not arrested in the boat, that he was arrested on the shore, that there was really no case against the accused and there was, therefore no case for either the Excise Authorities or the Customs Authorities to take up. At the same time he says that he complained to Mr. Boyd that he had been done out of a big haul by the Excise Officers. If there was no such case, it does not appear how he could have been "done out of a big haul." Also he does not explain how or why, if there was a case against some man other than the appellant, the appellant should have been arrested and a false case preferred against him while the true culprit was let go. The reason for these Customs Officials coming forward is not far to seek. The Magistrate at once detected it and his opinion appears to be correct. They were disappointed that the Excise Officers should have made this capture and thus deprived the Customs Officers of a possible reward. We ascertained from Mr. Boyd that rewards are given in those cases, and that, while there is no fixed scale for rewards, the officers may reasonably expect to be rewarded, more or less, in proportion to the quantity of the opium or other article seized.

There is another witness to whom we should refer, viz., the taxi-driver. It is to be regretted that the Inspector of Excise did not take the number of his taxi-cab; but it does not appear that the witness Raham Ali was really the driver of the taxi which was at Prinsep's Ghat on that night. It would be very easy no doubt to get a taxi-driver to come forward and give evidence to this effect. He does not verify his statements in any way. So also the defence witness No. 7, Jadu Nandan Roy, Constable, who states that the accused was made over into his custody. It is an extraordinary thing, if he was there at that time and had the accused in his charge, that he made no report of the circumstance, nor is it shown that he was in point of fact on duty at Prinsep's Ghat. He states that he really was on duty that night at Baba Ghat, that he came to Prinsep's Ghat and there saw the Inspector Dinesh Chunder Sen Gupta and the others.

On the whole evidence, there can be no doubt that the conviction of the accused is correct, and, under the circumstances, the punishment does not appear to be too severe. The appeal is accordingly dismissed. The accused must surrender to his bail and serve out the remainder of his sentence.

SMITHER, J.—I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

It is imperative for a Magistrate to give reasons under section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code before postponing the issue of process against the accused. [p. 288, col. 1.]

It is not right for a Court in a judicial enquiry before process has been issued against the accused to allow the latter to attend at the preliminary enquiry and cross-examine the prosecution witnesses. [p. 288, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an application against the order of the Sessions Judge of Monghyr, dated the 12th November 1917, upholding an order of the Deputy Magistrate of that District, dated the 31st August 1917, dismissing the complaint of the petitioner under section 203, Criminal Procedure Code. The grounds urged in support of the petition are as follows:—

Firstly, that the Magistrate should not have postponed the issue of process against the accused and held the enquiry under section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code without recording his reasons for distrusting the complaint of the petitioner.

Secondly, that the Magistrate acted illegally in allowing the accused to be present during the enquiry and to be represented by Counsel in order to examine the prosecution witnesses and also in examining defence witnesses. The complaint was lodged in the Court of the Magistrate in charge, Mr. A. Majid, on the 13th August 1917 and was made over to N. S. E. Hussain for disposal, with a suggestion that a local enquiry should be quickly made under Government Standing Order, as the complaint was against Police Officers. On the 14th August 1917, Mr. Hossain examined the complainant on oath and passed the following order:—"I will hold a local enquiry on the 16th instant. Send a copy of the complaint to the S. P. for the needful".

It is contended by the learned Government Advocate that this amounts to a recording of reasons for not issuing process against the accused, as the Magistrate thought in his mind that a local enquiry was necessary in order to satisfy himself as to the necessity of issuing any process. Reading the above order regarding the holding of the local enquiry in conjunction with the order of the Magistrate in charge of the 13th August suggesting a local enquiry to be made, it appears to me that the Deputy Magistrate acted upon the suggestion offered to him and not because he distrusted the complaint of the petitioner. I do not think that in the circumstances of the case he exercised any judgment in the matter and held upon a consideration of the complaint and the statement made on oath by the petitioner that it was a case in which process against the accused ought not to issue. It was to my mind an automatic order made by him. This no doubt is a contravention of the requirements of section 202, which is imperative in requiring the Magistrate to give reasons before postponing the issue of process. The point is so well settled that I need hardly quote authorities in support of it.

The second point urged by the learned Counsel for the petitioner also appears to be well founded. It is not at all right for the Court that in a judicial enquiry, before a process has been issued against the accused under section 204, Criminal Procedure Code, the accused should be required to attend at a preliminary enquiry and to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses. So far as the accused is concerned, it is clear that it is unfair to call upon him to appear and to undergo the trouble and expense of conducting the case, unless the Magistrate had found upon the complaint in the enquiry made by him that there was a prima facie case and that he should be summoned as an accused in the case. And what is true as to the accused is also true so far as the complainant is concerned. It was pointed out in the case of Emperor v. Bhika Hussein (1) that there is no justification to call upon the accused to be present at a judicial enquiry under section 202. It was observed as follows :—"Now that would be as unfair to the complainant as the converse procedure would be to the accused." There can be no manner of doubt that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was unwarranted by the Code. In this matter also it appears to me that the Magistrate was misled by the wrong interpretation of the meaning of the Government Circular regarding investigation into a complaint made against Police Officers of certain grades. I agree with what has been said in the ruling quoted above regarding the Government Circular at page 887 that it was never intended that the Circular was in any way to affect the procedure prescribed by the Code of Criminal Procedure. I, therefore, agree with the contention of the learned Counsel for the petitioner that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was against the procedure prescribed by law.

The question then arises, whether it is a case in which this Court should interfere in revision and set aside the order of dismissal passed by the Magistrate and direct a fresh enquiry into the complaint of the petitioner. Both the errors complained of relate to the procedure adopted by the Magistrate in ordering and conducting the enquiry before him under section 202. It is a well-settled principle of law that errors of procedure would not vitiate the proceeding or order passed therein unless it has occasioned failure of justice. In the present case on behalf of the prosecution witnesses, numbering about 10, were examined by the Magistrate and no complaint has been made by the learned Counsel for the petitioner before me that any evidence on behalf of the prosecution was shut out. The learned Sessions Judge has carefully considered the evidence in the case and has written a lengthy judgment consisting of over three typed pages. He has also left out of consideration the evidence adduced by the defence in the case and on a consideration entirely of the evidence offered by the complainant has come to the conclusion that the complainant has failed to make out any case against the accused. The case has, therefore, been considered on merits and I do not think that the petitioner was in any way prejudiced on account of the errors referred to above. The principle enunciated in the case of In the matter of Turibullah (2) appears to me to apply to this case. None of the cases referred to on behalf of the petitioner shows that all the evidence on behalf of the prosecution was taken by the Magistrate and the case was disposed of on a full consideration of the evidence. I therefore, reject the application.

Rule discharged.

A custom set up by a tenant that the entire rent in respect of a certain quality of land must be remitted when the lands are inundated, irrespective of the extent of the flood or its destructive effect on the crops, is vague and unreasonable and therefore cannot be valid according to law. JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for recovery of arrears of rent. The case for the plaintiff is that rent is payable at the rate of

Rs. 77-10-0 per annum for the disputed holding, which comprises 25 bighas 18 cottahs and 2 chhataks of land. The defendants allege that the area comprises two classes of land, namely, 3 cottahs and 7 chhataks of nihaia lands, for which a rent of Rs. 1 is payable and 25 bighas 14 cottahs and 11 chhataks of hajabad lands, for which a rent of Rs. 76-10-0 is payable. It is thus clear that there is no dispute between the parties either as to the area or the annual rent payable in respect thereof. The defendants, however, set up a customary right to abatement of rent on account of the hajabad lands. They assert that the nihaia lands are free from inundation and are always subject to payment of rent, while the hajabad lands are liable to inundation and are exempt from payment of rent when the crops thereon are destroyed by inundation. They allege that this custom has prevailed in the estate of the plaintiff as also in adjacent estates from time immemorial and from generation to generation. The custom is formulated in the following terms in the written statement: "In the years of inundations, the Zamindar never gets rent on account of the hajabad portions, nor do the tenants pay them; in the years of inundations, the tenants only pay rents for the nihaia portions." The defendants assert that, during one of the four years for which rent is claimed, there was inundation and they are entitled to reduction of rent, not as a matter of favour but on the basis of customary right. On these pleadings, the point arose for determination, "whether there is any custom in Mauza Kumdhara (where the defendants' lands are situate) of remitting rent in the years in which there is haja or inundation." The Courts below have found on this question in favour of defendants and have partially decreed the claim accordingly. On the present appeal, the decision of the District Judge has been assailed on the ground that the custom alleged is unreasonable and uncertain and that there is no evidence to show that it is compulsory on the landlord to allow abatement of rent on account of inundation.

It has not been disputed before us on behalf of the tenants that the alleged custom, in order that it may be deemed valid in law, must be proved to be reasonable and certain

DANBY V. TAFAZUL HUSSAIN.

[Tyson v. Smith (1) and Mahamaya Debi v. Haridas Haldar (2)]. The landlord-appellant urges that the custom is unreasonable. As explained in the second of the two cases just mentioned, if the validity of a custom is challenged on the ground that it is against reason, the reason referred to is not to be understood as meaning every unlearned man's reason, but artificial and legal reason warranted by authority of law. Consequently, when it is said that "a custom is void because it is unreasonable," what is meant is that the unreasonable character of the alleged custom conclusively proves that the usage, even though it may have existed from time immemorial, must have resulted from accident or indulgence and not from any right conferred in ancient times [Salisbury v. Gladstone (3)]. It is obvious that a custom which is prejudicial to a class and is beneficial only to a particular individual is repugnant to the law of reason. On this principle, it has been ruled that a custom in a manor that the commoner cannot turn in his cattle until the lord has put in his own, is bad, for it is injurious to the multitude and beneficial only to the lord [Tanistry's case (4)]. Similarly, it is no good custom that the lord of the manor shall detain a distress taken upon the demesne till a fine at his will is paid for the damage. Various other instances of customs between landlords and tenants, which have been considered unreasonable and consequently unenforceable in law, will be found collected in Viner's Abridgment (Volume VII, pages 180-185, Customs E. G.). The test applied is whether the custom would have a lawful commencement. Now, in the case before us, the custom pleaded is that the rent must be abated when the lands are inundated; in other words, the entire rent for the hajabad lands must be remitted, irrespective of the extent of the destructive effect of the inundation on the crops. The alleged custom is obviously unreasonable. It is also uncertain, if the landlord is bound to grant a remission without reference to the actual effect of the flood on the holding. The custom pleaded is thus of a very vague character, and, read literally, would lead to this ridiculous and unreasonable result that the entire rent for what is called the hajabad lands must be suspended irrespective of the extent of the flood or its actual destructive effect. We are of opinion that the alleged custom does not afford a valid defence to the claim.

The result is that this appeal must be allowed and the suit decreed with costs in all the Courts. This judgment will govern the other appeal in which a similar order will be drawn up.

Appeals allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 109, (1), XLI, r. 23—Decree reversed on preliminary point—Remand for re-trial on merits, whether "final order"—Leave to appeal to Privy Council.

An order of the High Court, setting aside a decision of the lower Court that the trial of the suit is barred by res judicata and remanding the suit for re-trial on the merits, is an ordinary order of remand which does not decide any of the questions between the parties, except that the suit is not barred by the rule of res judicata, and is not a "final order" within the meaning of section 109 of the Civil Procedure Code in respect of which leave to appeal to the Privy Council can be granted. JUDGMENT.

CHAMIER, C. J. — This is an application by some of the defendants in the suit for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against an order of this Court setting aside the decision of the Subordinate Judge that the trial of the suit was barred by the rule of res judicata and remanding the suit for re trial on the merits. The plaintiff in the present suit, Syed Tafazul Hussain, was a party defendant to a previous suit brought upon a mortgage. It appears that he was made a party to that suit because he set up a deed of gift in respect of the village. His case was that the mortgagor had no right to mortgage the village in question. In the opinion of the learned Judges who decided the appeal to this Court the question of the title of the plaintiff to the village in suit was not decided by the Court which tried the mortgage suit. It is contended that the order of remand passed by this Court is a final order within the meaning of section 109 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The question what is and what is not a final order within the meaning of this section or the corresponding section of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, has been considered in several cases. The first case to which I need refer is that of Saiyid Muzhar Hussain v. Musammat Bodha Bibi (1). The case of the plaintiff there was that one Ibn Ali had by his Will given the property in suit to certain persons who had conveyed it to the plaintiff. Several defences were put forward. One was of a preliminary nature, namely, that there was a misjoinder, and that was overruled. The next defence went to the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, being a denial that Ibn Ali made any valid gift to the persons through whom the plaintiff claimed. The Subordinate Judge took evidence and heard the case. He decided against the plaintiff on the question of Ibn Ali's Will and that made it unnecessary for him to decide the other issues. The plaintiff appealed and the High Court decided that Ibn Ali had made a valid gift, and they remanded the case under section 562 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1862, to be disposed of on the other issues according to law. The defendant applied to the High Court for leave to appeal but leave was refused on the ground that the order was not final. On an application for special leave to appeal, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that leave ought to have been given. They pointed out that all the questions in the suit except that of the Will of Ibn Ali were of a subordinate character and with reference to a statement in the High Court's order that it was the established practice of the Court to treat such orders of remand as not being final, their Lordships said: "Probably the practice referred to is quite correct. But then the remand contemplated by section 562 is one made in a case where the first Court has disposed of the suit on a preliminary point so as to exclude evidence of essential facts. That is not the present case. The only preliminary point was the misjoinder. To establish the Will of Ibn Ali was the first step in the plaintiff's case and on her failing in that, her whole suit failed."

In the case of Habil-un-nissa v. Munawar-un-nissa (2) the first Court had dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground of limitation. On appeal the High Court held that the suit was within time and remanded the suit for retrial under section 562 of the Code of Civil Procedure. After referring to the case of Saiyid Muzhar Hussain v. Musammat Bodha Bibi (1), their Lordships refused to give leave to appeal, saying that the appellate order of the High Court reversing the decree of the Court of first instance on the question of limitation left the parties open to contest their rights and claims on every other point. What was said in that case appears to me to apply forcibly to the present case. The order of remand passed by this Court leaves it open to the parties to contest their rights and claims on every point in the case. The applicant has relied upon two cases. The first is that of Rahimbhoy Habibbhoy v. Turner (3), in which a Court had passed a decree directing the taking of accounts against the defendant. Their Lordships held that the defendant was entitled to appeal. They said: "It is true that the decree that was made does not declare in terms the liability of the defendant, but it directs accounts to be taken which he was contending ought not to be taken at all, and it must be held that the decree contains within itself an assertion that, if a balance is found against the defendant on those accounts, the defendant is bound to pay it. Therefore the form of the decree is exactly as if it affirmed the liability of the defendant to pay something on each of these claims if only the arithmetical result of the account should be worked out against him." That case is obviously distinguishable from the present case. The second case relied upon by the applicant is that of Ananda Gopal Gossain v. Nafar Chandra Pal Chowdhry (4). In that case the plaintiffs in the suit had purchased a patni mahal sold for its own arrears with power to annul all encumbrances and they brought a suit apparently to establish their right to hold the property free of a dar-patni right set up by some of the defendants. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the plaintiffs had failed to prove the service of notices in the manner required by section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. On appeal the High Court held that the service of notices in the manner required by the Act had been proved and they remanded the cases for trial on the merits. The defendant applied for leave to appeal and the High Court allowed the application, saying that the cardinal point in the suit was whether the notices had been properly served. That case is also clearly distinguishable from the present case, for in that case the decision of the question of the service of the notices, practically speaking, put an end to the case. In the present case we have an ordinary order of remand which does not decide any of the questions in dispute between the parties except that the suit is not barred by the rule of res judicata. It appears to me that if we were to give leave to appeal in the present case, we should have to give leave to appeal in every case in which this Court reverses the decision of a Subordinate Judge on a preliminary point and remands the case for trial on the merits. I would dismiss this application with costs. Hearing fee three gold mohurs.

Where there was no clear proof of dedication in regard to a village, but it was found that for more than 200 years the village had been incorporated with a particular asthan, had been held by its mahant from time to time and had been treated as a part of the asthan property:

Held, that under these circumstances a dedication either by the mahant to whom the village had originally been granted or by one of the persons who succeeded him might be presumed. [p. 293, col. 2.]

Where a tenure is in the nature of a trust for a charitable purpose, the trustee has no right to transfer the same except for legal necessity. [p. 293, col. 2, p. 294, col. 1.]

Article 134, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act governs a suit instituted by a succeeding mahant of an asthan for possession of property appertaining to the asthan by setting aside an alienation for valuable consideration made by the preceding mahant in respect of that property. If such a suit is brought beyond 12 years from the date of such an alienation, it is barred by time to the extent of the interest which the alienation purports to convey, inasmuch as each succeeding mahant does not get a fresh start of limitation on the ground of his not deriving title from any previous mahant. JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to the village Beniban, otherwise known as Benipur, which was founded by an ascetic named Beni Bar sometime in 1670 A. D. The village was granted to Beni Ban by the Emperor Aurangzeb. Beni Ban cleared the jungle and populated a hamlet there, to which he gave his name. Beni Ban died apparently without leaving any disciple and the village came into the possession of the holder for the time being of the parent asthan at Srinagar, district

LASERO BAN v. RAM SARAN.

Gonda, which was founded by Sahaj Ban, the preceptor of Beni Ban. Upon the restoration of British rule after the Mutiny Drigraj Ban, a successor of Sahaj Ban, was found in possession of the property appertaining to the Srinagar asthan, including the village Beniban.

On the 27th July 1862 a sanad was granted to him in regard to the village Beniban, maintaining the muafi tenure for his life (Exhibit A-1). In 1864 owing to the death of Drigraj Ban the muafi was resumed, and the village was settled with Narindra Ban, his disciple and successor. Narindra Ban appears to have died soon after and was succeeded by his disciple Nageshwar Ban. On the 27th January 1873 the Settlement Court decreed the village in favour of the heirs of Narindra Ban (Exhibit A-2). In pursuance of that decree, Nageshwar Ban was in possession of the village and mortgaged it with possession for Rs. 1,000 in favour of Ghirrao Misra, the predecessor-in-title of the defendants-respondents, on the 30th June 1883 (Exhibit A-4). On the 23rd May 1892 his disciple and successor Narbadeshwar Ban mortgaged the same with possession in favour of Ghirrao Misra in lieu of Rs. 2,000, half of which went to pay the prior mortgage effected by Nageshwar Ban (Exhibit A-3).

On the 28th May 1898 he took a fresh loan of Rs. 1,000 from Ghirrao Misra and executed a mortgage in his favour for Rs. 3,000, out of which Rs. 2,000 went to satisfy his previous mortgage (Exhibit A-5). He gave possession of the village in lieu of Rs. 2,000 and agreed to pay the balance with interest at 12-annas per cent. per mensem. The mortgage was effected for a period of 51 years and one of the conditions in the mortgage-deed was that if the mortgagor failed to pay interest on Rs. 1,000 every three years, he shall be liable to pay compound interest thereon at the same rate and the mortgagee shall be entitled to recover the said money with compound interest due to him from the property mortgaged at any time he liked.

The plaintiff is the disciple and successor of Narbadeshwar Ban. His allegation is that the property mortgaged appertained to the asthan at Srinagar and was endowed for the expense of the asthan and other charitable purposes, that the mahant had no right to mortgage the same, and that on his death in 1904 the plaintiff became entitled to the possession of the said property.

The defendants denied that the property in suit appertained to the asthan at Srinagar or was endowed for its use. They pleaded that they and their predecessor-in-interest, Ghirrao Misra, had been in possession of the said property since 1833 and that the debts in question were contracted for legal necessity and were in any event binding on the plaintiff. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the claim, holding that it was barred by Article 134 of the Indian Limitation Act.

It is not clear from the wajib-ul-arz of the village Beniban (Exhibit 1) whether the said village was granted to Beni Ban for religious or charitable purposes. In the wajib-ul-arz of the village Srinagar (Exhibit 4) there is similarly no mention that the village was given to Sahaj Ban for religious or charitable purposes; but from the statements made at the time of the summary settlement by Drigraj Ban (Exhibit 6) and the report and the statement of the Qanungo then made (Exhibits 5 and A-21) there can be no doubt that the property appertained to the asthan at Srinagar and was intended for the feeding of fagirs and the distribution of charity (waste khairat salabart faqiran). There is no clear proof of a dedication in regard to the village Beniban, but from the fact that from more than 200 years the village has been incorporated with the asthan at Srinagar and held by its mahant from time to time and treated as a part of the asthan property, a dedication either by Beni Ban or by one of the persons who succeeded him may be presumed. The sanad granted to Drigraj Ban merely maintained the muafi tenure for his life. It did not give him greater rights than the nature of the tenure held by him permitted. In other words, the sanad left the tenure intact, and if the tenure was in the nature of a trust for a charitable purpose, Mahant Narbadeshwar Ban, who succeeded in the tenure, had, as pointed out in Dhar v. Dharam Das (1) and Murugesam Pillai v. Gnana Sambanda

SRIKISHUN PRASAD v. JEQHASI KUER.

Pandur: Sannadhi (2), no right to mortgage the same except for legal necessity.

The plaintiff ought, however, to have sued to contest the mortgage within the period allowed by Article 134 of the Indian Limitation Act. It is true, said their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Prosuvo Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Baboo (3), that the idol can hold property only in an ideal sense and that its acts relating to any property must be done by or through a manager or sebat. But it does not follow that each succeeding manager gets a fresh start as far as the question of limitation is concerned, upon the ground of his not deriving a title from any previous manager. The succeeding sebats, as pointed out in Nilmony Singh v. Jagabandhu Roy (4), form "a continuing representation of the idol's property". The same may be said in regard to the property held by a trustee, and a suit brought beyond 12 years from the date of the alienation for valuable consideration by a trustee may be barred by time to the extent of the interest which the alienation purports to convey.

No question of fraud arises in this case, for the mortgagee has been in possession since 1823. In Dattagiri v. Dattatraya (5) and Behari Lal v. Muhammad Muttaki (6) it was held in somewhat similar circumstances that the claim to set aside a sale or mortgage effected by a trustee and to recover possession of the property sold or mortgaged was barred, if not brought within 12 years from the date of the alienation.

The mortgagor had under the sanad either an absolute interest or the interest of a trustee under the tenure, which the sanad confirmed. He did not, in any case, hold an estate for life. The subsistence of the mortgage cannot, therefore, be impeached on that ground. In Muthusamier v. Sree Sree Methanithi Swamiyar Atergal (7) a lease effected by the head of a math was held to subsist only for the lifetime of the lessor, but as pointed out in Abhiram Govem v. Sityama Charan Nandi (8) and Ishwar Shyam Chand Jiu v. Ram Kanci Ghose (9) a lease may not amount to an alienation of the corpus of the estate and the position of a mortgagee in possession is not quite analogous.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff suggests that his client might be allowed to redeem the mortgage in derogation of the term of 51 years fixed for redemption. No claim for redemption was, however, laid in the plaint and it is not consequently necessary to determine whether the term of 51 years operated as a clog on the equity of redemption or not.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

SRIKISHUN PRASAD v. JECHASI KUEB.

of the receipt itself that the rent is paid in respect of a particular portion only of the holding this may be sufficient acknowledgment to bind the landlord. [p. 297, col. 1.]

Where a landlord repudiates the authority of a gomastha to give a receipt which recognises the sub-division of a tenure or holding, the onus of proof is ordinarily upon the landlord inasmuch as the relations between himself and his servant are a matter peculiarly within his knowledge under section 103 of the Evidence Act. [p. 298, col. 1.]

The "express consent in writing" required by section 58 of the Bengal Tenancy Act may be given by means of a rent receipt, and in each case the adequacy of the consent must be gathered from all the circumstances. A receipt showing the area of the transferred portion and the rent paid therefor should be sufficient to constitute express consent within the meaning of the section. [p. 298, col. 2; p. 299, col. 1.]

Section 88 of the Bengal Tenancy Act refers to a sole landlord or the entire body of joint landlords where there are more landlords than one. A division which does not bind the whole body of landlords does not come within the scope of the section. [p. 299, col. 1.]

There is no provision in the Bengal Tenancy Act which requires a landlord to recognize a distribution of rent. The landlord is authorised to do so, but the authority is derived not from the Act but under the general law as an incident to the ownership of property. [p. 299, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—The plaintiff, who is a co-sharer malik of Mauza Chak Sobhi alias Babhanjawan, instituted a rent suit against the defendant as tenant in respect of a holding said to comprise 5 bighas 1 cottah 13 dhurs for the years 1316 to 1321 F. S. The plaintiff's collection was separate from the other co-sharers and he claimed as his share the annual sum of Rs. 13 3 3 out of a total jama of Rs. 20 5 0. In addition to the 4 years' rent amounting to Rs. 52-13-0 he also claimed Rs. 13-3-3 on account of damages and interest until realisation.

The defendant, who is the widow of Deo Narain Singh, contended that the total rental according to the survey khatian was not Rs. 20 5 0 but Rs. 19 1-3 and further that her late husband Deo Narain, who was the original holder, sold a part of the holding to Uma Singh whose proportion of the total rent amounted to Rs. 10 4-0, leaving a balance of Rs. 8-13-3 payable for the part retained by Deo Narain. At the trial before the Munsif the survey khatian was accepted as showing the total rental and it was proved by a co-sharer malik with the plaintiff and by Sheonandan Raut, who acquired Oma Singh's interest, that the holding had been split up and that Uma Singh or his successors had in fact been paying Rs. 10 4-0 annually in respect of their portion of the holding, and the only question was whether this distribution of the rent was binding on the landlord. The Munsif found that it was and ordered that the plaintiff should recover his proportion of the Rs. 8-13-3 payable in respect of that part of the holding which had not been transferred together with proportionate costs and damages. The Sub-ordinate Judge in a somewhat perfunctory judgment upheld this decision and on appeal to a single Judge of this Court the case was remanded for the Subordinate Judge to determine the question whether the division of the holding had been made with "the express consent in writing" of the landlords or their authorised agent within section 58 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The learned Subordinate Judge on remand dealt with the evidence and came to the conclusion that the section had been complied with. The learned Judge of this Court who remanded the case upheld that view, holding that there was sufficient evidence to support the finding. The plaintiff being dissatisfied with that decision now brings this Letters Patent Appeal and contends that the evidence was not sufficient to warrant the finding that "the express consent in writing" of the landlord had been obtained. Before 1907 the section in question did not contain the word "express" before the words "consent in writing", nor did it contain the words which follow after the words "consent in writing", and the question we have to determine is whether the evidence is sufficient to prove that the division of the holding or the distribution of the rent payable in respect thereof was made with "the express consent in writing" of the landlord or his duly authorised agent in that behalf. It was conclusively proved that the holding had been split up, as contended for by the defendant, and that for several years the landlords had been in the habit of collecting the rent payable for the transferred portion from Uma

SRIKISHUN PRASAD V. JEOMASI KUER.

Singh and subsequently from his successors-in-title, and further the survey khatian shewed two khatas one in the name of Deo Narain and the other in the name of Uma Singh but the jama of Rs. 19-1-3 was not apportioned in the survey records. Rent receipts in respect to the portion of the rent then payable by Uma Singh were produced for the years 1309, 1313, 1314, 1315 and 1319 F. S. They shew an annual rent of Rs. 10-4-0 payable by Uma Singh and subsequently by his successors and Uma Singh is described in the first one as vendee. The first one is signed by Hardeo Panjiar, the plaintiff's father, as well as by Ramasis Pandey his agent. The others are signed by Ramasis only. They further shew that the holding of Uma Singh was 3 bighas 1 cottah 12 dhurs, which is a portion only of the total holding of 5 bighas 1 cottah 13 dhurs. They also shew that the plaintiff's share of the Rs. 10-4-0 rent was Rs. 6-10-4, the balance Rs. 3-9-8 being that of his co-sharers. The receipt for the year 1319 is for one of the years in respect to which the rent in this suit is claimed. Moreover, this receipt acknowledges payment of a further sum of Rs. 6-10-4 as arrears presumably for the year 1318. It would appear, therefore, that in regard to the first two years for which rent is claimed in this suit the plaintiff has already received payment for Uma Singh's portion and on this ground alone he ought not to be allowed to recover it a second time from the present defendant. No evidence was called by the plaintiff to rebut the presumption that arises from the rent receipts and I think it may legitimately be inferred from the receipt of 1319 that the arrears therein acknowledged were for the previous years. This, in my opinion, disposes of the plaintiff's claim for the first two years so far as Uma Singh's portion of the rent is concerned. As to the rest of the claim it remains to consider whether compliance with the section has been sufficiently proved.

A controversy leading to some difference of opinion as to whether rent receipts could in any case constitute "the consent in writing" prescribed by the section was finally set at rest by the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Pyari Mohun Mukhopadhyaya v. Gopal Park (1). The rent receipts in that case were granted by the landlord's gomashia and contained a recital that the defendant's name was registered in the landlord's sherista as tenant of a portion only of the original holding at a rent less than the original rent. It was held that this fulfilled the requirements of the section as then existing. In 1904 the case of Jnaendra Mohan Chowdhury v. Gopal Das Chowdhury (2) came before the Calcutta High Court. In that case the rent receipts contained nothing beyond an acknowledgment of the receipt of a certain sum from the defendant as rent of a certain talug. There was nothing to show that the rent was paid in respect of a portion only of the holding or that the defendant's name had been registered in the landlord's sherista as tenant of a divided portion. In fact the receipt showed nothing from which any inference could be drawn as to the division of the original holding or the landlord's consent. The Court held that such a receipt could not be taken as a fulfilment of the conditions of the section. It was laid down that payment by the tenant and receipt by the landlord of a portion of the original rent even extending over a number of years could not in itself afford evidence of the written consent of the landlord to a division of the holding, so as to substitute a new contract in place of the old. The facts of those two cases are separated by a wide gulf. In the first case the facts were clearly sufficient to show a written consent by or on behalf of the landlord; in the second they were just as clearly insufficient for that purpose. The case now under consideration comes midway between the two, and bears more resemblance to the later case of Abinash Chandra Chowdhury v. Purnananda Khan (3) decided by the High Court at Calcutta in 1913. In that case several tenants were sued jointly for the rent of a putni tenure. They objected that the suit was not maintainable against them jointly on the ground that the original rent had been apportioned to each of them in separate shares. They produced rent receipts granted to the tenants separately, which shewed the total rent and the portion allotted to each for their respective shares. The Court found on this evidence that there had been a sub-division of the tenure and a distribution of the rent consented to by the landlord. That case was decided after the amendment of the Bengal Tenancy Act in 1907 and once it is conceded that the granting of a rent receipt by the landlord or his agent may amount to "express consent" within the meaning of the section, it is only a question of determining what are the elements necessary to constitute such consent. It seems to me that the principle underlying these cases is that the mere acknowledgment of receipt of rent less than the total jama, without any indication that it is in respect of a portion only of the holding, cannot constitute a consent to a division of the holding even when continued over a number of years; but if it should clearly appear on the face of the receipt itself that the rent is paid in respect of a particular portion only of the holding, this may be a sufficient acknowledgment to bind the landlord. The present case is very near the line and although the conclusion to which I have come has been arrived at with some hesitation, I think on the whole the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge was justified by the proved facts of the case. The present receipts clearly show that Uma Singh's proportion of rent was paid in respect of a named area which was less than the total area of the holding, and the first in point of date which was signed by the landlord as well as by the agent described Uma Singh as vendee. This seems to me to amount to an acknowledgment in writing that the holding had been divided and a proportionate rent allotted to Uma Singh. The plaintiff's co-sharer Dhurendhar also supported the defendant's case and the fact that the plaintiff was endeavouring to recover from the defendant rent clearly proved to have been already collected from Uma Singh's successors, although perhaps not a material factor in determining the question under consideration, is one which leads me to believe that the present decision will not work an injustice on the landlord. In arriving at this decision I would point out that there is no intention of disagreeing in any way with the judgment of this Court in the recent case of Wyatt v. Sheo Gobind Sahu (4). The facts of that case bear no resemblance to the facts of the present case. It was there admitted that the transfer was a benami transaction and that all along the transferor was treated as the tenant of the land. The remarks as to the authority of the landlord's patwari in that case could have no application to the present where the landlord himself was a signatory to one at least of the rent receipts. It was contended that section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act rendered the consent of one co-sharer landlord nugatory, unless it were proved that he was authorised by the remaining landlords to act on their behalf. It is difficult to see how section 188 can have any application to a case like the present where the landlords have separate collection of their share of rent; but however that may be, the evidence of Dhurendhar was enough to show that the act of the plaintiff or his predecessor was authorised by the other co-sharer. In my opinion, this appeal should be dismissed. It has been brought to our notice that the decree of the first Court does not carry out the directions contained in the Munsif's judgment. If that is so, we have power under Order XLI, rule 33, to set it right. The decree will, therefore, be modified and in lieu thereof it will be decreed that the plaintiff do recover from the defendant a sum equal to the plaintiff's share, viz., thirteen-twentieths of Rs. 8-13-3 for the four years in question together with $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum interest to date of suit and 6 per cent. thereafter until realisation. There will be no modification of the orders for costs in the lower Courts and save as above mentioned, this appeal will be dismissed without costs, the respondent not having appeared.

MULLICK, J.—I agree with the judgment which has just been delivered. I desire only to add a few observations on the matter urged before us.

The learned Vakil who appears on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant before us contends in the first place that the rent receipts upon which the learned Munsif and the Subordinate Judge and the learned Judge of this Court found that a division of the holding had taken place were not binding upon him.

Now it is found as a fact that one of these receipts Exhibit A-1, dated the 7th

SRIKISHON PRASAD v. JEONASI KUER.

Straban 1309 F. S., was signed by the plaintiff's father and by his gomashla Ram Asia and was given to Uma Singh's brother while four other receipts for the years 1313, 1314, 1315 and 1319 F. S. were signed by the gomashla only and were given to Uma Singh or his co sharers. All these receipts, if believed, would tend to show that the plaintiff agreed to recognise the transfer of an area of 3 bighas 1 cottah 12 dhurs at a rental of Rs. 10-4-0 inclusive of cesses. The finding of fact as to the signatures is conclusive, but the plaintiff contends in regard to the receipts given by the gomashla that the servant in question had no authority to recognise any sub-division of the tenancy and that the defendant has not discharged the burden which rests on him to prove such authority.

Now the case of Sudaman v. Bebari Mahton (5) is clear authority for the proposition that where a landlord repudiates the authority of a gomashla to give a receipt which recognises the sub-division of a tenure or holding, the onus of proof is ordinarily upon the landlord inasmuch as the relations between himself and his servant are a matter peculiarly within his knowledge under section 106 of the Indian Evidence Act.

The learned Vakil for the appellant, however, relies upon the case of Wyatt v. Sheo Gobind Sahu (4), in which there are observations to the effect that if a patwari gives a receipt recognizing a division of a tenancy, the onus of proof is upon the tenant and not upon the landlord. That case, however, was decided in reference to its own facts, which showed that the patwari concerned was not a person ordinarily entrusted with the duty of recognizing divisions of holdings. In my opinion, this case does not conflict with the long line of decisions which have held that in regard to receipts given by gomashlas the onus of showing that the gomashla had no authority to recognize a distribution of rent or division of tenancies lies upon the landlord. In the case now before us this point as to the want of authority in the gomashla Ram Asia was never raised and as neither party has given evidence, the Courts below have rightly assumed that the gomashla had authority to bind his principal.

With regard to the receipt Exhibit A-1, which has been found to have been signed by the father of the plaintiff and by the gomashla, it only states that a sum of Rs 5-2-0 has been paid by Uma Kuer, the vendee, and as it omits to mention the area for which this rent is paid it is inconclusive if taken alone; but taken with the other receipts it tends to corroborate the case of the defendant. It is true the Record of Rights does not show two separate holdings. It merely shows that Deo Narain and Uma Singh were joint tenants though occupying separate parcels of land. There was, however, evidence in the shape of the rent receipts upon which it was competent for the learned Munsif and the Subordinate Judge to come to the conclusion that the plaintiff had recognized a division. In my opinion these receipts have been correctly construed and are binding upon the plaintiff.

The learned Vakil for the plaintiff next urges that even if the rent receipts are otherwise binding, they do not operate to have that effect as they do not conform to the conditions of section 88 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Now the law previous to 1907 was that a division of a tenure or holding or the distribution of rent payable in respect thereof shall not be binding on the landlord unless made with his consent in writing. In 1907 the word "express" was added and it is, therefore, now necessary to decide what is meant by "express consent."

The learned Vakil has not been able to show any authority for his contention that the law has been substantially changed and that the current of decisions of which the case of Pyari Mohun Mukhopadhyaya v. Gopal Paik (1) is a type has been in any way overruled. In my opinion "consent in writing" may be given by means of a rent receipt, and in each case the adequacy of the consent must be gathered from all the circumstances. It has been held that if a receipt shows the total area of the holding and the area of the share transferred and the rent distributed thereon, then that is sufficient consent in writing; Jnaendra Mohan

v. Gopal Das (2). If this is so, I see no reason why a receipt showing the area of the transferred portion and the rent paid therefor should not also be sufficient to constitute express consent within the meaning of section 88.

If, therefore, section 88 had been applicable to the present case, I think that the rent receipts filed by the defendant would have been sufficient to show that the plaintiff had given his express consent in writing to a division of the tenancy.

But, in my opinion, section 88 has no application to a co-sharer landlord who is still joint with his co-owners.

That section enacts under what conditions a division of a tenure or holding is binding upon the landlord. It obviously refers to a sole landlord or the entire body of joint landlords where there are more landlords than one; for as was held by Rampini, J., in Kunja Behari Singh v. Musamat Rushan Koer (see unreported decision in Second Appeal No. 28 of 1897) one co-sharer cannot bind his other co-sharers by any act of his own without authority to do so. It would seem that the earliest enactment bearing upon this point was section 27, Act X of 1859, which required landlords to give effect to all divisions of transferable tenures but at the same time provided that no division was to be binding upon a landlord without his written consent. Section 88 of the present Act reproduced and amplified the proviso by including within its scope the division of holdings. The object of the Legislature in both enactments was to protect the landlord's security against unauthorised divisions by the tenant. Therefore, it seems reasonable to suppose that divisions which would not bind the whole body of landlords do not come within the scope of the enactments.

In this view section 88 could only apply when the contract between a co-sharer and the tenant has the effect of creating a separate tenure or holding.

Now it is, in my opinion, settled that even when a tenant executes a kabuliyat agreeing to pay a co-sharer landlord his share of the rent separately and also agreeing that this co-sharer shall be competent to deal with him as if he were his sole landlord, the contract though it may create a separate tenancy cannot create a separate holding; for a holding being defined in the present Bengal Tenancy Act as a parcel or parcels of land held by a raiyat and forming the subject of a separate tenancy, the undivided share of one co-sharer landlord in the holding cannot be a parcel within the meaning of the definition, Hari Charan Bose v. Ramit Singh (6), Parbatty Debbya v. Mathura Nath (7). As has been pointed out by Banerji, J., in the former of these two cases, the position is otherwise in respect of an undivided share in a tenure which is not required by definition to consist of a separate parcel or parcels.

Therefore in the case now before us Deo Narain's tenancy under the plaintiff was not a holding and it follows that section 88 which deals with the division of holdings cannot apply. Even if Deo Narain had contracted to treat the plaintiff in all respects as his sole landlord, section 88 would not be a bar to the operation of that contract.

The learned Vakil for the appellant next contends that section 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act prohibits the plaintiff from recognizing without the consent of the other co-sharers the transfer to Uma Singh and the consequent distribution of the rent. In my opinion this section has no application whatsoever. There is no provision in the Tenancy Act which requires a landlord to recognize a distribution of rent. He is certainly authorised to do so, but that authority is derived not from the Act but under the general law as an incident to the ownership of property.

Therefore, if neither section 88 nor section 188 applies, the question arises what is the effect of the plaintiff's recognition of Uma Singh as Deo Narain's transferee. Section 178, which is the only section which restricts a tenant's power of contract with his landlord, does not in any way operate as a bar here, and, therefore, it was perfectly competent to the plaintiff to recognize the transfer and the distribution of rent so far as his share was concerned. Again as section 88 does not apply, his consent in writing, whether express or implied, was unnecessary. The defendant is entitled to prove the contract by any legal evidence she pleases and to enforce it. Here she has proved express consent in writing.

The defendant, therefore, is only liable for the balance of the rent after deduction of the sum due from Uma Singh.

But there is another ground which, in my opinion, is fatal to the plaintiff's claim. Having recognized the transfer to Uma Singh the plaintiff cannot, even if section 88 had been applicable, be permitted to say that the distribution is not binding upon him merely because the formalities of the section were not complied with. The principle of Maddison v. Alderson (8) have been applied to this country by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (9), where their Lordships cite with approval the following observations of the Chancellor: "The matter has advanced beyond the stage of contract and the equities which arise under the stage which it has reached cannot be administered unless the contract is regarded."

The underlying principle is one of universal application, namely, that equity will not fail to support a transaction clothed imperfectly in those legal forms to which finality attaches after the bargain has been acted upon. Therefore, having acted upon the contract with Deo Narain as disclosed by the rent receipts, the plaintiff cannot take advantage of the defects, if any, in the form in which his consent was signified to Uma Singh so as to bar the enforcement of the contract. In my opinion to support him in such a plea would be to support that which amounts to a fraud.

Appeal dismissed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 131 of 1917.

November 8, 1917.

Present:—Mr. Lindsay, J. C.

BHAIRON BAKHSH SINGH AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

Musammal RAGHUBANSA KUNWAR

AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—

RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Mortgage—Redemption suit by one co-mortgagor—Subsequent suit by another co-mortgagor—Co-mortgagor suing to redeem share of mortgaged property—Court-fee payable.

A decree was passed in a suit for redemption by one of several co-mortgagors, in which the other co-mortgagors were impleaded as defendants. The decree directed that if the plaintiff failed to pay the money within a period of six months the decree would become a nullity. It did not provide for redemption by the defendants-co-mortgagors in case the plaintiff made default. The plaintiff failed to comply with the order of the Court, and subsequently some of the other co-mortgagors brought a suit for redemption:

Held, that the suit was not barred by the rule of res judicata inasmuch as the plaintiffs in the subsequent suit were not claiming under the plaintiff in the previous suit. [p. 302, col 1.]

Where a co-mortgagor who is entitled to redeem a share of the mortgaged property sues for redemption, the Court-fee payable is to be calculated on the amount of the mortgage debt which is chargeable on the share which the plaintiff is entitled to redeem. [p. 303, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated the 12th January 1917, upholding the order of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated the 23rd June 1916.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava and Rajeshwari Prasad, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Mr. Shahabuddin Ahmad, for Respondent No. 7.

JUDGMENT.—The principal question for decision in this second appeal is whether the suit for redemption brought by the plaintiffs-appellants was barred by the rule of res judicata. A minor question relates to the Court-fee which was payable on the plaint.

As regards the first point both the Courts below have held that the suit was barred. After hearing the arguments in the case I have come to the conclusion that this decision is erroneous and that the suit is maintainable. In order to understand the matter in dispute it is necessary to set out the following facts.

In the village of Pindaria there are three Pattis, called respectively Patti Sheo Ghulam Singh, Patti Gur Bakhsh Singh and Patti Kali Din. Each of these Pattis represents a 5-annas 4-pies share in the whole Mauza. In the year 1866 two of these Pattis, namely, Sheo Ghulam Singh and Gur Bakhsh Singh, were mortgaged with possession to one Kali Din Shukal to secure a debt of Rs. 2,066. Later on, that is to say, in the year 1868, a deed of further charge was executed by the owners of a one-half share in Patti Gur Bakhsh. On the 7th of December 1896, a suit for redemption was filed by one Sitla Bakhsh, the son of Sheo Din Singh, who was one of the owners of Patti Sheo Ghulam Singh. In this suit the representatives of the co-mortgagors who had executed the deed of 1866 were impleaded as defendants. The case was tried out and a decree was given declaring that Sitla Bakhsh the plaintiff could have redemption of the entire property mortgaged under the deed of 1866 on payment of a certain sum. The Court gave a direction that if the money were not paid within a period of six months the decree was to become a nullity. It appears that Sitla Bakhsh never complied with the order of the Court. He made several applications for extension of time and eventually the last application for this purpose was refused. It is an admitted fact that at some time subsequent to this last order of the Subordinate Judge the mortgagee allowed redemption of a 2-annas 8-pies share out of the 5-annas 4-pies share in Patti Gur Bakhsh. This redemption was allowed on payment of a proportionate amount of the mortgage debt. The consequence is that at the time the present suit was brought a 2-annas 8-pies share of Patti Gur Bakhsh and the whole 5-annas 4-pies share of Patti Sheo Ghulam were still unredeemed. In this suit the plaintiffs together with defendants Nos. 8—17 represent this 2-annas 8-pies share of Patti Gur Bakhsh. The defendants Nos. 18 and 19 are the proprietors of the 5-annas 4-pies share of Patti Sheo Ghulam. Defendants Nos. 1—7 represent the original mortgagee. The suit as brought was for redemption of the whole 8-annas share, that is to say, 2 annas 8-pies of Patti Gur Bakhsh and 5-annas 4-pies share of Patti Sheo Ghulam. The mortgagees resisted the claim on various grounds, the most important plea taken being that the suit was barred by the rule of res judicata. This plea was founded upon the facts which I have stated already in connection with the suit brought by Sitla Bakhsh Singh in the year 1896.

The case for the mortgagee defendants was that as Sitla Bakhsh had been given a decree for redemption and that as he had failed to avail himself of it, no second suit for redemption could be maintained. Another plea taken was that even if the plaintiffs were entitled to sue, they could only ask for redemption of a 2-annas 8-pies share in Patti Gur Bakhsh Singh. As I have mentioned, both the Courts below held that as the result of the suit which was brought in the year 1896 the present suit for redemption was barred. In coming to this decision both the Courts relied upon a decision of a single Judge of the Allahabad High Court reported as Nathe v. Khachera (1). It seems to me that notwithstanding this ruling upon which the Courts below have relied, the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the suit. The rule of res judicata can only be applied as between the parties to the previous suit or their representatives-in-interest; and from what is disclosed in the present case it appears to me to be impossible to hold that the present plaintiffs (together with the defendants Nos. 8—17), who are the owners of a 2-annas 8-pies share in Patti Gur Bakhsh Singh are the representatives of Sitla Bakhsh Singh who brought the previous suit for redemption in the year 1896. To begin with, Sitla Bakhsh Singh in that suit was the representative of only one of the co-mortgagors. The present plaintiffs with the defendants Nos. 8—17 are the representatives of other co-mortgagors of the Patti of Gur Bakhsh Singh; and it cannot, therefore, be said that these plaintiffs and defendants are in any way claiming title under Sitla Bakhsh Singh or his predecessor-in-interest. On the other hand, it is quite clear to me that they are claiming under an independent title. It has been argued that there is certain evidence on the record to indicate that in this earlier suit Sitla Bakhsh was really representing the other co-mortgagors as well; but I do not think this point has been established. There are no doubt statements of certain witnesses who say that the mortgagor defendants in the suit which was brought by Sitla Bakhsh were helping Sitla Bakhsh with funds in the prosecution of the suit. This is possibly true, but I should not be able to infer therefrom that Sitla Bakhsh was the representative of the other co-mortgagors in the sense in which the expression is used in connection with the rule of res judicata. It is further to be observed that in this suit of 1896 the co-mortgagors put forward in their written statement of defence certain objections to the right of Sitla Bakhsh to bring this suit for redemption. It was only by way of alternative that they pleaded that if their objections were overruled, then they would not oppose a decree for redemption being given in favour of Sitla Bakhsh in respect of the entire 10 annas 8 pies. I may further observe in this connection that these co-mortgagors who were impleaded as defendants in the suit in 1896 applied to the Court to be made plaintiffs. The Subordinate Judge who was dealing with the case refused this application, stating in his order that there was no need to make these persons plaintiffs, for if a decree were passed in favour of that plaintiff, Sitla Bakhsh, then the defendants co-mortgagors would be in a position to obtain redemption from him. I may also mention in connection with this earlier litigation that there was no decision of the Court regarding the right of the co-mortgagors to redeem. In the decree which was passed upon the judgment no provision was made for allowing the co-mortgagors to redeem in case the plaintiff Sitla Bakhsh should make default. The judgment and decree are altogether silent regarding any right of redemption on the part of the co-mortgagors who were joined as defendants; and this being so, it is impossible to hold that there was any decision by the Subordinate Judge regarding the rights of these co-mortgagors to redeem. If no decision on this question was given in the earlier suit and if no opportunity was afforded to the co-mortgagors to the decree to redeem in case of Sitla Bakhsh's failure to deposit the mortgage money, then it seems to me that the principle of res judicata cannot in any way operate in order to bar the present suit. Of course it is well-settled law in this Court that no second suit for redemption will lie, that is to say, where a plaintiff has obtained a decree for redemption and has failed to take advantage of it he will not be allowed to bring a fresh suit. But that decision cannot be applied to the facts of the present case where the plaintiffs are not claiming in any way under the person who was the plaintiff in the earlier suit and who were not represented by him in that suit. I have omitted to state that in the record of the earlier suit of 1895 there is nothing to show that Sitla Bakhsh was allowed in any way to maintain the suit on behalf of the other co-mortgagors. With regard to the decision in Nathe v. Khachera (1) upon which the defendants relied, that was a case in which the equity of redemption had been bought jointly by three purchasers. A suit had been brought by one purchaser and a decree obtained, and it was held that this decree was a bar to another suit by the other joint purchasers for the purpose of obtaining redemption. It may be that on the facts of that case it was possible to hold that the plaintiff in the first suit was acting as the representative of all the joint purchasers; but as I have said, there is no evidence upon which in this case it could be held that Sitla Bakhsh, when bringing his suit in 1896, was acting as the representative of the present plaintiff and the defendants Nos. 8—17. According to the view taken by the Courts below the final refusal of the Subordinate Judge in the earlier suit to extend the period fixed for payment of the mortgage debt shows that it was his intention to debar the plaintiff from all right to redeem. That remark is quite correct, but it is not to be inferred that because it was the intention of the Court to debar Sitla Bakhsh from exercising his right of redemption it was meant that the co-mortgagors, each of whom had a separate right to redeem, were also to be debarred. If any such intention was in the mind of the Court, it ought to have been expressed in the judgment and decree. I am satisfied, therefore, that the principle of res judicata does not apply so as to bar the present suit.

(1) 20 Ind. Cas. 372; 11 A. L. J. 844.

It is to be noted here that the first Court took the view that if the suit for redemption were maintainable then the plaintiffs together with the defendants Nos. 8—17 would be entitled only to ask for redemption of a 2-annas 8-pies share in Patti Gar Bakhsh. That position has been accepted by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants. He states that his clients are not eager to redeem anything more than this share.

As regards the question of Court-fee I may say that in my opinion the Court-fee paid is sufficient. If the right of the plaintiffs is to redeem only a share of the mortgaged property, then the Court-fee payable is to be calculated on the amount of the mortgage-debt which is chargeable on the share of which the plaintiffs are entitled to ask for redemption. This view of the law has been accepted in the following cases, namely, Vasudeva v. Mudhava (2), Amanat Begum v. Bhajan Lal (3) and Balkrishna Dhondo v. Nagrekar (4). As the appeal has been disposed of on a preliminary point it is necessary now to send the case back to the District Judge for disposal on the merits.

I allow the appeal accordingly and direct the learned District Judge to dispose of the case in accordance with the above observations. Costs here and hitherto will abide the result.

Intention, whether mixed question of law and fact—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Trespasser, whether can sue for declaration that he is trespasser.

The question with what intention a person did a certain act can hardly be said to be anything but a question of fact. [p. 30, col. 2.]

This question must be examined with reference to the subsequent acts of the person alleged to have a certain intention. [p. 304, col. 2.]

Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act does not contemplate an action by a person having no title. [p. 305, col. 1.]

A trespasser cannot, therefore, sue for a declaration that he is a trespasser. [p. 305, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Patna.

Messrs. Fugh, Abani Bhushan Mukerji and Saroshi Charan Mitter, for the Appellants.

Messrs. P. K. Sen, Bankim Chandra Mitter and Sona Lal Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants in this case are the heirs of one Kali Prasad. The defendants-respondents are the sons of one Musammat Jitni who, as has been found concurrently by the Courts below, was Kali Prasad's mistress. In 1884, Kali Prasad bought a house in Patna. It is found as a fact that he paid the purchase-money out of his own pocket. It is admitted by both sides that the title deeds were made out in the name of Jitni and it is found as a fact that the title deeds remained in the possession of Jitni and her heirs up to the time of the institution of the present suit. On the death of Jitni in 1888, Kali Prasad appears to have continued to use this house as a resting place whenever he visited Patna. On his death in 1905 his heirs took possession. In 1915 the defendants instituted a suit in the Small Cause Court claiming three years' rent from the plaintiffs at Rs. 10 a month. The learned Small Cause Court Judge decided the issue of the relationship of landlord and tenant in favour of the defendants and gave them a decree. The plaintiffs, therefore, instituted the present suit for a declaration, firstly, that the house in dispute was not the house of the defendants; secondly, for a declaration that the decree passed in the Small Cause Court suit is ineffective and inoperative; thirdly, that it be declared that defendants have no right to execute this decree and in the alternative that if it be held that the rent-decree resulted in a legal dis-possession of the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs should be restored to possession. The suit was dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge and on appeal to the District Court the learned Judge stated that the only issue involved was that of the intention of Kali Prasad in making out the title-deeds in the name of Jitni. He accepted it as good law that the consideration money having come from Kali Prasad's pocket, the presumption was that Kali Prasad made the purchase himself. But in view of the fact, firstly, that the house was one such as a man of Kali Prasad's position would not buy for himself, and in view of the fact that the title-deeds remained in the possession of Jitni, and in view of the fact that when Jitni died, Kali Prasad entered not his own name in the Municipal Register but those of Jitni's sons, he held that the presumption arising from the payment of the purchase money by Kali Prasad had been rebutted, and that it must be decided that the intention when making the purchase was that the purchase should be for the benefit of Jitni.

In appeal to this Court the first proposition advanced by Mr. Pugh is that he is not limited by the finding of fact, for the reason that all questions of intention must be regarded as mixed questions of fact and law. In support of this contention reliance is placed on a series of decisions which deal mainly with the existence of a custom. He might perhaps have also relied upon Criminal Bench rulings of the Calcutta Court, in which it has been decided that where the question of intention is in issue, a Court in revision is entitled to scrutinize the evidence and to decide for itself whether the facts proved establish the intention. The existence of a custom is undoubtedly to some extent a question of law for custom is in many instances itself law; where the existence of a law is in issue the question upon that issue must be to that extent a question of law, but the question with what intention a person did a certain act can hardly be said to be anything but a question of fact. Inasmuch as the question has been argued fully before us we propose to deal briefly with it, and say that in the circumstances of the case there was ample reason for holding that the purchase was in the first instance made for Jitni's benefit. If Kali Prasad had wished to buy a house for himself, it is tolerably certain that he would have bought a house more suitable to his position than the house in question. If he intended it to be his own property he would, as the learned Judge suggests, have kept the title deed in his own possession and not made it over to Jitni, and in all probability would not have allowed the title deed and the receipts for Municipal taxes which he had himself paid to pass into the possession of Jitni's sons on her death. The question of intention must be examined with reference to subsequent acts of the person alleged to have that intention. Kali Prasad's acts during his life were all consistent with a desire that the house should be considered to be the property of Jitni, and inconsistent with a desire that it should be considered his own property. What happened subsequent to Kali Prasad's death cannot affect the question of Kali Prasad's intention. It may be that his heirs were able to oust the heirs of Jitni from this property, but that would merely give rise to a period of limitation. It cannot affect the main issue before us.

As further points of law Mr. Pugh suggests, firstly, that from the moment Kali Prasad paid the purchase-money himself the house was his, and that he could not transfer it to the lady merely by making out the title-deed in her name, it would require a registered document to complete any such transfer. With this contention we are not in agreement. It would be immaterial whether Kali Prasad went through the form of handing the money to Jitni. So that Jitni's hands might be used for the payment of the money. If he intended to buy the house for the lady and through-out his negotiations represented that he was buying the house for the lady, the house as soon as the contract with the vendor was completed became the property of the lady. As a last resort Mr. Pugh suggests that the alternative prayers asked for in the plaint should be granted. There is no suggestion whatever that the rent decree was obtained by fraud. We have, therefore, no jurisdiction to say that the rent decree was inoperative or void or incapable of execution. And if indeed we are asked to make a declaration that the plaintiffs are in possession not as tenants of the defendants but by virtue of some right not specified, it is sufficient to say that the Specific Relief Act does not contemplate an action by a person not having a title. A trespasser cannot sue for a declaration that he is a trespasser.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—The short point which arises for decision in this suit is the meaning of the words "up to Wednesday" contained in a letter, dated the 12th May 1917, and addressed by the defendant to the plaintiff Company and whereby the defendant offered to sell to the plaintiff Company his Motor Car in these words:—"Nevertheless I am quite willing to hand over the Motor Car to you against a cheque of Rs. 3,120,—Rs. 3,000 being the costs of the Car and Rs. 120 interest. As I intend advertising the Car unless you wish to have it, please understand that my offer only holds good up to Wednesday next, as the time I have is limited." It is not disputed that the plaintiff Company some time on Wednesday the 16th May tendered Rs. 3,120 in Government Currency Notes to the defendant and asked for delivery of the Car in accordance with the offer contained in the letter of the 12th May. The defendant, however, refused the tender contending that his offer expired at midnight on Tuesday, May 15th, and that the phrase "up to Wednesday" was exclusive and not inclusive of Wednesday. The defendant claimed to give evidence of his meaning and intention when he wrote the letter and of the sense in which the plaintiff Company understood the offer, but I refused to admit this evidence having regard to section 91 of the Evidence Act. I have not been able to find, nor have Counsel who appeared before me, any authority in which the meaning and effect of the word "up to" has been judicially considered; but Counsel have referred me to various authorities in which the meaning of the word "until", which seems to me to be synonymous with "up to", has been considered and discussed. These authorities are collected in the late Mr. Stroud's Judicial Dictionary, 2nd Edition, Volume III, 2142, under the heading "until", and it appears from Re v. Stevens (1) that the word "until" may be construed either as exclusive or inclusive of the day to which it is applied, according to the context and subject-matter.

It appears from the cases cited in Mr.

(1) (1804) 5 East 244; 102 E. R. 1063.

METROPOLITAN ENGINEERING WORKS v. WALTER EUGENE DEBRUNNER.

Stroud's book that in a memorandum enlarging the time within which an award may be made "until" will generally include the whole of the day named, that where a defendant is given "till" a certain day to plead, judgment signed for want of a plea on that day was bad as the defendant might have delivered a plea during such day.

In Bellhouse v. Mellor (2) a bankrupt was granted protection until the 29th July from all process, and it was held that the protection extended to the whole of the 29th July. In Isaacs v. Royal Insurance Co. (3) goods were insured from the 14th February 1868 until the 14 August 1868, and it was held that under the terms of the policy the whole of the 14th August was protected.

In The Annual Practice for 1917 at page 1202 in the notes to rule 1 of Rules of the Supreme Court, Order 54, which deals with time under the heading "General Rule of Computation" these words occur:—"all periods of time under Rules of Court in the Supreme Court (including Bankruptcy)" and in the County Court are so computed that the day "from" or "after" which the time is fixed is excluded from such computation; and the day on which the act is to be done or "until" which some act is prohibited or protection afforded, is included therein (Encyclopædia of the Laws of England, 2nd Edition, tit. "Time") and see page 1203 of the Annual Practice under the heading "until". There is an Irish decision to the contrary effect in Rogers v. Davis (4), in which a plea of confession had been given with stay of execution until the first of May next, and on that day execution was issued. The three Judges who formed the Court held that the writ was properly issued, Burton, J., stating that the word until did not mean after. Now these authorities do not appear to me to be conclusive of the case, but I think they show a general tendency of inclusion rather than exclusion of the day up to or until which something is to be done; but of course the context and subject-matter have to be taken into account in determining whether the word "up to" is to be taken as exclusive or inclusive of the day to which it is applied. I cannot find anything in the context here which really assists in construing the words. It is true that the defendant states that his time is limited, but his anxiety on this score is not so much to limit the period during which the offer is to remain open, as to give him time to advertise the Car in the event of his offer not being accepted, that is to say, his dominating motive is, I should say, not so much to limit the duration of the offer as to have time to dispose of the Car elsewhere if his offer is not accepted. The result is that I have to fall back on the words themselves, and I think that the ordinary meaning which the ordinary person would attach to them is that the offer is to be open during the whole of Wednesday and does not expire at midnight on Tuesday. Having regard then, 1st, to what, I think, is the ordinary meaning of the words, 2nd, to the manner in which similar expressions have ordinarily and generally been construed, and 3rdly to the fact that I think the well-known principle applicable to deeds and I think to other documents that the document should in case of doubt, and where all other rules of construction fail, be construed most strongly against the grantor, Co. Litt. 183a, is applicable here, I am of opinion that upon the true construction of the letter and the words "up to Wednesday" the offer remained open until midnight on Wednesday. The Car has, I understand, been sold, and, accordingly the defendant, after deducting the sum of Rs. 3,120 from the sale-proceeds (less the sum of Rs. 583-7-0 due from him to the plaintiff Company for repairs to the Car) and the commission on sale of the Car, will pay over the balance to the plaintiff Company. And the defendant must pay the plaintiff Company's costs, to be taxed on scale No. 2.

Order accordingly.

DEFENDANT No. 2—APPELLANT

AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS,

MUHAMMAD HAMID ULLAH KHAN

AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Muhammadian Law—Gift—Possession, delivery of—Gift of corpus, with reservation of usufruct, validity of—Will—Bequest of more than one-third, validity of—Consent of heirs, validity of—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 41—Disclaimer by real owner—Transfer by ostensible owner—Taluka—Succession—Primogeniture sanad, effect of.

Where in a deed of gift executed by a Muhammadian lady subject to the Hanafi law the donor excepted some of the property, retaining possession over it free of rent and revenue, and stated that after her death the donee would be its proprietor and that the donor would have no power to transfer it by mortgage, sale, or gift:

Held, that even in respect of the excepted property the deed operated as one of gift, inasmuch as the donor transferred the corpus of the property to the donee, reserving for herself the usufruct for life, which was not prohibited under the Hanafi law. [p. 310, col. 1; p. 314, col. 1.]

Held, further, that under the circumstances the stipulation not to transfer her interests in the property during her lifetime satisfied the conditions of the Hanafi law with regard to the delivery of possession. [p. 310, col. 1.]

A person who has disclaimed a title cannot be allowed to set it up afterwards to the prejudice of third parties, who have purchased the disclaimed property from the ostensible owner in good faith and for value. [p. 315, col. 2.]

Per Stuart, A. J. C.—There are three essentials of a gift under the Hanafi law—declaration, acceptance, and seizin. With regard to seizin, however, the rule is that where everything reasonable has been done to perfect a contemplated gift, nothing more is required. There is nothing in Hanafi law to prohibit a gift of the corpus combined with the retention of the usufruct inasmuch as such a transfer does not create a limited estate. [p. 309, col. 2; p. 310, col. 1.]

Where a primogeniture sanad had been issued to a talukdar who died before the Oudh Estates Act came into force, succession to the estate would be governed by the terms of the sanad in the case of succession under a testamentary disposition. [p. 301, col. 1.]

Per Kanhaiya Lal, A. J. C.—Where the intention to make an absolute transfer in presenti of all proprietary right is clear, any condition which derogates from the immediate completeness of the gift is regarded as void. Where the condition, however, may be given effect to without in any way interfering with or detracting from the immediate completeness of the gift, or rather the immediate transfer of the right in the substance of the gift, the condition as well as the gift are valid. [p. 314, col. 1.]

Any reservation of proprietary rights in the corpus would be inconsistent with an intention to make a gift, but the reservation of a right to the usufruct of a portion of the property given would not be inconsistent, if the intention to give the corpus be otherwise manifest. [p. 314, col. 1.]

The consent or acquiescence, express or implied, of the heirs of a Muhammadian to a Will by him in excess of two-thirds of his property is treated as a ratification by them of his conduct. Such consent may be express or may be implied from unequivocal conduct. [p. 315, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

STUART, A. J. C.—Niamat Ullah Khan, Lutf Ullah Khan and Ibrahim Khan were the sons of Ibad Ullah Khan. They were the members of a family who had originally been Thakurs of the Ahban Clan. Several centuries ago the members of that family were converted to the Muhammadian religion. Their personal law of succession is now admitted to be that of the Hanafi school. They were residents of the village Jalalpur in the Kheri district. After the re-conquest of Oudh, Niamat Ullah Khan received from the British Government the Taluka of Agar Buzurg. He died on the 29th August 1837. His name was nevertheless entered in the lists prepared under Act I of 1869 and is found at No. 116 on List No. I and at No. 47 on List No. II. Instances of the name of a deceased person being entered in the lists are not uncommon. His taluka is described in these lists as the taluka of Agar Buzurg. He received a primogeniture sanad which is filed in this case as Exhibit A1. The estate is there described as the estate of Jalalpur. The amount of land revenue is given as Rs. 5,752.

Niamat Ullah Khan executed a Will on the 20th May 1855, by which he devised the whole of his talukdari property to his wife Musammal Munni Bibi. This lady succeeded on his death to the talukdari property. On the 15th November 1876, Government granted share of a village called Gundia to Musammāt Munni Bibi in her own right. The grant was contained in a deed Exhibit C. On the 7th March 1884, Musammāt Munni Bibi executed a deed in favour of Lutf Ullah Khan, her husband's elder surviving brother. Under the terms of this deed she transferred absolutely to Lutf Ullah Khan the whole of her talukdari estate with the exception of two villages in the estate, Mundia Misr and Gungepur. She retained possession of the two latter villages and of the share of Gundia which had been granted to her by Government. Under the terms of this deed she undertook not to transfer the property which remained in her possession. This deed is Exhibit A4. All the property except Mundia Misr, Gungepur, and the share in Gundia was at once transferred to the possession of Lutf Ullah Khan. Musammāt Munni Bibi died on the 16th June 1906. Lutf Ullah Khan then obtained possession of Mundia Misr, Gungepur and the share in Gundia. He died and was succeeded by his son Hamid Ullah Khan.

In 1910, the four sons of Ibrahim Khan, the younger brother of Niamat Ullah Khan, instituted a suit against Hamid Ullah Khan who had succeeded Lutf Ullah Khan, his two wives, and Muhammad Abdul Ghani Khan and Muhammad Abdur Rahman Khan, the persons who would have been the heirs under the Hanafi law of Musammāt Munni Bibi had she died intestate, for possession of the property transferred to Lutf Ullah Khan by Musammāt Munni Bibi. They asserted title on the basis of an alleged Will, dated the 10th June 1906. Their suit was finally dismissed by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner under a decree, dated the 13th March 1912, Exhibit B 9.

The suit out of which these appeals arise was filed on the 20th February 1914 by Muhammad Abdul Ghani Khan and Muhammad Abdur Rahman Khan (the same persons who were defendants in the previous suit) against Hamid Ullah Khan, his wives, the widow of Lutf Ullah Khan and a certain Pandit Sheo Dayal. This suit was for the possession of the property over which Musammāt Munni Bibi had reserved possession during her lifetime and which had not passed at once to Lutf Ullah Khan under the provisions of the deed of the 7th March 1884. The case for the plaintiffs was that the succession to the estate of Musammāt Munni Bibi was governed by the rules of Hanafi law, that they were her heirs under Hanafi law, that the property in question had not been validly transferred during the lifetime of Musammāt Munni Bibi and that they were entitled to it. The defendants set up a variety of pleas, to the effect that the law of succession of the parties, although they were converted to Muhammadanism, was the Hindu Law, and that thus the property would revert in any circumstances to the family of Niamat Ullah Khan and not to the family of Musammāt Munni Bibi, that Musammāt Munni Bibi was a talukdar, that the property had passed by valid gift and that the plaintiffs were estopped. There were also other pleas. The learned Subordinate Judge decided all these pleas against them. He held, however, that the disposition by the deed of the 7th March 1884 had the effect of a Will with respect to the property in suit, and that, such being the case, the plaintiffs could only challenge its disposition with regard to two-thirds of the property. He decreed their claim with respect to two-thirds. Against this decision Fakhr Jahan Begam, defendant No. 2, has filed Appeal No. 85 of 1915 and Pandit Sheo Dayal has filed Appeal No. 89 of 1915. The plaintiffs-respondents have filed cross-objections.

The first point to be decided is whether the property (other than the share in Gundia) is covered by the terms of the primogeniture sanad Exhibit A1. This point was barely considered in the Court below, as nothing particular depended upon its decision at the time that the case was tried. As the law was understood at the time of the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge, the provisions of section 15 Act I of 1859, applied to that property, and the terms of the primogeniture sanad would not have affected the rule of succession. Subsequently on the 5th July 1915 a Bench of this Court of which I was a member delivered judgment in Ghulam Abbas Khan v. Bibi Ummatul Fatima (1). The existence of the judgment was not likely to have been brought to the notice of the learned Subordinate Judge, when he decided the present suit on the 13th

(1) 31 Ind. Cas. 748; 18 O. C. 188; 2 O. L. J. 638.

FAKHR JAHAN BEGAM V. MUHAMMAD ABDEL GHANI KHAN.

July 1915. In that decision I took the view that where a primogeniture sanad had been issued to a talukdar who died before Act I of 1869 came into force, succession to the estate would be governed by the terms of the sanad in the case of succession under a testamentary disposition. If this view were adopted the successor would have an unrestricted power of alienation. My reasons are stated at length in that decision and need not be repeated. If my interpretation of the law be correct, Musammât Munni Bibi had a power of devise unrestricted by the provisions of the Hanafi law with regard to all the property in suit with the exception of the share in Gundia, should that property be included in the property covered by the primogeniture sanad. It is thus of importance to ascertain whether this property was or was not included under the primogeniture sanad, and we have accordingly permitted a certified copy of the Kabuliyat to be produced in evidence during the hearing of the appeal. Its production corrects the omission to produce it in the Court below. The respondents admit that they are unable to produce anything to controvert it. They contest, however, the allegation that the property in question is talukdari property, basing their objection on the circumstance that in Exhibit A1, the estate is called Jalalpur whereas the Kabuliyat is the Kabuliyat of Agar Buzurg. The property in question is included in the Kabuliyat. There can be no doubt to my mind as to the fact that the sanad and the Kabuliyat refer to the same property. There is no taluka of Jalalpur. There seems to have been a Jalalpur estate because in Exhibit 27 we find that there was a suit between Imdad Ullah Khan, the son of Rahmat Ullah Khan, and Habib Ullah Khan and Kudrat Ullah Khan with regard to shares in the Jalalpur property. Habib Ullah Khan, Rahmat Ullah Khan, and Kudrat Ullah Khan were brothers of Ibad Ullah Khan. To that suit Ibad Ullah Khan was no party. The circumstances of that case show clearly that there was no taluka of Jalalpur. The settlement decree of Jalalpur was passed in favour of Musammât Munni Bibi on the 17th April 1869, Exhibit 4. But the circumstance that such a settlement decree was passed in her favour does not indicate that there was any taluka of Jalalpur. What confirms my decision that the primogeniture sanad refers to Agar Buzurg and that the description of the estate as Jalalpur is merely a clerical error is the circumstance that both in the sanad and in the Kabuliyat which refers to Jalalpur the revenue is given at the same figure, i. e., Rs. 5,752. What apparently happened was that the clerk who prepared the sanad inadvertently wrote the name of the estate as Jalalpur because Niamat Ullah Khan lived in Jalalpur. I find, therefore, that the property with the exception of the share in Gundia is covered by the primogeniture sanad, and, as Musammât Munni Bibi was according to my view a successor of her husband within the meaning of the words of the sanad she had full power to alienate under its terms. If the matter rested there, there would be some difficulty in decision for my learned colleague does not share my view of the law upon this point. We are, however, in accord as to the decision of these appeals upon another point.

The learned Counsel for the appellants have completely abandoned the position that the personal law of this family is the Hindu Law. The only alternative is that it is the Hanafi law. On the assumption that the personal law is the Hanafi law the terms of the deed of the 7th March 1824 must be construed. The learned Subordinate Judge regarded this deed as a Will with respect to the property in suit. After considering its terms we have come to a contrary opinion: we consider this deed a deed of gift with respect to the property in suit. It is true that the lady in one place excepts the property in suit and goes on to state that after her death the donee will be the proprietor. But at the same time she states that she will have no power to transfer the property left in her possession by mortgage, sale or gift, and I read the deed as meaning that she transferred the corpus of the property in suit to Lutf Ullah Khan, reserving for herself the usufruct for life. The learned Subordinate Judge takes the point that, even if such were the case, the gift would be invalid under the Hanafi law owing to failure to deliver possession. I proceed to consider this point, which has been argued with skill on both sides.

There are three essentials of a gift under the Hanafi law—declaration, acceptance, and seizin

FAKHR JAHAN BEGAM v. MUHAMMAD ABDUL GHANI KHAN.

It is clear that here we have both declaration and acceptance. The remaining point is, was there seizin within the sense contemplated by law? This subject has been treated in detail in Ameer Ali's well-known work on Muhammadan Law, Chapter 2, page 62 et seq., 3rd edition. According to the view taken therein the delivery of possession required under the Hanafi law varies according to the nature of the property transferred, and, where the donor is only in symbolical possession, the transfer can also be symbolical and may be effected under the terms of the deed of transfer itself. Where a donor transfers the corpus of the property retaining a usufruct for life, physical possession must necessarily remain with the donor. There is nothing in the Hanafi law to prohibit a gift of the corpus combined with the retention of the usufruct. Under the Hanafi law a limited estate cannot be created but such a transfer does not create a limited estate. The old view which finds place in some of the illustrations of Macnaghten must be considerably modified in the light of the more recent authoritative pronouncements on the subject. I refer in particular to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mahomed Buksh Khan v. Hosseini Bibi (2), where at pages 701 and 702 their Lordships lay down that, where everything reasonable has been done to perfect a contemplated gift, nothing more is required. In the circumstances of the case physical possession could not be given. Possession by the enjoyment of rents could not be given. It would have been difficult even to effect mutation of names for the lady would have been prejudiced in making collections from tenants if the name of Lutf Ullah Khan had been entered in the revenue papers. What then could she do? The transfer of title-deeds (if any) already in her possession would have been purely formal, for the title was contained in the deed of transfer itself. She did this much that she covenanted in the deed not to transfer her interests in the property in question during her lifetime, and this stipulation satisfies the conditions of the law with regard to the delivery of possession. Some stress has been laid by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents upon a deposition made by the lady, Exhibits A7 and B5, as showing that she was under the impression that she had only a life-estate in the property. I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that this deposition is of no value. There the lady in one place described herself as the holder of a life-estate, and in another place described herself as absolute owner. She was apparently confused as to what her real position was at the time she made the deposition. Nothing of value can be derived from the statements therein made. It was urged by the learned Counsel for the appellants that, even if the transfer of the property in suit was taken to be by a devise, the devise would be good as the present plaintiffs had consented thereto. As I regard the transfer to have been by a valid gift this point is unimportant. But I should refer to the facts, on which this argument is based. When a suit was brought by the sons of Ibrahim Khan, they wrote to the present plaintiffs-respondents asking what position they intended to take in the case. One of them Muhammad Abdul Ghani Khan replied on the 14th November 1910 (Exhibit A 6) that he had no objection whatever to the provisions of the Will, and that the then plaintiffs were at liberty to take the said property by virtue of the Will. Here he was, however, clearly referring to the alleged Will of 1905, the execution of which was found not to have been established. But in his deposition in the same case (Exhibit A 5) we find him making the following statement. "I never thought of the matter whether I am entitled to the assets of Musammam Munnai Bibi or not. I disclaim a share in the property if I am entitled to it. I do not know about others." Whether this can or cannot be held to be a valid relinquishment under Muhammadan Law is not of much importance in view of our decision as to gift, especially as it could only affect the man who made it. But in the case of the appellant Sheo Dayal who is a transferee for value, reliance could be placed in any circumstances on the provisions of section 41, Act IV of 1882, for both the plaintiffs permitted Lutf Ullah Khan to enter into possession of the village transferred to him. It is to be noted that my view with regard to the effect of the sanad has no bearing on the position of Sheo Dayal because the property transferred to him was a share in Gundia which was granted by Government to Musammāt Munni Bibi herself. Had she died intestate succession to that property must certainly have been governed by the Hanafi law. I have already found that she executed a valid transfer by gift of this property during her lifetime. But even, had she not done so, I consider that the plaintiffs-respondents would be out of Court with respect to this property. The deed which purported to transfer it was executed in 1854. That deed was of the nature of a deed of gift, was considered by the transferee as a deed of gift, and was utilized by him as a deed of gift. When the lady died in 1906, both the plaintiffs took no steps to oppose Lutf Ullah Khan succeeding to possession. They made no attempt whatever to assert title to the property. In subsequent proceedings, when they had an opportunity to assert title they did not do so. They permitted transfers of the property to take place, and did not assert a claim until two-thirds of the period of limitation had expired. Such being the case, I consider that the provisions of section 41 have certainly application to protect the transferee. He appears to me to have acted with due care and caution, and I fail to see what more could have been expected from him as a reasonable man.

On the above findings I decree both appeals and dismiss the cross-objections. The contesting respondents will pay their own costs and those of the appellants both with regard to the appeals and the cross-objections in all Courts.

KANEIYA LAL, A. J. C.—The dispute in this case relates to the village Mundia Misr, a 4-annas 5-pies share in the village Gundia and some land and groves in the village Jalalpur.

The village Mundia Misr and the land in Jalalpur belonged to Niamat Ullah Khan, who was the talukdar of Agar Buzurg. His name was entered at No. 116 in List No. I and No. 47 in List No. II appended to Act I of 1859. The sanad granted to Niamat Ullah Khan was a primogeniture sanad and purported to convey to him the Jalalpur estate in the district Mohamdi, which, as the Kabuliyat executed by his father at the time of the summary settlement shows, was identical with the Agar Buzurg estate. The revenue of the Agar Buzurg estate, as entered in the list attached to the Kabuliyat, was Rs. 5,752; and that was the revenue which is described in the sanad as having been then payable by Niamat Ullah Khan. Niamat Ullah Khan lived in Jalalpur, by reason probably of which his estate was described in the sanad as the Jalalpur estate; but in the lists appended to Act I of 1859 it was rightly described as "Agar Buzurg." He had some share in Jalalpur too, in regard to which his widow, Musammāt Munni Bibi, obtained a decree from the Settlement Court on the 17th April 1869, Exhibit 4. The share in the village Gundia was granted to Musammāt Munni Bibi by a sanad, dated the 15th November 1876. She was the absolute owner of that share under the sanad and had a right to dispose of it in any manner she liked.

On the 20th May 1865 Niamat Ullah Khan bequeathed his entire estate to his wife, Musammāt Munni Bibi. He died on the 29th August 1867, leaving Musammāt Munni Bibi surviving him. On the 7th March 1884, Musammāt Munni Bibi made a gift in favour of Lutf Ullah Khan, the eldest surviving brother of her deceased husband, giving him the entire estate belonging to her, with the exception of the property now in dispute, which she retained for herself for her life without any power of alienation, coupled with a direction that it should revert after her death to the donee. The construction and validity of that deed of gift is one of the main points at issue in this case.

Musammāt Munni Bibi died on the 16th June 1906. On her death possession of the disputed property was obtained by the donee, who was subsequently succeeded by his son Hamid Ullah Khan. In 1910 a suit was brought by the sons of Ibrahim Khan, another brother of Niamat Ullah Khan, claiming the estate on the strength of another Will, alleged to have been executed by Musammāt Munni Bibi on the 10th June 1906. This suit was dismissed by this Court on the 13th March 1912. After its dismissal Abdul Ghani Khan and his brother Abdur Rahman Khan filed the present suit for possession of that portion of the property, which Musammāt Munni Bibi had retained for herself without any power of alienation for her life and which was to go to the donee after her death. They alleged that they were the heirs of the said lady and that Hamid Ullah Khan and the other persons who had obtained transfers from him and his father were in possession of the same without any right. They also claimed mesne profits.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the deed of gift executed by Musammāt Munni Bibi in favour of Lutf Ullah Khan operated, so far as the disputed property was concerned as a bequest and was invalid except as to a one-third share. He decreed the claim accordingly for possession of a two-thirds share in the said property with the mesne profits appertaining to that share.

It has been argued on behalf of the contesting defendants that by virtue of the bequest made by her husband, Musammāt Munni Bibi had obtained only a life-interest in the property bequeathed; but the terms of the bequest clearly conveyed to Musammāt Munni Bibi full proprietary rights in the manor possessed by the testator (malik wa mukhtar misl zat khas mere ke hogi). On behalf of the plaintiffs it is contended that the village Mundia Misr did not form part of the Agar Buzurg estate and was not affected by the primogeniture sanad granted to Niamat Ullah Khan. But the Kabuliyat of the Agar Buzurg estate, which was inadvertently described as the estate of Jalalpur in the sanad, includes and refutes that contention. In the list appended to Act I of 1869, no estate, known as the estate of Jalalpur, is entered as having been held by Niamat Ullah Khan, and the identity of the property comprised in the sanad with that entered in the Kabuliyat cannot, therefore, be disputed.

The main point for consideration is whether Musammāt Munni Bibi made a gift or a bequest of the disputed property in favour of Lutf Ullah Khan and whether that gift or bequest was valid or not. The family to which Niamat Ullah Khan belonged was a family of Ahban Thakurs, converted to Muhammadanism. It was at one time asserted that the family was governed by the Mitakshara school of the Hindu Law, but the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is against it and that contention is no longer pressed in appeal. It is conceded that the succession to the estate of Musammāt Munni Bibi is not governed by Act I of 1869, inasmuch as the estate had vested in her before that Act came into force. Her name was entered in the lists, and it is unquestionable that if there was no valid gift or bequest in favour of Lutf Ullah Khan, the plaintiffs would be her heirs under the Muhammadan law, because as held by me in Ghulam Abbas Khan v. Bibi Ummat-ul-Fatima (1) and by this Court in Thakur Sital Singh v. Thakur Sitta Baksh Singh (3) and Musammāt Balraj Kuar v. Mahadeo Pal Singh (4) the rule of succession laid down in the sanad would not apply to her, as she was not a successor, that is, a person deriving title by inheritance within the meaning of that sanad. The reasons in favour of that view, based largely on the context and contemporaneous exposition, have been discussed at length in those cases and need not be recapitulated here.

The validity of the deed of gift or bequest, so far as it relates to the disputed property, depends entirely on how far it complies with the provisions of the Muhammadan Law bearing on the point. After referring to the Will executed by Niamat Ullah Khan her husband the testator goes on to say:—"Now in sound health and full possession of my senses without any persuasion or compulsion and of my own accord I have gifted my moveable property, all my Zamindari and Lamhardari estate, etc., to Muhammad Lutf Ullah Khan, son of Muhammad Ibad Ullah Khan, the brother of my husband, according to the details given below with the exception of the villages and sir land, etc., set out below, name by name, which will remain in my possession for the duration of my life and my dependent relatives (sic) free of rent and Government revenue, out of the aforesaid estate. At this time having exempted them I have made a gift, and by virtue of this deed have authorized the donee to get mutation of names in his favour, and now I have nothing to do with the estate and property gifted, and such villages and sir land aforesaid, as have been at this time for the duration of my life excepted (left out), will be kept by me without transfer by mortgage or sale or gift for my lifetime, and after my death the donee will be the proprietor (malik) of the aforesaid excepted property; and of the excepted property the donee will pay the revenue from the llaqa except of the Patti Manza Gundia. Of the Patti Gundia, I will pay the revenue from my own pocket and the donee will pay all the debts outstanding against the estate. I have nothing to do with them. Therefore, these few words have been written by way of a deed of gift of inheritance and proprietorship on a stamp of Rs. 600-8-0 on a stated value of Rs. 7,000 as a title-deed which will be useful at the time of need." Then follows a detail of the immoveable property gifted in Parganas Bhur and Paila and another detail of "the property excepted", which is described as the village Mundia Misr, standing in the name of the donor for her life without any liability for the payment of the revenue, and the other property now in dispute.

The language of the deed is very inartistic. At one place it seems to suggest that the property described in the second list was excluded from the gift, while at another place it suggests that it was only excepted from the possession of the donee for the lifetime of the donor and that all that the donor retained was dominion over the usufruct or possession for life without any power of transfer by sale, mortgage or gift, with an ultimate reversion after her death, if reversion it can be called, in favour of the donee. Read as a whole, the document leaves little room for doubt that though the disputed property was described as "excepted," it was only excepted from the possession of the donee for the lifetime of the donor and that the donee was to be owner thereof subject to the right of the donor to enjoy the usufruct for her life. The restriction placed by the donor on her power of transfer by mortgage, sale or gift can have otherwise no significance. The reference in two different places to the property having been excepted "at this time" (is waqt) also indicates that the exception was intended to be temporary or for a definite terminable period, and it is significant that the revenue on the "excepted property" other than the share in the village Gundia was made payable by the donee from the date of the gift. An intention to convey the corpus of the estate to the donee from the date of the gift, subject to the right of the donor to remain in possession for her life without any power of transfer by mortgage, sale or gift, is thus manifest.

Under the Hanafi law such conditions are invalid as render the gift nugatory or defeat its very purpose. But as pointed out by Syed Ameer Ali, "an analytical examination of the principles with due regard to the main purpose of the Mussalman Law shows that where the intention is clear to transfer the entire right of property in the corpus of the gift, a mere reservation of interest in its rents and issues, or any profit accruing therefrom or a subordinate share in its enjoyment, does not affect the validity." (Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, Volume I, 4th Edition, page 136). It was accordingly held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Nawab Umiaid Ally Khan v. Musammât Mohumdee Begum (5) that a gift inter vivos of Government promissory notes by a father to his only son, accompanied by a delivery of possession and a transfer into the son's name, without any reservation of the dominion over the corpus by the donor, except a stipulation for the right to the accruing interest on the notes during the donor's life, to be applied by him to certain religious and charitable purposes, was a valid gift according to the Muhammadan Law. Their Lordships were dealing there with a case governed by the Shia law, but the authority on which they relied was the Hedaya, in which an objection that a participation of property in the thing given invalidates the gift was answered as follows:—"The donor is subjected to a participation in a thing which is not the subject of his grant, namely, the use (of the whole indivisible article), for his gift related to the substance of the article, not to the use of it" (Hamilton's Hedaya by Grady, page 483). Discussing this decision, Syed Ameer Ali observes:—"This decision may, at first sight, seem to be in conflict with the doctrine of the Hanafi lawyer, Abul Kasim-as-Saffar, but it must be borne in mind that, in the Hanafi law, much of the voidableness of conditions arises from the character of the Arabic expressions. As a general rule, it may be stated that, where the intention to make an absolute transfer in presenti of all proprietary right is clear, any condition which derogates from the immediate completeness of the gift is regarded as void. Where the condition, however, may be given effect to without in any way interfering with or detracting from the immediate completeness of the gift, or rather the immediate transfer of the right in the substance of the gift, the condition as well as the gift are valid. If a man were to give absolutely his property to another and place the donee in possession thereof, so far as its nature admits, to use the language of the Majm'aa-ul-Anwar with the condition that the whole or a portion of the income should be given to him, the donor, or to anybody else during his lifetime, such a reservation or condition would not prevent the property vesting immediately in the donee. The condition, therefore, would be valid. So also, if a person were to make a gift subject to the donee paying the donor's debts, and place the donee in possession of the subject-matter of the gift, the condition would be valid. Or, if a donor were to make a condition that the donee should give a part of the income or pay an annuity to his heirs in perpetuity, and give effect to the donation by transferring the subject thereof to the dominion of the donee, as the condition in no wise interferes with the completeness of the gift, both the gift and the condition would become operative in law" (Ameer Ali's Muhammadian Law, 4th Edition, Volume I, pages 138 and 139). Any reservation of proprietary rights in the corpus would be inconsistent with an intention to make a gift, but the reservation of a right to the usufruct of a portion of the property given would not be inconsistent, if the intention to give the corpus be otherwise manifest. And would it make any difference if the usufruct was received directly by the donor and not through the donee, for as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Baqar Ali Khan v. Anjuman Ara Begam (6) the substance and not the form should be looked to. The decisions in Mahomed Buksh Khan v. Hosseini Bibi (2) and Chaudhri Mehdi Hasan v. Muhammad Hasan (7) establish that a donor should give such possession as the nature of the property or interest given admits of. If the property given includes a portion over which the donor wants to retain his or her possession for a definite time, it would be unreasonable to hold that he or she should deprive herself of the possession of that portion before the gift can be validated. To require her to withdraw her connection forthwith is to compel her to give more than what she intended to give, or in other words, to disqualify her from reserving anything for herself though it may fall short of proprietary rights. Her possession, so long as the rights so reserved are exercised, is virtually possession on behalf of the owner, for a donor would refuse to accept a gift burdened with such a condition, if he did not assent to it.

Assuming, however, that the gift so far as it related to the disputed property is inoperative, the dispossession can in any event be upheld as bequest, if the intention of the testator be deemed to have been that the property should go to Lutf Ullah Khan in the event of his surviving her. The consent of heirs validates a bequest in excess of a one-third share. Lutf Ullah Khan survived Musammam Munni Bibi and got possession of the disputed property on her death without any question having been raised as to his title by the present plaintiffs. When the sons of Ibrahim Khan determined to file a suit for the estate of Musammam Munni Bibi on the strength of a Will alleged to have been executed by her, they consulted the present plaintiffs, one of whom, Abdul Ghani Khan, wrote in reply: "after prayers for your long life

I have to tell you that with regard to the property left and possessed by sister Munni Bibi deceased, wife of Niamat Ullah Khan, Talukdar and Rais of Jalalpur, about which you have made enquiries, I have no objection whatsoever to the provisions of her Will. You are at liberty to take the said property by virtue of the Will, either by means of a suit or in any other way possible. I have no objection at all. You can take steps with pleasure. Dear Muhammad Abdur Rahman Khan, may God protect him, also holds the same opinion. I have enquired from him." (Exhibit A6). This letter was sent on the 14th November 1910. In the course of the suit which was subsequently filed, this letter was produced and Abdul Ghani Khan was examined as a witness on behalf of the sons of Ibrahim Khan. He then admitted having sent the above letter with the permission of Abdur Rahman Khan, who, he said, was joint with him, and further stated on being cross examined "I never thought of the matter whether I am entitled to the estate of Musammât Munni Bibi or not. I disclaim a share in the property, if I am entitled to it" (Exhibit B8). The heirs of Lutf Ullah Khan were parties to that suit, and it is significant that no claim was then set up by either of the present plaintiffs in that suit or any written statement filed in assertion of the title which they now seek to enforce. The express disclaimer of Abdul Ghani Khan and the conduct of Abdur Rahman Khan in allowing the donee and his heirs to obtain and retain possession and in not asserting any title in himself when a claim was made by others to the estate, show that they felt no concern and have acquiesced in the property going either to the sons of Ibrahim Khan under the Will set up by them or to the heirs of Lutf Ullah Khan under the gift or bequest, whatever it may be called, which Musammât Munni Bibi had made in favour of Lutf Ullah Khan. The consent or acquiescence of heirs is treated as a ratification by the heirs of the conduct of the testator and as pointed out in Daulatram Khushalchand v. Abdul Kayum Nurudin (8), it may be express or be implied from unequivocal conduct such as has been proved

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that the statement in the deed of gift by the donor that after her death "the donee will be the proprietor of the aforesaid exempted property" does not amount to a testamentary disposition. But it is difficult to say what other meaning can be assigned to it, if the words preceding be treated as excluding the disputed property from the gift altogether.

Lutf Ullah Khan and his heirs have, moreover, been holding the property in dispute as ostensible owners since at least 1906 and if the circumstances set forth be accepted as sufficient evidence of the disclaimer, consent or acquiescence of the present plaintiffs, their claim as against the transferees of Lutf Ullah Khan and his son Hamid Ullah Khan would be barred by section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act. The earliest transaction was one of a mortgage made in 1907, and another transaction took place thereafter by which the transferees were placed in possession of the property transferred. A person who has disclaimed a title cannot be allowed to set it up afterwards to the prejudice of third parties, who have purchased the property from the ostensible owner in good faith and for value. The letter and the deposition of Abdul Ghani Khan above referred to show that the attitude taken up by both the plaintiffs was identical.

The defendants-appellants ought, therefore, to succeed. Their appeals are accordingly allowed with costs here and below and the suit of the plaintiffs dismissed with costs throughout. The cross-objections filed by the plaintiffs will be dismissed with costs.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.

ATKINSON, J.—This application comes before us in revision under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code against an order of the learned Munsif, dated the 3rd of November 1917, refusing an application for review of a judgment passed by the learned Munsif on the 29th of May 1917. The action was one for rent, and the rent sought to be recovered was in respect of the years 1320 to 1323. The plaintiffs claimed that the rate of rent was Rs. 124 odd per annum; the defendants on the other hand contended that the rate of rent payable was only Rs. 63 odd. The plaintiffs' case was based upon an entry in the Record of Rights, which disclosed that the rent as recorded was Rs. 124 odd. On the other hand there was a proceeding under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act in which the Settlement Officer found that the rate of rent actually payable was Rs. 63. No appeal appears to have been taken from the order of the Settlement Officer in the section 106 proceeding by either party, and, therefore, the order of the Settlement Officer would appear to be final and conclusive as between the parties to that proceeding. There have been previous rent suits between the same parties. A suit for rent was decreed by the Subordinate Judge in the year 1912 upon the basis of the order of the Settlement Officer. That decree was subsequently set aside by an order of the Calcutta High Court; and their

Lordships in that case suggested to the parties that the proper course to adopt would be to have the Settlement Officer's order reviewed; but notwithstanding the intimation that was given by their Lordships neither party did anything to impeach or challenge the order of the Settlement Officer; hence the difficulty that has arisen. With the above suggestion the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court remanded the case to the Subordinate Judge who on the 12th of February 1916 affirmed the decision of the Munsif awarding a decree to the plaintiffs at the rate of Rs. 124 odd per annum. That decision came before us in second appeal; and while that second appeal was pending, the judgment now complained against was passed on the 29th of May 1917. Our judgment was pronounced on the 11th of July 1917 and by that judgment was confirmed the order of the lower Appellate Court on the ground that it was only a judgment for rent for the years in suit and no more; and that a judgment in a rent suit did not in point of law amount to an estoppel and did not accord with the principles of res judicata unless the rent was payable at a rate stipulated by contract. We also intimated in our judgment that we thought that great weight should be attached to the order made by the Settlement Officer in the section 106 proceeding. After our judgment was pronounced the defendants in the rent suit, who are the present petitioners before us, applied to the learned Munsif to review his order, dated the 29th of May 1917. At the time that the application for review was filed, the learned Munsif who had tried the case had left Arrah and was succeeded by the present Munsif Mr. Syed Hasan. Mr. Syed Hasan considered that in pursuance of the provisions of Order XLVII, rule 2, he, not having been the Judge who tried the suit, had no jurisdiction to entertain the present application for review, as the application presented to him did not come within the four corners of the rule. He held that no new or important matter had been discovered, and that there was no clerical or arithmetical error such as to justify him in interfering with the order of his predecessor. The ground upon which the petitioners based their application for review was that new and important matter had come into existence in the shape of our judgment and that that judgment was material in considering what were the relative rights of the parties. The learned Munsif, however, appears to have failed to appreciate the nature of the new and important matter indicated by Order XLVII, rule 2. Clearly our judgment was a new and important matter which he should have properly considered with a view to ascertaining whether or not it afforded sufficient ground for re-considering the order which had been previously passed on the 29th of May 1917. The learned Munsif has also clearly fallen into an error in two other respects. He has held that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of the 12th of February 1916 amounts to res judicata so far as that judgment establishes that the rate of rent payable by the defendants is Rs. 124 odd per annum. Clearly in holding that that judgment amounted to res judicata between the landlord on the one hand and the tenants on the other the learned Munsif fell into an error. A decree in a rent suit is not res judicata as to the rate of rent payable for years other than the years covered by the decree. Another error which the learned Munsif has made is as regards the weight to be attached to the order of the Settlement Officer. He considers that it has very little weight because it is founded on a judgment of the Subordinate Judge which was subsequently set aside by the Calcutta High Court. That is obviously an error, because though the Settlement Officer's order may have been based upon an order of the Subordinate Judge which was set aside, yet it has, by lapse of time, crystallised into a binding decree between the parties and, therefore, is entitled to great weight. We think, therefore, that the view which the learned Munsif took of Order XLVII, rule 2, is erroneous and that there was new and important matter in the shape of our judgment which he should have considered having regard to the legal directions contained therein. We feel, therefore, that we must set aside the order of the learned Munsif dated the 3rd of November 1917 and direct him to re-try the whole case. The original decree of the 29th of May 1917 is also set aside and the learned Munsif is directed to re-hear the whole case, having due regard to the order of the Settlement Officer which has crystallised into a binding decree between the parties; and also bearing in mind that a rent-decree is not res judicata upon the question of the rate of rent payable in respect of years other than those covered by the decree. This application is accordingly allowed with costs, hearing fee one gold mohur.

MULLICK, J.—I agree. The question whether a decision as to the rate of rent operates as res judicata depends on the frame of the issue. Here the order of the High Court did not permit the Subordinate Judge to determine anything more than the rent of the years in suit.

In order to maintain a suit for the ejectment of a licensee, a notice to quit is not necessary even where the licensee has erected huts upon the land. [p. 318, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Tipperah, dated the 23rd September 1915, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Kasba, dated the 23rd July 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Upendra Kumar Roy, for the Appellants, argued that a mere licensee was not entitled to any notice. Doe v. Knight Quigley (1).

Babu Nitish Chandra Lahiry, for Babu Arun Kumar Ghose, for the Respondent, contended that there were two distinct classes of cases, the first one being of ordinary licensees who had erected no structures on the land and the other that of licensees who had, in acting upon the license, erected structures of a permanent nature on the land. The present case fell under the second head, inasmuch as the respondent, who had been found to be a licensee, was brought upon the land and led to erect katcha huts thereon; and as such the licensee was entitled to notice. Vide Aldin v. Latimer Clark, Muirhead and Co. (2), Winter v. Brockwell (3).

Thus Doe d. Knight v. Quigley (1) cannot apply to the present circumstances.

It was not disputed that the licensee had actually been led to erect katcha huts. It has been held that katcha huts may be permanent structures. Nasir-ul-Zaman Khan v. Azim-ullah (4).

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs for the purpose of ejecting the defendant from certain homestead land in his possession. The case for the plaintiffs was that the defendant was a licensee and was not entitled to any notice to quit. The plaintiffs nevertheless alleged that they had served a notice to quit. The defence raised by the defendant was that he was in possession of the land as the plaintiffs' tenant. Both the Courts below have concurred in finding that there is no relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties. Apparently when the defendant obtained possession, there was some talk of a lease being granted to him but the negotiations came to nothing. The first Court further found that the notice to quit had been served and decreed the suit allowing the defendants two months' time to remove the huts which he had erected. There is nothing to show that these huts were in any sense of the term permanent structures. In the lower Appellate Court the learned Subordinate Judge, though, as I have said, he concurred with the Munsif that the defendant was not a tenant, nevertheless held that he was entitled to a notice to quit and that no notice had been served. In my opinion on the facts found the defendant is a mere licensee and in the words of Lord Ellenborough in Doe d. Knight v. Quigley (1), "If this was a tenure of any sort it was a tenancy at sufferance and a notice to quit was unnecessary." Whether, therefore, any notice to quit was served or not, I agree with the learned Munsif that the plaintiffs are entitled to possession of the land. In the circumstances I am of opinion that the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge should be discharged and the decrees of the Munsif restored, with this modification that the time allowed for removing the huts should be extended for a period of two months from the date of the arrival of the record in the Trial Court. We make no order as to costs. Let the record be sent down as soon as possible.

SUGRIVE MISSER V. JOGI MISSIR.

Mr. G. C. Pal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption in respect of 4-76 acres of land alleged to constitute a raiya holding, which was mortgaged by Ramgolam Misser and Ramdeni Misser, the predecessors of the plaintiffs, to one Rameshwar who is alleged to be the predecessor of the defendants. The suit was contested by defendant No. 1, who denied that Rameshwar was joint with him and asserted that the holding had always belonged to him and that Rameshwar never had any interest therein.

The Munsif found that the defendants had entered into possession through Rameshwar on the strength of the zurpeshgi mortgage and that the allegation that the defendant had title to the holding was false. At the same time the learned Munsif found that in or about 1901 the Maharani of Dumraon, the admitted landlord, attempted to attach and sell certain lands, which included a part of the present holding, in execution of a decree for arrears of rent obtained by her against the present plaintiffs. The defendant No. 1 thereupon brought a title suit against the Maharani joining the present plaintiffs as pro forma defendants and obtained a declaration in 1902 that a part of the land, which was about to be attached and which corresponds to plots Nos. 74, 76, 77, 148, 154, 162, 164, 168, 149 and 175 in the present suit, was not liable to be attached on the ground that he had raiya interest therein. The learned Munsif was of opinion that this decree was res judicata between the defendant No. 1 and the plaintiffs, and, therefore, the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover these plots in the present suit. The learned Munsif also found that since 1901 the defendant No. 1 had been asserting a right as occupancy raiya in respect of these plots adversely to the plaintiffs' title as mortgagors and that, therefore, the suit in respect of these plots was also barred by limitation.

The learned Subordinate Judge in appeal agreed with the Munsif that the defendants got possession as mortgagees and that they had failed to prove that any part of the lands in suit was the first defendant's ancient occupancy holding. He also held that the Munsif's decisions with regard to res judicata and limitation was incorrect and he gave the plaintiffs a decree entitling them to redeem the whole of the lands in suit on payment of a sum of Rs. 160.

The first point urged by the learned Vakil for the defendant-appellant before me is that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong on the point of res judicata.

Now I have to observe at the outset that the learned Vakil has not supplied me, as required by the rules of this Court, with any copies of the translations of the plaint, written statement, decree and judgment upon which he relies for this part of his argument. It is almost impossible to decide whether a former judgment is res judicata unless we have all the pleadings before us. I have, however, with the learned Vakil's assistance examined the vernacular plaint and the judgment in the suit of 1901, upon which the learned Vakil relies and which are on the record of the case before me. It appears from these documents that the defendant No. 1 claimed no relief against the present plaintiffs, who were impleaded as pro forma defendants. It was not alleged in the plaint that he had any cause of action against them. His suit was directed against the Maharani of Dumraon who was defendant No. 1, and he desired to establish that he and not the plaintiffs was the tenant under the Maharani. He had a cause of action against the Maharani, namely, that the Maharani had obtained a decree for arrears of certain lands alleging them to be the holding of the present plaintiffs. There is a faint allegation in the plaint that that decree was collusive, but there is no allegation that there was any collusion between the Maharani and the present plaintiffs. The suit was aimed at the Maharani for the purpose of setting aside the decree on the ground of fraud, but in the absence of any specific allegation against the pro forma defendants in that suit that they were parties to the fraud and in the absence of any claim for relief as against them, it cannot be said that there was any question directly and substantially in issue between them and the plaintiff in that suit. The present plaintiffs were really not necessary parties at all and were impleaded, not because any relief was claimed against them, but because they might assist the Court in the adjudication of the claim against the real defendant, the Maharani of Dumraon. It would seem that the position was so regarded by the present plaintiffs, for they took no trouble to appear in the suit. The Maharani of Dumraon did appear, but finally allowed the suit to be decreed without any substantial contest.

In my opinion the case of Mulhi Kunwar v. Imam-ud-Din (1) is somewhat similar to the case now before me. In that case the plaintiff in the first instance brought a suit for redemption of a mortgage against two sets of defendants, alleging that he had paid half the mortgage money to the second set and the remaining half only was due to the first set. The Court held that the second set of defendants had no concern with the land and that the whole amount of the mortgage-money was due to the first set and he ordered redemption on that footing. The plaintiff thereupon brought a second suit to recover from the second set of defendants what he had paid to them on account of the mortgage, but it was held that the decision in the first suit did not operate as res judicata upon the point whether or not the second set of defendants were interested in the mortgaged property, and that it was open to these defendants to re-agitate this matter as between themselves and the plaintiff in the second suit. I think therefore the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on the point of res judicata is correct and that it is not necessary for the present plaintiffs to set aside the decree of 1902 before proceeding to redeem.

The second point urged by the learned Vakil is that there is no clear finding by the learned Subordinate Judge that the lands in suit were not the ancestral occupancy holding of the defendant No. 1. It appears that the case made by the defendant No. 1 before us is that he has succeeded to Rameshwar's property as a distant agnate upon the death of Rameshwar's son and that Rameshwar took a mortgage of the lands now in suit from persons who had no title to the same. The learned Munsif, however, clearly found that Rameshwar got into possession upon the strength of the zurpeshgi mortgage which was executed so far back as 1883. He also found that the defendants got into possession through Rameshwar and that they were not in possession before the mortgage upon the strength of a title independent of that of Rameshwar. The learned Subordinate Judge, although he has not examined the evidence upon the point in any details, has come to the same conclusion.

I am asked by the learned Vakil to remand the case for a fuller consideration of the evidence, but I think it is unnecessary to do so, having regard to the form that the litigation took in the Courts below. It would seem from the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge that the defendants' main attack was directed to the points of limitation and res judicata. The finding of fact, therefore, being conclusive in second appeal, what is the position as regards limitation? The defendant No. 1 is found to have no independent title and to have been always in occupation as a mortgagee. He was, therefore, in the position of a trustee in regard to the mortgagors and it was not open to him to set up any claim of title adverse to their title. He could not, therefore, by adverse possession have acquired a prescriptive title to plots Nos. 74, 76, 77, 148, 154, 162, 164, 162, 149 and 175. The point of limitation, therefore, must fail. This disposes of all the points argued before me and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Shahabad.

Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sivanandan Rai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit brought by the plaintiff who is the appellant here was dismissed by both the Courts below. During the pendency of the appeal before the Subordinate Judge an application was filed before the District Judge, on the 9th December 1916, for a reference of the case to the arbitration of the persons named therein. This application has been signed by one Narain Lal who was the Plead-er engaged on behalf of the defendants and by Babu Balbir Prasad Plead-er on behalf of the plaintiff. The defendants Nos. 6 to 9 are described in the plaint as pro forma defendants. In the body of the plaint it is said that they were made defendants to avoid any objection and that they need not appear. They did not contest the claim of the plaintiffs. As a matter of fact it appears that they did not appear at any stage of the case. The contest, therefore, was between the plaintiff and the other defendants who appeared in the case.

The petition referred to above was rejected by the District Judge on the ground that all the parties did not join in the application for referring the matter to arbitration. The appeal was dismissed by the lower Court on the merits after hearing the parties on the 8th January 1917.

This is an appeal against the judgment and decree of the lower Court, dated the 8th January 1917. No appeal was preferred against the order, dated 9th December 1916, rejecting the application for referring the dispute to arbitration. The present appeal was filed on the 17th April 1917. It is doubtful whether there is any express provision in the Code of Civil Procedure for an appeal against an order refusing to refer to arbitration on the application of the parties under rule 3 of the Second Schedule. If an order under rule 3 was appealable, then the appeal of the plaintiff against that order was barred by time. Section 104 of the Code of Civil Procedure makes certain orders passed by a Court regarding arbitration matters appealable, but it appears that an order under rule 3 does not come under any of the clauses mentioned in section 104.

It was contended by the learned Vakils on behalf of the respondent that it comes under clause (e) of section 104, but that clause apparently refers to an order passed under rule 18 of the Schedule, for it relates to a stay of suit when there is an agreement outside the Court to refer matters to arbitration, whereas rule 3 relates to the reference by the Court of the matter in difference in a suit pending in Court for final adjudication by the arbitrators appointed by the parties. If section 104 did not apply, there was no appeal from the order rejecting the application and hence there was no bar to the objection being taken in the present appeal. If on the other hand section 104 did apply, the objection could be taken under section 105 in an appeal against the final decree as has been done in this case, for the result of the granting of the petition for reference to arbitration would affect the decision of the case and the decision of the arbitrators would have taken the place of the decision of the lower Appellate Court. Similar was the view taken in the case of Ramautar Tewari v. Deoki Tewari (1) and also in Datta v. Khedu (2). However be that as it may, it appears to me that the second appeal on behalf of the plaintiff should be dismissed upon another ground.

The application filed before the District Judge referred to above praying for the reference of the case to the arbitrators for arbitration has not been signed by the parties themselves. The Pleaders of the parties who have signed the application do not appear to have had any express authority given to them by the powers-of-attorney or Vakalatnamahs filed in this case. They had, therefore, no power to make this application on behalf of their clients.

The power of a Pleader is defined in the Vakalatnamah or power-of-attorney given to him. A Pleader has no right to compromise on behalf of his client unless expressly authorised to do so; nor is he empowered to refer a matter to arbitration except by an express authority in that behalf.

The principle appears to have been recognised in the case of Jagapati Mudaliar v. Ekambara Mudaliar (3) and in Thakoor Pershad v. Kalka Pershad (4). In the case of Ramjiwan Ram v. Kali Charan Singh (5) it was held that a Pleader should not apply for an order for referring a case to arbitration unless he has been expressly authorised to do so. A Vakalatnamah in general terms is wholly insufficient. This ruling added further that where, however, a party on whose behalf an application is signed knows about it and acquiesces in it, he cannot raise an objection for want of authority to the Pleader afterwards. Well the first portion of the ruling supports the view that I have taken whereas there is nothing on the record to show that the parties in this case acquiesced in the filing of the application. There are so many defendants in the case and so it is impossible to say whether all the defendants were present or they acquiesced in that application. As a matter of fact the parties had the appeal heard and decided by the Judge and in this Court the defendants contest the application for reference filed before the Judge.

The definition of Pleader given in clause 5 of section 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure makes it clear that the position of a Pleader is that of an agent in relation to his client and his power is, therefore, created entirely by the Vakalatnamah given to him by his client.

In this case there is no express authority in either of the Vakalatnamahs filed on behalf of the plaintiff or the defendants to refer the matter to arbitration. I, therefore, hold that the application has been filed without any authority at all. Under rule 1 of the Second Schedule an application for an order for reference to arbitration must be made by all the parties interested and that application must be in writing. In this case there was no application in writing made by the parties themselves nor by their authorised agents. The application was, therefore, rightly rejected by the lower Court.

On behalf of the respondents it was also contended that all the parties to the suit were not made parties to the application for reference to arbitration. This was the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge. The point is a controversial one. Rule 1, as it now stands, is different from the corresponding section 506 of the old Code of Civil Procedure. In the place of all the parties to the suit in the old Code we have in the present Code "all the parties interested." This obviously means that all the parties interested in the litigation only need be parties to the application. It is a question of fact in each case as to who are the parties interested in the litigation. In the present case upon the pleading the defendants Nos. 6 to 9 do not appear to have been interested in the litigation; they were expressly named as pro forma defendants and were made defendants with the express words that they need not enter appearance in case they had no objection to the claim of the plaintiff. As a matter of fact they did not appear at any stage of the litigation. It is needless to say more upon the point, for, as already observed, there was no proper application before the lower Court as required by the Second Schedule. It was argued, however, on behalf of the appellant that clause 2 of rule 1 of the Schedule requiring that the application shall be in writing is only directory and not mandatory, and that the application may be made orally by the parties.

Reliance has been placed upon the ruling in Abdul Hamid v. Riaz-ud-din (6) for the above contention. In that case the application was made orally by the parties who were identified by their respective Pleaders before the Court and their application was reduced in writing by the Court itself, and the matter was thereupon referred under the orders of the Court to arbitration. The facts in that case are quite dissimilar to the facts in the present case and in the particular circumstances of that case the requirements of the rule might be taken to have been complied with. I, therefore, hold that there is no substance in the contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant. This is the only ground upon which the appeal has been pressed before me.

The learned Vakil made a passing reference in the course of his argument that he was entitled to a modification of the decree of the Court below in that he should have been allowed a right of easement to go over the land of the defendants in order to repair his wall. This point does not appear to have been pressed in the Courts below and there is no reference to it at all in the judgment of either Court. It has not been seriously pressed before me as well, and I do not think that there is any force at all in the contention. Apart from its having been raised at a late stage, it should not be permitted in second appeal unless there is a substantial ground for the new point to be raised. I, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Provincial Small Causes Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 8—Suit against partner for share of rent, whether suit for rent—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court.

Defendant, in consideration of being admitted as a partner in the plaintiff's tenancy, agreed to pay to the latter a certain sum as his estimated share of the rent of the holding:

Held, that the payment was not rent within the meaning of Article 8, Schedule II, of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act, so that a suit for its recovery was cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. [p. 324, col. 1.]

Civil revision from an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Fatehpur.

FACTS.—Plaintiff was the tenant of certain land. He took the defendant in as a partner in the tenancy and they agreed to cultivate the holding jointly and to divide the crops equally. The rent of the holding was estimated at Rs. 60 and defendant agreed to pay to the plaintiff Rs. 30 annually as his share of the rent. Defendant failed to make the payment and plaintiff thereupon instituted a suit for the recovery of the sum in the Revenue Court. That Court held that the relationship between the parties was not that of tenant and sub-tenant and that, therefore, it had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The plaintiff then brought a suit to recover the sum in a Court of Small Causes. That Court, however, also declined to entertain the suit on the ground that it was a suit for rent and was, therefore, excluded from the cognisance of a Court of Small Causes by Article 8 of Schedule II of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act. Plaintiff applied to the High Court in revision.

Mr. J. N. Mukerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. Bhagwati Shankar, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for money in a Court of Small Causes. That Court has refused to entertain it on the ground that it is not cognizable by that Court, being a suit for rent. It presumably refers to paragraph (8) of the Second Schedule to the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act, IX of 1887. If it were a suit for rent at all it, would be cognizable by a Revenue Court under the provisions of the Tenancy Act, and the Revenue Court has already refused to entertain a claim for this money, though the defendant is not to blame for this. On the plaint as drafted the claim is for damages for breach of a contract. I set aside the order of the Court below and direct the Court to re-admit the suit on to its file of pending cases and to dispose of it according to law. Execution—Instalment decree—Default—Acceptance of overdue instalments, whether evidence of waiver—Limitation.

Where a decree provides for payment by instalments subject to the condition of the entire decretal amount becoming payable at once on failure to pay any fixed number of instalments regularly, the mere acceptance of overdue instalments by the decree-holder is not of itself sufficient proof of waiver on his part to execute the decree for the entire amount. [p. 324, col. 2.]

Whether the payment and acceptance of an overdue instalment is to be treated as a payment regularly made in satisfaction of the instalments due, so as to extend the period of limitation for execution of the decree, is a question of fact. [p. 324, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

PRATT, J. C.—This is a second appeal from an order made in appeal by the Joint Judge of Hyderabad, dismissing the appellants' application for execution of an instalment decree made on the 5th November 1909. The decree provided for payment of a decretal sum of Rs. 1,800 by instalments of Rs. 35 per mensem, the first instalment being payable on 13th November 1909. The appellant alleged that he had received the sum of Rs. 300 by 9 different payments of Rs. 30, Rs. 40, and Rs. 50 between the 2nd January 1911 and 24th December 1912. The darkhast was dismissed as time-barred because the decree provided that when 3 consecutive instalments fell due the defendant should pay the decretal money at once. This default had, on the appellants' own showing, occurred in January 1910. The point raised in appeal is that the appellants had waived their right to enforce the default provision in the decree. It has been held that the mere acceptance of overdue instalments is not of itself sufficient proof of waiver, see the case of Kashiram v. Pandu (1) and Kimatrai v. Wadero Sher Mahomed Khan (2). There is no other evidence of waiver in this case beyond the acceptance of overdue instalments and the fact that the appellants are now seeking to enforce the same provision in the decree is not consistent with the plea that they had waived it. The question whether the acceptance of overdue instalments has the effect of extending the period of limitation is one which was decided here as in the High Court of Bombay on the doctrine of mutual estoppel and the question here is, whether by paying and accepting these instalments, parties understood that they were to proceed on the footing that these Rs. 300 were to be treated as having been paid regularly in satisfaction of the first 8 or 9 instalments. This is really a question of fact. The lower Courts have come to the conclusion that no such estoppel was worked because the first payment was made 14 months after the first instalment was due and the payments were not made regularly or in sums which were equivalent of any one instalment or a multiple of any one instalment. This is a finding of fact with which we cannot interfere in second appeal.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 10—Trust—Assignment of land—Suit for possession—Limitation.

Where as the result of a mutual arrangement plaintiff assigned some land to the defendant who was to remain in possession of it taking profits and bearing loss until the termination of the assignment:

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Appellants.

Bakshi Tek Chand, for Bhagirath Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This suit relates to a small property in Tika Kachher, Dhakhli Ghorkari, a village in the Kangra District.

According to a statement in the Record of Rights of 1862 the then owners had assigned it three years previously to the predecessors-in-interest of the present defendants, who were in possession as assignees according to mutual arrangement and would so continue taking profit and bearing loss until the assignment terminated. The assignors were shown in the proprietary column of the records as tafwiz kunindgan and the assignees were shown in the same column as mufawwas alaihim. The same entries reappeared in the Settlement of 1891 and again in that of 1910.

In 1914 the plaintiffs as representatives of the original assignors applied for mutation in their own favour and on their application being refused by the Revenue Officer instituted the present suit for possession.

In the Court of the Munsif they obtained a decree but on appeal their suit was dismissed by the Additional Judge. They have now preferred a second appeal to this Court.

The question is whether the suit is one governed by section 10 of the Limitation Act. Counsel for the appellants relies on Mitra Lal Sahi v. Rajib Lochan Joshi (1). That was a case in which certain land had been left by the owners in the custody of another person, on the condition that it should be restored to them or their representatives whenever either should demand it and it was held that the trust originally granted was not a constructive but an express trust, to which section 10 of the Limitation Act applied.

Counsel for the respondents has cited Roshan ul-Din v. Patta (2), Shera v. Qulba (3), Fazl Din v. Shah Muhammad (4), Dhan Singh v. Har Narain (5) and Barkat v. Daulat (6). All of these were cases in which it was urged that the persons in possession were holding as trustees, because it had been laid down in the Records of Rights that when the absentees returned and wanted the land it would be restored to them. It was consistently held that entries of this kind did not constitute a trust and it was held that the defendants had acquired adverse possession after abandonment of the original owners.

In none of the cases, however, was there any indication that the persons in possession had obtained the land as the result of an arrangement with the original owners. Rather they had taken possession as the result of an abandonment which had already occurred. Under such circumstances obviously no trust is created, but in the present case it is clear that the possession of the defendants was the result not of abandonment but of what is expressly described as a mutual agreement and one which dated from the time when the defendants first obtained possession. For these reasons the present case is distinguishable from those on which Counsel for the respondents has relied.

Here there is an express trust, the land having been made over to the assignees to hold for the assignors.

I hold, therefore, that the suit is within time, and accepting the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Munsif. The plaintiffs will get costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—These appeals arise out of suits for rent brought by the appellants against the respondents for the years 1317 to 1320 Fasli. The claim for 1317 and 1318 was bhaoli and naqdi. The Subordinate Judge decreed the claims in all the suits in part. The learned District Judge in appeal further reduced the claim for the years 1319 and 1320 to the amount admitted by the defendants-respondents.

As regards the claim for bhaoli rent for 1317 and 1318, the learned District Judge set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit on the ground that the claim was barred by the principle of res judicata. The plaintiffs have, therefore, come to this Court in second appeal. The following contentions have been raised on their behalf:—

(1) That the learned District Judge wrongly applied the principle of res judicata to the claim for 1317 and 1318.

(2) That the learned District Judge should not have allowed bhaoli rent for 1319 and 1320 according to the admission of the defendants, but should have allowed the amount determined by the Subordinate Judge.

The amount of naqli rent allowed by the District Judge in respect of the years 1319 and 1320 has not been disputed in this appeal.

As to the second contention, the District Judge has recorded a clear finding of fact that the plaintiffs had given no definite idea of the amount of outturn. This finding has been arrived at upon the consideration of the plaint and the evidence given in the case, notably of the Patwari who admitted in his evidence that no appraisal or even detailed estimate of the crop was made in respect of the lands of the tenants sued. There is absolutely no reason why this finding should be disturbed in second appeal. This disposes of the contention of the appellants so far as the claim for the years 1319 and 1320 is concerned.

The first contention of the appellants deserves a more careful consideration. The principle of res judicata has been applied upon an earlier decision in Title Suit No. 87 of 1912 by the then Subordinate Judge of Gaya, Babu Prayag Nath, of the claim of the plaintiff in respect of the years 1317 and 1318. In that suit the finding of the Subordinate Judge was as follows:—

DHANESWAR PRASAD NARAIN SINGH V. POOKHAR PANDAY.

"It is, therefore, impossible to ascertain in these suits the quantity and kind of crops in defendant's bhaoli lands. The determination of the question involved in this issue No. 4 must be left for separate rent suits to be hereafter brought by the plaintiff".

The judgment was concluded in the following words:—

"That the plaintiffs' claim for rent of bhaoli land be dismissed leaving the plaintiffs at liberty to sue for the rent of such land." The decree prepared in the suit also contains the same words.

The defendants in that case went in appeal to the High Court and objected to the aforesaid order of the Subordinate Judge giving liberty to the plaintiffs to bring another suit for the rent for the years in claim. The ground taken in the memorandum of appeal is as follows:—

"That the plaintiffs not being able to prove their claim the lower Court should have dismissed it and was not justified in ordering that the plaintiffs were at liberty to bring another suit for its recovery, specially when no such prayer was made by the plaintiffs".

Upon the above point taken in appeal, his Lordship of the Calcutta High Court (Fletcher, J.) observed as follows:—

"The lower Court has left the question as to the amount of rent open to be settled in any future suit that may be brought by the parties. We do not express any opinion as to whether the Judge had or had not the power of giving the plaintiffs the liberty to withdraw from the suit so far as that claim is concerned. That must be decided in proper proceedings that the plaintiffs may choose to institute".

The result was that the order of the Subordinate Judge leaving the question to be decided in another suit by the plaintiffs remained undisturbed by the High Court. I do not think the plaintiffs are precluded from laying their present claim for the bhaoli rent for the years 1317 and 1318 by reason of the above order of the Subordinate Judge in their former suit. Although an issue was raised in that suit, yet the Subordinate Judge rightly or wrongly did not decide the issue and there can be no res judicata under section 11 unless the issue was "heard and finally decided" by the Court. This is an essential condition for the application of the principle of res judicata.

The learned District Judge has relied on Sukh Lal v. Bhikhi (1). But in that case it was held upon evidence that the plaintiff was entitled to one-third share of the land in suit. The issue about the title of the plaintiff was decided and determined; yet the Munsif wrongly dismissed the suit, adding that his order will not prevent the plaintiff from instituting another suit for the one-third share decided in his favour. The second suit by the plaintiff brought for possession of the one-third share was held barred by res judicata on the ground that his title was declared and decided in the first suit and that the Munsif wrongly dismissed the whole claim instead of granting him relief in respect of one-third interest to which he was entitled and the plaintiff could rectify the decree by a review or an appeal. It was pointed out by Mahmud, J., that "where an issue has been raised and evidence received and adjudication arrived at, the suit does become res judicata". This ruling, therefore, does not apply to the present case, inasmuch as although an issue was raised there was no adjudication arrived at by the Subordinate Judge in the first suit.

The present case is rather similar to the case of Ram Charan Buhardar v. Reaz-ul-din (2), where the Courts declined to decide the issue and dismissed the plaintiff's suit without prejudice to his right to bring a fresh suit for possession of the same lands. It was held that what "was left undecided in the former suit cannot be said to have been heard and finally decided within the meaning of section 13 of the Code". The following observation in that case applies to this case as well:—

"It may be that in the former suit both Courts ought, properly speaking, to have insisted on proper issues being raised, and to have tried those issues upon the best evidence that the parties could adduce. But we are not prepared to say that the course taken by those Courts was ultra vires. They considered, rightly or wrongly, that they were not in a position to try the main question in the cause."

In Lungmead v. Maple (3) the plaintiff's suit was dismissed without prejudice to his right to bring another suit. It was held that the subsequent action by the plaintiff was not barred by the principle of res judicata. Willes, J., laid down that "the conditions for the exclusion of jurisdiction on the ground of res judicata are that the same identical matters shall have come in question already in a Court of competent jurisdiction, that the matter shall have been controverted and that it shall have been finally decided."

The above principle is affirmed by Lord Macnaghten in Sheosagar Singh v. Sitaran Singh (4), where his Lordship says as follows:—"To support a plea of res judicata it is not enough that the parties are the same and that the same matter is in issue. The matter must have been 'heard and finally decided'."

That case is much stronger than the present one, as in that case the plaintiff's suit was dismissed on merits by the Subordinate Judge and in appeal the High Court, while dismissing the case, withheld any decision on the issue concerning the merits of the case. There can be no res judicata when the question is left open: vide Gungabishen Bhugut v. Raghonath Ojha (5), Chunder Coomar Mitter v. Sib Sundari Dassee (6) and Ghurphekni v. Purnmeshor Dayal Dubey (7).

In the Privy Council case of Parsotam Gir v. Narbada Gir (8), where the plaintiff's suit was dismissed by the High Court of Allahabad leaving it open to the plaintiffs to institute a fresh suit, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the former judgment did not operate as res judicata, on the ground that the Judges in the former suit did not intend to decide anything as between the parties and left it open to the plaintiffs to institute a suit against the defendant.

As to the contention about the order of the Court giving the plaintiff liberty to bring another suit it was answered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the following words:—

"The question is not whether the judgment of the High Court in 1886 was right, but whether it did or did not finally decide the ...question as between Nepal Gir and Narbada Gir. It would be a contradiction in terms to say that the Court had finally decided the matters which it expressly left 'untouched and undecided.'"

The learned District Judge has tried to distinguish the aforesaid Privy Council ruling on the ground that "The Privy Council had before it two unintelligible judgments and, therefore, it was not possible to say with certainty that the question at issue in the second suit had been at issue in the first suit." This is not the ground upon which their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the principle of res judicata did not apply.

The ground was that the question was left undecided as is clear from the following words:—

"One thing, however, is plain; the learned Judges in 1886 did not intend to decide anything as between Nepal Gir and Narbada Gir."

Their Lordships of the Privy Council in a recent case, Abulullah Ashgar Ali Khan v. Ganesh Das (9), have held that the principle of res judicata did not apply where the Court of Appeal refused to determine the issue.

It is thus clear from the summary of the decisions referred to above that the refusal of the Court to determine an issue does not operate as res judicata. It does not matter whether the Court was right or wrong in refusing to try the issue, or in giving liberty to bring another suit. The Code of Civil Procedure in section 11 has clearly laid down that the matter must have been "heard and finally decided" in order to apply the bar of res judicata to a subsequent suit.

MUHAMMAD FAIYAZ ALI KHAN V. BEHARI.

I, therefore, hold that the claim of the plaintiffs for the bhaoli rent of 1317 and 1318 was not barred by reason of the decision in the former Suit No. 87 of 1912 and that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for the amount of rent proved by them for the years 1317 and 1318. The case must, therefore, be remanded to the lower Appellate Court to determine the amount of rent that the plaintiffs are entitled to for the years 1317 and 1318 and to return its finding to this Court by the 1st April.

ROE, J.—I agree that it is not res judicata that the appellants are not entitled to any rent at all for the years 1317 and 1318, and, therefore, concur in the proposed order remanding the case for a trial of the issue; what amount is due for the years 1317 and 1318. I do not consider it necessary to decide at present whether anything at all was decided by the previous litigation.

Munshi Panna Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by Nawab Mumtaz-ud-daula Faiyaz Ali Khan, who in his plaint sets himself out as, and who is further admitted to be, the sole Zemindar of the village to which this appeal relates. The respondents are in the plaint described as the village Bantias and as being shopkeepers in the said village. The plaintiff is claiming 12 maunds of cotton seeds or the value thereof. It is true that in the plaint the plaintiff set out that there was a custom of such payment in the village. This amount of the seeds is payable for each shop occupied by the Bantias in the Bazar. But in the written statement, which was filed, we note that the respondents themselves alleged that at the most the entry in the wajib-ul-arz amounts to an agreement between themselves and the plaintiff, the terms of which expired at the end of the former Settlement of 1866. As the case went on, it is evident that the Courts below tried the question between the plaintiff and the defendants as a question of parjote. The Court of first instance held that the payment of this parjote was a custom proved. He says that it is parjote or ground-rent and not a cess and cannot be called illegal and the wajib-ul-arz of 1866 is a good evidence of the custom set up by the plaintiff but the Court went on to hold that the custom had fallen into desuetude and dismissed the claim of the plaintiff. The plaintiff went in appeal to the District Judge of Aligarh. That Court took a different view from the Court of the first instance and held that the custom to take ground-rent had not been proved. It, therefore, dismissed the appeal.

The plaintiff comes here in second appeal and the first plea taken by him is that the entry in the wajib-ul-arz is a record of custom and proves the custom set up by the plaintiff-appellant, and a further plea is taken that in any case the plaintiff-appellant is entitled to get a reasonable rent of the land in the possession of the defendants-respondents. We are of opinion that the word custom throughout has been wrongly used. In case of an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendants it can never be said for a moment that the rent they paid was rent payable by force of custom. The word used in the wajib-ul-arz is Parjote and points to the fact that if the payment of anything from the respondents to the appellant was due, it was a matter based upon some agreement in the first instance. At first sight the way in which this payment was to be made may strike one as somewhat strange, but it is not so strange as to be impossible. The definition of rent sanctions the view that rent may be something paid in cash and also something paid in kind. When this is borne in mind, we are of opinion that the lower Appellate Court has approached the evidence it had to consider from a wrong point of view. There is on the record the wajib-ul-arz of 1870. We had that wajib-ul-arz read to us and we see nothing in the language which will justify the inference that the matters recorded in paragraph two * were unlikely or improbable. We look upon that paper as a statement made fifty years ago, more or less, by a person who was qualified and had the knowledge necessary to make it. It is not a statement narrating a tradition, but it is a statement by a person possessing an interest and an existing right in the village. It is extremely improbable that the person was making a statement to perpetrate a fraud or was making a statement which was false to be used fifty years afterwards. There was nothing to rebut that statement and we hold that the payment of parjote by the respondents to the appellant is proved thereby.

We accordingly set aside the decrees of both the Courts below and decree the plaintiff's claim with costs in all Courts and future interest at the usual rate.

Appeal decreed.

Mr. Atul Krishna Rai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Jamini Mohan Mukerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this action seek a declaration that the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 have no right to share in the house forming the subject-matter of this suit. The facts shortly stated are that one Gopal, who was the common ancestor of the defendants, lived with his two grandsons, Hatim and Seru. The other members of the family had separated from him, to this extent, that they did not live with him and the daughters who were married resided in their own houses with their husbands. Gopal, who was a man of advanced age, resided with his two grandsons, Hatim and Seru, and it is alleged that on the 22nd April 1895, Gopal disposed of his interest in the two houses which he had by transferring them to Hatim and Seru. The kebala which was executed by Gopal appears on its face to be a deed of absolute sale and the consideration money specified therein to support the transaction is the sum of Rs. 100. At the time that the deed was executed Hatim and Seru were quite young, and although they are described in the deed of sale as shopkeepers, the learned Judge on appeal seems to think that it was quite impossible for Hatim and Seru to have had the means of paying the money specified in the sale-deed. Hatim got into difficulties and his creditors proceeded against him and obtained a decree and on foot of that decree proceeded against these two houses to realise the amount of their debt. In that execution proceeding Seru objected that the houses were partly his and that Hatim was only entitled to a half share in each house. Accordingly in that matter the Court was pleased to exclude the share of Seru from the execution proceedings and the sale proceeded, and the plaintiffs became decree-holder purchasers of Hatim's interest in the houses alleged to have been conveyed by the deed of the 22nd of April 1895.

Then the members of Gopal's family other than Hatim and Seru appeared on the scene and contended that Hatim and Seru never got possession of the houses, that they did not form part of the property of Hatim and Seru and that, therefore, the plaintiffs got nothing by their purchase.

Accordingly the contest lies between the plaintiff on the one hand and the members of Gopal's family other than Hatim and Seru on the other. The members of Gopal's family claimed that the houses in suit formed their property and that the plaintiffs acquired no title at all by virtue of their purchase in the execution proceeding.

Everything turns in this case upon the true construction of the deed of sale, dated the 22nd of April 1895.

The learned Judge has come to the conclusion that no consideration money passed at all, that Hatim and Seru had no means with which to pay Rs. 100 as consideration money; and that, therefore, the document of the 22nd April 1895 was inoperative as a deed of sale. The learned Judge, however, seems to think that although the deed is inoperative as a deed of sale, nevertheless it was open to him in point of law to hold that the deed was a gift having regard to the intention of the party making it. Having considered the matter carefully in view of the authorities cited, we think that the learned Judge was wrong in coming to the conclusion that the deed of the 22nd of April 1895 was a gift. The case of Ismail Musajee Mookerdum v. Hafiz Boo (1) has been relied on before us, but we are of opinion that the facts of that case are distinctly distinguishable from the facts of this case. In that case their Lordships were pleased to hold that although the deed in question was not on the face of it operative as a deed of sale, yet from its frame and from surrounding circumstances it was clear that the intention of the donor in that case was to make a gift and not a transaction by way of sale and purchase. But in the present case we do not find one single word or one single fact which would lead us to hold that the intention of the maker of the deed was to grant a gift. No such express or implied intention can be gathered from the deed itself. We are bound by the well-established principle of law that the deed must be construed by what appears within the four corners of the document itself and that we cannot go outside the deed for the purpose of showing the intention of the maker. Acting upon that general principle, we can find nothing in the deed which would justify the conclusion that the deed was a deed of gift. Accordingly we hold that the learned Judge was wrong in coming to the conclusion he did; and that as no consideration passed to support the deed of sale dated the 22nd of April 1895, no title was acquired by Hatim and Seru in respect of the houses in suit and consequently the plaintiffs acquired nothing by their purchase.

We would accordingly set aside the order of the learned Judge and allow this appeal with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Gobind Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff and the respondent are brothers and the plaintiff sues to recover one-third of a square from the defendant. The defendant's plea was that when the plaintiff had served him with a notice of ejectment, he had brought a suit in the Revenue Court to contest that notice, whereupon the parties reached a compromise whereby the plaintiff ceded the land in dispute to the defendant and defendant withdrew his suit in the Revenue Court. The first Court found that such a compromise had been effected and that the land in suit had been given by the plaintiff to the defendant, and dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned District Judge has decreed for the plaintiff, on the ground that before the parties recorded a compromise in the Revenue Court an agreement to get mutation of the land effected had been executed, that the agreement had not been registered and consequently had not been produced by the defendant and, therefore, no secondary evidence of the contents of the document could be received. This reasoning, in our opinion, is unsound. The compromise was recited to the Revenue Court and that Court embodied in its proceedings the essential portions of the compromise and taking cognizance of them dismissed the present defendant's suit at his request. The compromise being embodied in the proceedings of the Court required no registration. Further the case is a clear one of estoppel. By his admission of the compromise before the Revenue Court the plaintiff induced his brother to withdraw his suit, a course which otherwise he would not have adopted.

For these reasons we accept the appeal and restore the decree of the first Court with costs throughout.

Messrs. Saroshi Charan Mitter and Ram Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nares Chandra Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The claim in this suit, in the form in which it was originally presented, was one for ejectment coupled with a claim for compensation for user by the defendants of their holding, as tenants of the plaintiffs, in a manner which was unfit for the purposes of the tenancy. The defendants are the tenants of the plaintiff in respect of 14 Bighas 7 Kattas 19 Dhurs of land. The lands of which the defendants are tenants are claimed by them as their kashtkari lands situated in Mauza Bangra; and in a basti adjacent to the lands in dispute the defendants have what is termed a residence. In or about the year 1912 the defendants erected, upon 7½ Dhurs of the [14 Bighas 7 Kattas 19 Dhurs of land in their possession as tenants, a katcha-pucca house which may have been intended either for purposes of a dwelling house or as a shed for their cattle. The plaintiff brings this suit basing his claim on section 155 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The plaintiff alleges that the defendants in erecting the house in question have used the holding for purposes inconsistent with the nature of the tenancy. Both the lower Courts have held that the erection of the house was an improvement, and we gather from the observations of the lower Appellate Court that the improvement was of a suitable character having regard to the nature of the tenancy. This finding of fact arrived at by the lower Courts practically disposes of this appeal. The plaintiff entirely abandoned his claim for ejectment, certainly in the lower Appellate Court, and he merely claimed compensation for the alleged damage sustained by him. A tenant is entitled to effect on his holding any improvement which would add to the value of the holding. The clauses which specify what constitutes improvements within the meaning of section 76 of the Bengal Tenancy Act are not exhaustive. However, clause (j) of sub-section (2) of section 76 of the Act provides that a Raiyat may erect a suitable dwelling house for himself and his family together with all necessary outhouses. Both the lower Courts have, however, come to a definite finding of fact that the erection put up by the defendant is an improvement, and the lower Appellate Court holds that the improvement is consistent with the purposes of the tenancy. This is a finding of fact by which we are bound in second appeal. The fact that the defendants have a house in an adjacent Mauza would not, in our opinion, deprive them of their right to erect upon their occupancy holding another house for the purpose of making a residence for themselves and their family.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—The plaintiff first sued as heir of his natural mother Namammal, the nominal mortgagee under Exhibit A, the document sued on. The Subordinate Judge, in appeal, found that he was not entitled to sue as her heir and gave leave to amend the plaint. The plaintiff in his amended plaint alleged that the document was taken in the name of his mother for his benefit by one Srirangammal, widow of Appanna Ayyangar, as there were then disputes going on as to whether the plaintiff had been lawfully adopted by Appanna Ayyangar and it was desired to benefit him in any event. Both the District Munsif and the District Judge have found that the mortgage money was advanced by Srirangammal, Appanna Ayyangar's widow, out of the sale proceeds of properties which had formed part of his estate and had been sold by her under Exhibit C as guardian of the plaintiff and on the footing that he was the adopted son of Appanna Ayyangar. They have also found that this was done to defraud Rangasami Ayyangar, who was also claiming to have been adopted, in the event of the disputes ending in his favour and the District Judge, applying apparently the maxim allegans suam turpitudinem non est audiendus, has dismissed the suit. The plaintiff's cause of action in the amended claim is that the mortgage was taken benami in his name for this fraudulent purpose and it appears to be well settled, as laid down by A. G. Smith, L. J., in Scott v. Brown (1), that, if a plaintiff cannot maintain his cause of action without showing that as part of such cause of action he has been guilty of illegality, the Courts will not assist him in his illegality. See also Taylor v. Chester (2), Gordon v. Metropolitan Police Commissioner (3). In Feret v. Hill (4) a plaintiff who had taken premises for the purposes of using them for prostitution and had been ejected by the landlord for so using them was allowed to recover possession from the landlord, but this has been explained in Gordon v. Metropolitan Police Commissioner (3), on the ground that the plaintiff was entitled to possession under his lease and that the purpose for which he acquired the premises was not a matter which he had to prove to establish his cause of action.

In the present case the plaintiff as part of his cause of action has to prove that the mortgage taken in the name of Namammal was benami for him, and the finding is that it was so taken with a fraudulent intention. It is, however, well settled that this is not a bar to a suit unless a fraud has been in fact effected. Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandi Servai (5). The mortgage money, in the present case, was the proceeds of certain properties sold by the widow of Appanna Ayyangar under Exhibit C and Rangasami Ayyangar having by Exhibit D renounced his claim to be the adopted son and to the properties comprised in Exhibit C, it follows, in my opinion, that no fraud has been effected in this case and the plaintiff is entitled to succeed. I would reverse the decision of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the District Munsif with costs throughout.

OLDFIELD, J.—With all respect I am not at present clear that the present case is one of those, in which the plaintiff cannot maintain his cause of action without showing as part of it that he or a person, under whom he claims, has been guilty of illegality. No doubt in the plaint, as amended, he said that "the amount of the suit land was given from the estate of his adoptive father by his adoptive mother for his benefit and the document was obtained in the name of his natural mother benami, having in view the litigation that was going on then regarding his adoption; and this was an admission of a wrongful conversion which no attempt has been made to defend. But it has not so far been shown that this averment or proof of it was necessary for the establishment of plaintiff's case; or that more was required than proof that his natural mother, the ostensible mortgagee, had the funds and invested them, whatever their origin, for plaintiff's benefit, in a manner which was innocent in itself, in the suit mortgage. If such proof could be given without reference to that origin, it and plaintiff's admission regarding it would be immaterial. The distinction involved is justified by reference to Tassell v. Cooper (6), Farmer v. Russell (7) and Gordon v. Metropolitan Police Commissioner (3), the plaintiff in the two last mentioned cases having actually alleged and given evidence of a tainted origin for the money claimed. This aspect of the case was not present to the minds of the lower Courts, and, if these were the only facts, I should think that a remand, in order to its consideration, would be necessary.

There is, however, Exhibit B which, I agree with my Lord, covers the land from the sale of which the money lent under the suit mortgage was derived, and the money itself, and whether the result of that document is to negative the carrying out

Bombay Land Revenue Code (Bom. Act V of 1879), s. 203—Executive order of Revenue Officer—Appeal, right of, by aggrieved person not party to inquiry—Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876), s. 10.

Under section 203 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, the right of appeal against an executive order of a Revenue Officer is vested in every person aggrieved by the order, irrespective of his being a party to the inquiry wherein the order was passed. [p. 335, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Hyderabad.

Mr. Kewalram Jethanand, for the Appellant.

Mr. E. Raymond, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant sues the first defendant and the Secretary of State, alleging that the land to the north of his shop over which he had frontage rights and, therefore, as he says, a right of prior grant, had been wrongly sold by the Deputy Collector to the first defendant.

His prayer is that the land should be granted to him on payment of Rs. 13-14-0.

This prayer makes the Deputy Collector's order the cause of action and is equivalent to a prayer for an injunction on the Secretary of State to grant the land to himself. The District Judge held the suit barred by section 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act, 1876, on the ground that there had been no appeal from the Deputy Collector to the Collector or at any rate from the Collector to the Commissioner.

The contention of the plaintiff in this Court is that he was not a party to the proceeding before the Deputy Collector and had, therefore, no right of appeal under section 203 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code.

Section 203 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code provides for an appeal from "any decision or order passed by a Revenue Officer." The words "any order" are very wide and include orders that are either executive or judicial or quasi-judicial. The latter class of order should be passed by the Collector after an inquiry which may be formal or summary or ordinary (sections 193, 195 and 197). In such a case there would be a judicial or quasi-judicial inquiry and it might be contended that the right of appeal was limited to a party to that inquiry. But if the order is, as in the present case, a mere executive order professing to dispose of Government land, there would be no inquiry or proceeding, to which the appellant could be a party. In such a case it seems to us that the right of appeal is vested in the person aggrieved by the order. This seems to be in consonance with the language and intention of section 203 and apparently it was the view taken of the section in the cases of Natha v. Secretary of State (1) and Government of Bombay v. Bhimbhai Sundarji (2).

This construction involves no hardship for if the Collector has put the first defendant into possession or done a physical act that violates plaintiff's right, that would supply a cause of action to which section 11 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act would be no bar; Sultan Mahamed Shah v. Secretary of State (3).

There is moreover another fatal objection to plaintiff's suit, for it affects to control the disposal by Government of Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), ss. 8, 9, 98—Probate granted to some executors without citation upon others—Remedy of other executors—Executors not liable to render accounts under Will, whether exempt from exhibiting accounts to Court.

Where Probate has been granted to some of the executors appointed by a Will without citation upon the others calling upon them to accept or renounce their executorships, section 9 of the Probate and Administration Act becomes applicable to the case and the other executors can, on application for Probate, obtain it unless they are debarred under section 8 of the Act.

A provision in a Will that the executors shall not be liable to render accounts does not exempt them from the obligation of exhibiting to the Court of Probate the account of the estate required by section 98 of the Probate and Administration Act. But the Probate Court in such a case has no concern with the accounts of management by the executors.

Rules against the order of the District Judge, Dacca.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy and Jotindra Nath Roy, for the Petitioners.

Babus Bepin Chandra Mullick and Bhupendra Chandra Guha, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—In these two Rules it appears that one Kamini Sundari Dasi made a Will by which she dedicated the bulk of her property to a certain deity.

By the Will she appointed six executors, of whom three Pyari Lal, Nadiar Chand and Bepin Behari Saha proved the Will and obtained a grant of probate on the 12th of August 1912. The remaining three Koylash Chandra, Bepin Behari Das and Sarat Lal have now applied that they should be joined in the grant, but of these the first named has since formally renounced his executorship.

The applications of Bepin Behari Das and Sarat Lal are opposed by the three executors to whom probate was granted in the first instance. They alleged on the part of the applicants adverse interest, lack of business capacity and waiver and their contention before us is that issues on these questions should have been framed.

We are unable to accede to this contention. It is not suggested that either of these present applicants renounced his executorship in the manner contemplated in section 16 of the Probate and Administration Act, and in fact no citation calling upon them to accept or renounce their executorship was ever issued. This is, therefore, a case to which section 9 is strictly applicable, and the only question that can arise is whether the applicants are debarred by incapacity within the meaning of section 8.

The Rules are further directed against an order by which the District Judge has required the executors who obtained probate to furnish accounts. They take exception to this order, on the ground that the Will provides that the executors shall not be liable to render accounts. But this does not exempt them from the obligation of exhibiting to the Court of Probate the account of the estate required by section 98, though we may point out that with their management as Shebaitas and with the accounts of such management that Probate Court has no concern.

With these observations, we discharge both these Rules with costs to the opposite parties. We assess the hearing fee in each Rule at two gold mohurs.

Rules discharged.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145—Rejection of material evidence—Jurisdiction, refusal to exercise—Revision.

Ordinarily the rejection of evidence might not be accepted as a good ground for revision of an order under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, but the rejection of material evidence offered by a party would amount to a refusal to exercise jurisdiction vested in the Court by section 145. [p. 338, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Honorary Magistrate, Dinapore, dated the 25th September 1917.

Messrs. S. P. Varma and Mohammed Mahmud, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Panchanan Banerjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application against an order of an Honorary Magistrate of Dinapore, dated the 25th September 1917, under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, declaring the second party to be in possession of the land in dispute.

The first party represents the landlords and the second party are the tenants. The first party obtained a rent decree against the second party on the 19th December 1912. This decree was passed in the presence of the second party and was a contested one. The sale certificate was obtained on the 19th June 1912. The contention of the first party is that on the strength of the decree and the sale certificate obtained from the Civil Court, they applied to the Court for delivery of possession and accordingly possession was delivered to them of the land in dispute with the crop standing thereon by a Civil Court peon deputed by the Court. On the 23rd September 1916, in order to prove the delivery of possession, the first party filed the writ of the Civil Court along with a report of the peon Nabi Hussain, who is said to have delivered possession on the spot. Nabi Hussain was summoned as a witness on behalf of the first party; and on an application of the first party a Rubakar or letter was addressed to the District Judge by the Magistrate calling for the records mentioned in its margin. The note in the margin giving the specification of the papers is as follows:—

"Ganga Dayal Singh and others—Appellants
versus

Musammat Ganapati Kuer—Defendants.

Case No. 2568 of 1910 disposed of on 19th December 1912.

Case No. 587 of 1914 disposed of on 23rd September 1917.

Disposed of by the Munsif, 2nd Court."

This Rubakar was returned to the Magistrate with a note of the record-keeper on the back of it saying—"that the Case Nos. 2568 of 1910 and 587 (2587) of 1914 is not found in the catalogue of Munsif, 2nd Court. It may be returned to the Court concerned for information." This was received by the Magistrate on the 12th September, and upon that date it was ordered to be shown to the Mukhtear of the first party for giving correct numbers of the cases. Neither the order-sheet nor the petition shows that this order was communicated to the Mukhtear of the first party. The date of the case was the 11th September and it was received on the 12th, and so it cannot be presumed that this order was at all known to the party concerned. On the 11th the case was adjourned to the 18th, so from the 12th to the 18th there does not appear to be any reason for presumption that the first party must have known of the order passed in the case unless it was expressly communicated to the first party. The result was that the original papers called for were not produced in Court. On the 18th September, the date fixed for the case, the first party put in another petition praying for an adjournment of the case as the original papers were not forthcoming, in order that they may be called for and proved by witness Nabi Hussain who was then present in Court. Babu Nabi Hussain peon could not possibly be examined without these original papers, and hence he was not examined. The Magistrate by his order on the top of the petition refused it, because the order of the 12th September was not complied with. As shown above no opportunity was given to the first party to comply with that order of the 12th September. On the 18th September, therefore, the case was disposed of without the evidence of the peon or the documents referred to above, whereby possession was said to have been delivered to the first party by the Civil Court. The Court decided, therefore, upon oral evidence of the first party, and came to the conclusion that possession, under the sale certificate, had not been given and decided this upon a contradiction in the statements of the Patwari and Chaukidar. The Magistrate disbelieved the Patwari witness for the first party for the reasons given by him in his order. But the question here is what would have been the effect of the papers which the first party wanted to prove in the case, and the evidence of the peon who is said to have given possession. Upon the evidence of the peon corroborated by the dakhl dehani or delivery of possession, the Court, notwithstanding the fact that it disbelieved the evidence of the Patwari and the Chaukidar, might have come to the conclusion that possession was actually delivered to the first party. If that were so, the Court necessarily would have held that the second party had no claim to possession over the property in dispute. Ordinarily the rejection of evidence in certain cases might not be accepted as a good ground for revision under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, but the rejection of material evidence offered by a party, as in this particular case, to my mind, would be a refusal to exercise jurisdiction vested in the Court by section 145. There does not appear to be any laches on the part of the first party in the case. I am also impressed in this case by the fact that the second party contested the rent suit and that the decree was obtained in his presence in 1912. The rent decree was not satisfied up till 1914 and the plea of the second party as summarised by the Magistrate that he would have paid up the decree if he had known of the execution of the decree, does not appear to me to be tenable. I am also impressed by the fact that possession is said to have been delivered only in September 1916 and the present dispute arose just after the delivery of possession by the Civil Court, which, if proved, the Criminal Court is bound to respect and give effect to. It appears to me also that the first party did all that it could in order to secure the papers. The details given in the margin of the Rubakar appear to me to agree exactly with the certified copy. The record-keeper reported that the papers of the cases mentioned in the Rubakar were not traced in the catalogue of the Second Munsif's Court but the decree was passed and the dakhl dehani was issued by Second Munsif. And although there appears to be no mistake in the number of the cases cited in the margin of the Rubakar, still the Magistrate by his order directed the correct numbers of the cases to be given. I, therefore, think that the Magistrate ought to have, on the 18th September when the case was first taken up, drawn the attention of the party to the report of the record keeper and tried to find out where the mistake was and why the papers asked for were not sent by the District Judge. In any case the Magistrate should have allowed an adjournment of the case, as prayed for by the first party, so that necessary steps could have been taken to get the papers. The case was taken up only six days after the first date of hearing, namely, the 11th September and so there does not appear to have been any delay of the case by the first party. I, therefore, with reluctance set aside the order of the Magistrate and remand the case to him in order that the first party may be given an opportunity to get the papers properly proved, and also to examine the peon Nabi Hussain, and then to decide the question of possession.

The costs, if already paid, will be taken into account in the final order of the Magistrate.

Case remanded.*

Per Sanderson, C. J., and Mookerjee, J.—In deciding whether an article published in a newspaper is or is not a contempt of Court, the question is not whether the article in fact obstructed or interfered with the due course of justice but whether it is "calculated" to obstruct and interfere with the due course of justice. [p. 363, col. 1; p. 386, col. 1.]

An allegation against a litigant that he is attempting to get a Bench constituted in such a way as would in his opinion give him a favourable decision, is calculated to obstruct or interfere with the course of justice and is, therefore, a contempt [p. 363, col. 1; p. 386, col. 2.]

Per Curiam.—The High Courts in India are superior Courts of Record. The offence of contempt of Court and the powers of the High Court to punish it are the same in India as in the superior Courts in England and the High Court has power to punish summarily a contempt of Court committed by the publication of a libel on the Court or on the Judges when the Court is not sitting. [p. 365, col. 2; p. 386, col. 2.]

The printer and publisher of a newspaper is liable for contempt even though he was not aware of the subject constituting such contempt. [p. 366, col. 1; p. 391, col. 1.]

The jurisdiction which the Court has in respect of a contempt of Court should be exercised with great care and should only be exercised when the case is beyond all reasonable doubt, and this should especially be the case when the proceedings are at the instance of the Court itself. [p. 369, col. 1.]

Per Woodroffe, J.—In contempt cases the Court does not seek to vindicate any personal interest of the Judges but the general administration of justice, which is a public concern. Proceedings for contempt by scandalising the Court are not obsolete. [p. 372, col. 1.]

All proceedings, whether in respect of civil or criminal contempts, are of a criminal nature when their object is to punish by fine or imprisonment. But it does not follow that the procedure in such cases is in all respects the same as in an ordinary criminal case. In fact both the offence of contempt as also the jurisdiction and procedure under which it is tried are sui generis. There is but one rule of evidence which in India applies both to civil and criminal trials, and that is contained in the definition of "proved" and "disproved" in section 3 of the Evidence Act. [p. 372, cols. 1 & 2.]

One cannot escape either contempt or libel merely by relying upon a rumour. [p. 374 col. 2.]

It is a contempt of Court to prejudice or attempt to prejudice a litigant before it and to interfere with the course of justice. [p. 375, col. 1.]

The question whether persons in the position of directors of a company carrying on a newspaper are responsible for contemptuous articles published in the paper must depend upon the facts of each case. [p. 377, col. 2.]

Per Mookerjee, J.—In ascertaining the true meaning articles published in a newspaper and alleged to be contemptuous, the obvious course to pursue is to read the offending articles as they stand and to attach to the words used their natural meaning without the assistance of a laborious commentary. The meaning and intent are to be determined by a fair interpretation of the language used and by a consideration of the general tone of the writing. Disclaimer on the part of the publisher as to intentional disrespect to the Court is not a sufficient defence when the purpose and meaning of the writing is obviously of a contrary import. No doubt if the language is fairly capable of an innocent interpretation, the Court will not read into it a sinister import. But if the intent is fairly clear, liability to punishment for contempt of Court cannot be successfully avoided by the use of a transparent artifice [p. 382, cols. 1 & 2.]

Contempt by a speech or writing may be by scandalising the Court itself or by abusing parties to an action or by prejudicing mankind in favour of or against a party before the cause is heard. [p. 388, col. 1.]

A criminal contempt is conduct that is directed against the dignity and authority of the Court. A civil contempt, on the other hand, is failure to do something ordered to be done by a Court in a civil action for the benefit of the opposing party therein. Consequently in the case of a criminal contempt as the primary purpose is the vindication of the public authority by the punishment of an act committed against the majesty of the law the proceeding conforms as nearly as possible to proceedings in criminal cases. In the case of a civil contempt the proceeding in its initial stages at least may be deemed as instituted at the instance of a party and thus to possess a civil character. But here also refusal to obey the order of the Court may render it necessary for the Court to adopt punitive measures against the persons who have defied its authority; at that stage at least the proceedings may assume a criminal character. [p. 389, col. 1.]

A proceeding to punish for contempt has the essential qualities of a criminal proceeding, whether the proceeding is initiated primarily to vindicate the Court's authority or solely as a coercive or remedial measure to enforce the rights of the litigants or for both these purposes combined. [p. 390, cols. 1 & 2.]

Supplementary evidence cannot be given so as to prejudice the position of an accused. [p. 393, col. 1.]

It cannot be held as a matter of law that the directors of a limited company which owns a newspaper are liable to be committed for contempt of Court on account of a libel published in the paper. [p. 392, col. 1.]

Per Woodroffe and Mookerjee, JJ.—Secondary evidence of the returns filed with and in the custody of the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies is admissible, as such returns constitute public records of private documents within the meaning of section 74 (2) of the Evidence Act. [p. 392, cols. 1 & 2; p. 376, cols. 1 & 2.]

The term "record" includes a collection of documents. [p. 392, col. 2; p. 376, col. 2.]

A Division Bench (Mookerjee and Cuning, JJ.) held in an appeal that the Calcutta Improvement Trust had no power under the Calcutta Improvement Act to acquire land compulsorily for the purpose of reconquest. In three other cases Greaves, J., sitting on the Original Side, decided that the Trust had such power. When the appeals from Mr. Justice Greaves were about to be heard by the High Court hearing appeals from the Original Side, the following two articles were published in the "Amrita Bazar Patrika" newspaper in its issues of the 18th and 22nd May 1917, respectively:

"There is a mischievous rumour afloat, which should be contradicted. It is stated that a vigorous attempt is being made to get up a Bench to consider the appeal on the judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves in connection with the acquisition of surplus land by the Calcutta Improvement Trust according to somebody's choice. We do not believe that it is possible for any one, far less the Chairman of the Trust, to secure a Bench after his own heart as a counterpoise to the Mookerjee and Cuming Bench. We are sure the interest of every ratepayer is safe in the hands of the Hon'ble Judges, and we do not think that any Official of the Trust can go so far."

"Something like consternation prevails on account of the proposed new constitution of the Appellate Bench of the Calcutta High Court before which appeals against the awards of the Improvement Trust are to be heard. It is known to the reader how this Bench was originally composed of Sir Asutosh Mookerjee and the Hon'ble Justice Cuming, and how latterly it has come to be presided over by the Hon'ble the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Woodroffe. Rumour has it that for purposes of hearing Improvement Trust appeals the Bench is going to be strengthened by the appointment of Mr. Justice Chitty. Now what neither the public nor ourselves can understand is this special arrangement for such a Special Bench. If it is contended that two Hon'ble Judges of the highest Court in the land are not competent to decide in appeal cases in which the Improvement Trust is concerned, a contention, however, which we do not believe the Chief Justice will care to advance, why should there be a Special Bench of three and not a Full Bench of five, on which at least two Indian Judges could find seats? As a matter of fact, as landowners in Calcutta are mostly Indians, and as Indian Judges are likely to know more of conditions, practices, etc., prevailing here, it is but meet that the Appellate Bench in the present circumstances should be so composed as to associate Indian Judges with their European colleagues. The withdrawal of Sir Asutosh has given rise to rather unsavoury impressions in the public mind, since this proposed arrangement is to follow close upon the heels of his judgment in the case of Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh, (36 Ind. Cas. 749; 24 C. L. J. 246; 44 C. 219; 21 C. W. N. 8). Be that as it may, we have perfect faith in the present Chief Justice and believe that as soon as Sir Lancelot Sanderson understands the public feeling in the matter, his Lordship will either form a Full Bench or at least associate an experienced Indian Judge with himself for the hearing of Improvement Trust appeals."

Held, (1) that the articles might legitimately be read together to determine their scope and purpose, even though they were proved not to have been written by the same person; [p. 364, col. 1.]

(2) that the articles were calculated to bring the Court and the Chief Justice who was responsible for its administration into contempt, and not only to destroy confidence in the Court but also to undermine and impair its authority and that as such they constituted a contempt of Court. [p. 364, col. 1.]

Rule issued on the Directors, Manager and Printer and Publisher of the "Amrita Bazar Patrika" to show cause why they should not be committed for contempt of Court.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. Jackson (with him Mr. C. C. Ghose), for Babu Moti Lal Ghose.—I would ask your Lordships first with reference to this matter in what jurisdiction this Court is sitting. Your Lordships must not fancy that I am putting this without any reason. The whole of this was gone into in the case of Taylor (1), and it was held that it ought to be the ordinary criminal jurisdiction.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—We are perfectly ready to hear anything you wish to say on that point.]

Your Lordship has not given me the information I asked for.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—How is it you are entitled to ask me what jurisdiction we are entitled to exercise?]

There is no instance on record of a paper being filed in which the parties are not entitled to know in what jurisdiction it is. There are only three jurisdictions, original, civil and criminal. That has been settled by the Privy Council. I wish to know in which of them the Court is dealing with this matter. It has been held repeatedly as a matter of fact if this is contempt of Court, it is merely a criminal matter and can only be tried on the criminal side. The first matter with reference to that question is with regard to the question of jurisdiction. The Charter simply creates a High Court, but the jurisdictions are all conferred by the Letters Patent. The first case on the point is Navirahu v. Turner (2). There the jurisdictions are distinctly stated. I may mention further, I have got a verbatim copy of what took place before Sir Barnes Peacock in the celebrated Englishman case [Banks and Fenwick, In the matter of (3).] There the case was first started in the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction. The first objection taken was that it could not be tried as such, and eventually Sir Barnes Peacock said: "I am quite ready to admit that." The law has not been altered, or the Charter or anything since those days.

[FLETCHER, J.—Where is that reported?]

It is not reported anywhere. I have got a verbatim copy. Sir Charles Paul argued the case with Mr. Kennedy and he corrected the transcript. I was present throughout the trial and I can assure your Lordships that the report is absolutely correct.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Would you mind telling me, Mr. Jackson, what is the point of this? Do you dispute the proposition that if, supposing this is a contempt of Court, we have no jurisdiction to deal with it?]

I am not disputing it if you do it in the proper jurisdiction. But it makes all the difference to me whether you are trying it in the criminal or civil jurisdiction. I claim the right, if it is a criminal matter, to be tried criminally and with all the advantages and disadvantages of a criminal trial.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—I suppose sitting here we have every jurisdiction.]

No. I submit you cannot sit in five jurisdictions at the same moment. It makes all the difference in the world under what jurisdiction you are sitting. How can you sit in all of them together? What would be the result? It would be utterly impossible. It must be one jurisdiction or the other. It is a matter of the greatest importance. You find every single case in England that deals with this matter lays the greatest stress on the fact that it is a criminal matter.

After citing the case of Governor of Bengal v. Moti Lal (4) Mr. Jackson continued: I am entitled to know in what jurisdiction I am being proceeded against. There are a whole number of cases in regard to this. This disposes of all this about Courts of Record and so on.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—What do you mean by "all this about Courts of Record and so on"? I think Sir Lawrence Jenkins said that this Court being a Court of Record had power to commit for contempt.]

(4) 20 Ind. Cas. 81; 41 C. 173 at p. 176; 18 C. L. J. 462; 14 Cr. L. J. 321; 17 C. W. N. 1253.

I am perfectly well aware of that. All I was going to say is that if the Bench of the Privy Council comprising Lords Watson, Macnaghten, Davis and Morris is right, the day is not far distant when they will rule that you have no power, that it is an obsolete power. I wish to draw your attention to McLeod v. St. Aubyn (5).

[SANDERSON, C. J.—A year or two after that in England itself proceedings were taken against the proprietor of a newspaper for contempt of Court. Even in England itself the matter was not obsolete.]

The whole of this opinion was gone into before Sir Barnes Peacock in the celebrated Englishman case [Banks and Fenwick, In the matter of (3)].

[SANDERSON, C. J.—What is the point you wish to put now?]

To call attention to the decision in the case of O'Shea v. O'Shea (6). I protest most respectfully that regularity with regard to these proceedings should be followed with the utmost strictness. That is the one thing which separates us from Courts in the Mofussil. It is the absolute insistence on these matters which simplifies matters and does not impede justice in the least.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—I see the Chief Justice said it is quite immaterial which side of the Court the case is tried.]

Does your Lordship want anything more?

[SANDERSON, C. J.—I don't want anything which you don't want to give me.]

I want to know where I am.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—You will know where you are in time.]

Unless I know that I cannot put my points. Two of my next points depend on that.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—That is your first point. What is your next point?]

There is no point. I want to know what the jurisdiction is. In making the request I was doing nothing unusual. On that point I address your Lordships. If you do not tell me in what jurisdiction it is, the best thing I can do is to sit down.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—If you have any more cases you wish to cite, you may do so, but you may assume this is a matter of a criminal nature.]

I will assume that. I wish to cite Pollard, In re (7), Davies, In re (8) and Metro-politan Music Hall Co. v. Lake (9). Assuming it is a criminal jurisdiction the next point I am entitled to know is, who is prosecuting. Furthermore, the last Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Mookerjee dealt with that very point and Mr. Justice Mookerjee said that it was a matter of vital importance. One of the points in that case was that the Legal Remembrancer purported to be the prosecutor. As a matter of fact they repudiated the Legal Remembrancer as a person of comparatively no importance. He was dismissed from the case and the order of the Governor-in-Council was relied on. I wish to know who the prosecutor is. If it is the two gentlemen who filed the affidavits, I know where I am. If not, I must know who it is. This is a thing that cannot be postponed and I cannot assume. I want to know, first, who my opponent is, and, second, what the charge is? Is it the whole Court or one Judge, or two Judges or three Judges or some one wholly irrespective of the Court?

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Anything more on that point?]

No. In the absence of an answer to that point I cannot possibly proceed.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Why not?]

Without knowing what the charge is, how am I to meet it? Is not this significant of cases of this description? The fact is, I hope the end of the war will see the whole of this sham disappear.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—What sham?]

The Court dealing with cases itself in which it is personally interested. I protest against going on further in this matter.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—We don't think you are entitled to ask questions of the Bench in the way you have been doing on these points, but inasmuch as you assure us you will be hampered in your argument if you do not get certain information, we think it only right to give it to you although we do not think you are entitled to it. With regard to the question of the Rule it was issued by me as Chief Justice of this Court after consultation with the learned Judges of the Court. I thought that would have been apparent from the proceedings which took place when the Rule was issued. As regards the interpretation of the articles, I should have thought that you would have had no difficulty in coming to the conclusion as to what was meant. But if you like I will tell you that. Our impression was that this contained a reflection on the Court in its administration. Among other things it contained a suggestion that the Court was constituted for the purpose of hearing certain appeals with the object of counteracting a decision which had been given on a similar point by two other learned Judges of the Court, namely, Justices Mookerjee and Cuming. That is the broad idea. I don't want to use any unpleasant words but the suggestion was that the Court was to be constituted with the object of counteracting that decision. I have not read the articles this morning, but my recollection is that the second article says "Consternation has been caused by the fact that this Court will be constituted of the Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Woodroffe and Mr. Justice Chitty."]

Mr. Jackson said that was one reason he asked whether this was a criminal matter. If it was a criminal matter, there was no legal evidence of any kind connecting his client with this publication. If he was right he need not trouble their Lordships. He then cited In the matter of a Special Reference from the Bahama Islands (10).

[MOOKERJEE, J.—I thought you were taking the point that there was no legal evidence to connect Moti Lal Ghose with this publication.]

That is so. There is not one scrap of legal evidence to make him liable. I ought to be treated exactly as I was on the last occasion. It is not because the sun is hotter or cooler than on the last occasion that I should be treated differently now.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Do you deny that you are a director?]

I am an accused person. Your Lordship will pardon me if I refuse to make any reply.

SANDERSON, C. J.—Does the affidavit prove whether he is a director or not?]

To my mind it does not. But your Lordships have to decide that.

[FLETCHER, J.—The statutory return shows he is a director.]

That does not prove his connection with this publication.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Is the statutory return an exhibit in this case?]

Yes.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—What was the date of the return?]

March. This is June. It is no presumption that because you are married once you are married always. Is every director supposed to be cognisant of everything that goes out from his office? If you think that is legal evidence, well and good, and I don't wish to address you further in the matter.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—I see he lives at No. 2, Ananda Chatterjee's Lane. That is also the registered office of the Company.]

Mr. Jackson said that there were two more cases he wished to cite. One was Reg. v. Stanger (11). The other was Reg. v. O'Connell (12).

Continuing, Mr. Jackson referred to clause 13 of the Letters Patent and said that the question was whether contempt of Court should be punished under any other provision except that under the Penal Code. He cited Wincham Shipbuilding and Boiler Co., In re, Hallmark's case (13) and said that because a man happened to be director of a company, he was not supposed to know what appeared in the paper. There was no legal evidence on which he could be punished for this supposed contempt.

There was no disrespect to a Court of Justice which impeded the administration of justice and which could be punished as contempt.

Mr. Jackson next proposed to deal with the articles, but before he did so he proposed to refer to the circumstances of the time under which they were written. What was the state of things when these recoupment proceedings began?

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Do you mean these three recoupment proceedings which came up on appeal?]

No. If your Lordship allows me I will deal with it in my own way.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—How are we to go on with other proceedings not before us except on affidavit?]

There are materials before the Court.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—We cannot go on hearsay evidence.]

Your Lordship yourself will not be able to deal with this case without going outside the record.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Can't you confine yourself within the proceedings of this Court?]

I will refer to Chandra Kanta's case in the lower Court.

Continuing, Mr. Jackson said that prior to the appeal in Chandra Kanta's case Mr. Justice Greaves dealt with some other Improvement Trust cases. Mr. Bompas placed the matter in the hands of his legal adviser. In the meantime Mr. Justice Greaves delivered judgment before the appeal in Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (14) was heard by a Divisional Bench of this Court. That appeal came on for hearing before a particular Bench consisting of Justices Mookerjee and Cuming. For some particular reason the Improvement Trust was not willing that the appeal should be heard by that particular Bench.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—I don't know that.]

On May 30th an application was made by Mr. Langford James before your Lordship to have the appeal heard by another Bench.

The Improvement Trust wanted to get out the appeal from that Bench by taking postponements, and before the three appeals from Mr. Justice Greaves' judgment were heard they got leave to appeal to the Privy Council in Chandra Kanta's case (14). Then the three appeals were heard and Counsel understood that a Full Bench would hear them again. Then, why should not the writer bring it to their Lordships' notice that this matter should go to the Privy Council? Why should the parties be put to unnecessary expense by appointing a Full Bench?

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Will you draw my attention to that part of the article where the Privy Council is referred to?]

These words are not used, but it means that Indian Judges approach the subject from a totally different point of view from that of European Judges who don't possess an inch of land and don't know where the shoe pinches, while in England every member of the judiciary holds land.

Mr. Jackson next said that the article began thus: "There is a mischievous rumour afloat which should be contradicted." Was there anything to suggest that the Improvement Trust was trying to remove any particular Judge?

[SANDERSON, C. J.—I should think that the traditions of this Court are such that everybody should know that and it requires no contradiction.]

I know of one case in which a particular Judge was removed during the hearing of the Purnea case at the instance of the Lieutenant-Governor.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—That is not at present. It is absolutely impossible now to get a Court of one's own liking. If there is any such rumour, it should be treated with contempt and should not be published.]

Mr. Langford James made the application for the transfer of the appeal.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—That application was rejected, but it was not an attempt to choose one's own Bench.]

Mr. Jackson said that their Lordships should consider the circumstances under which the article was written. It next said: "It is stated that a vigorous attempt is being made to get up a Bench to consider the appeal on the judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves in connection with the acquisition of surplus land by the Calcutta Improvement Trust according to somebody's choice." The writer did not believe the rumour and he wanted to contradict it. People outside this Court, did not understand the difference between appeals from lower Courts and appeals from the original side of this Court. They thought that because one Improvement Trust appeal was heard by Justices Mookerjee and Cuming the other Trust appeals should also be heard by that Bench. The article next referred to the Mookerjee and Cuming Bench, and this, Counsel, thought, was the worst part of the whole thing.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—The article says that a serious attempt is being made by the Chairman of the Improvement Trust to get up a Bench as a counterpoise to the Mookerjee and Cuming Bench.]

What is said is that the rumour is that an attempt is being made in that direction, but the writer does not believe it.

Counsel next referred to the second article which began thus: "Something like consternation prevails on account of the proposed new constitution of the Appellate Bench." It said that originally the Bench was composed of Justices Mookerjee and Cuming and latterly it had come to be presided over by the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Woodroffe. This was based on an absolute mistake. There was nothing affecting Mr. Justice Chitty.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Why should a Bench consisting of the Chief Justice and Justices Woodroffe and Chitty cause consternation?]

After the application made against the previous Bench which heard Chandra Kanta's appeal (14) this would create consternation. The writer suggested to appoint a Judge who possessed land and the suggestion was made from a totally different point of view.

[FLETCHER, J.—The Improvement Trust wanted to have their cases decided by a particular Bench and the Chief Justice would not consent to that. What does it mean?]

[SANDERSON, C. J.—The meaning is obvious, Mr. Jackson.]

Continuing Mr. Jackson said that the article went on to say that Indian Judges were likely to know more of the conditions and practices prevailing here, and it suggested to appoint an Indian Judge on the Appeal Bench. Counsel said that the Improvement Trust was a Government institution. That being so, it was natural that there was suspicion and the only way to impress confidence was to take a Judge who possessed land. The writer had perfect faith in the Chief Justice and he said, "We have perfect faith in the present Chief Justice." Certainly this was not contempt. Counsel failed to see any contempt in the two articles. Sir Barnes Peacock in the reported case conceded that it was a matter which could be differently interpreted. There was not a single reported case which could approach this in weakness for the matter forming the subject of contempt.

Mr. Norton, for Tarit Kanto Bakshi, Printer and Publisher of the Amrita Bazar Patrika, said that the position of the printer was quite different and he deserved more sympathy. He was merely a paid servant and had nothing to do with the policy of the paper. His business was to see that the matter was printed and published.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—It has been held that the printer is also responsible.

Yes. If it is held contempt then he is unable to escape the legal liability, but he is worthy of pity.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Is it not a fact that the directors live in the same house where the paper is published?]

I don't know.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Can you say who wrote the article?]

The printer does not know that. It does not concern him.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Apparently the printer printed it at a place where the directors live. They are all living together in the same place.]

It does not contribute to my knowledge of knowing the identity of the writer. I was simply printing the paper and I don't know who wrote it. There is internal evidence that it was not written by a European.

Continuing, Mr. Norton referred to the two articles and said that rightly or wrongly the Improvement Trust thought that Mr. Justice Mookerjee's judgment was wrong. This was the rumour and the article described it as mischievous and the writer wanted to contradict it. Counsel admitted for the purpose of his argument that it was a gross libel against the Improvement Trust, but it was not contempt against the High Court.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—When the writer spoke of consternation, what could he mean but that he had lost his confidence in the Judges?]

Mr. Norton asked his Lordship not to read the two articles together.

[FLETCHER, J.—Is it not contempt to speak of consternation as regards the constitution of any particular Bench?]

I say no.

Continuing, Mr. Norton said that the grievance of the writer was why there should not be a Full Bench and only a Bench of three Judges. If he was acquainted with the form of proceeding, he should have said that as there was a difference of opinion it should go before a Full Bench.

Mr. Norton next said that the writer said that it was a matter for regret that there was an unsavoury impression because it was untrue. How could it be contempt when he spoke of unqualified belief in the Bench? That was the key of the whole thing. He only asked to take in an Indian Judge.

Continuing, Counsel said that if it was held to be contempt he asked their Lordships not to take any notice of it and that summary jurisdiction should not be followed. A contempt out of Court should not be treated summarily unless it interfered with the administration of justice. The Trust got all they wanted to get but the writer did not create any impediment. If it was only scandalising the Bench, then Counsel said this class of contempt was practically obsolete. The position of an English Judge was too high to be shaken by criticism like this. The reason why the summary procedure was not desirable was that the prosecutors were the witnesses and judges. In the case of Taylor (1) Sir Barnes Peacock wanted to issue a Rule and there was an apology.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—The writer of this article has offered no apology.]

How can I offer an apology for the writer? I on behalf of the printer offer my heartfelt apology to all your Lordships.

In the matter of AMRITA HAZAR PATRIKA.

The hearing of the case being resumed on the following morning, Mr. Norton said: Before proceeding with my argument I would like to call your Lordships' attention to a statement in the newspapers that I tendered a heartfelt apology for the printer. I tendered no apology, heartfelt or otherwise, because I understood your Lordships agreed with me that in the position in which I was placed it was impossible for me to apologise for another man's acts. That was the reason I tendered no apology. Had the words been my own words I should have tendered an apology at once, but in the circumstances, I can scarcely be called upon to apologise for another man's acts.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—I don't see why your client should not apologise just as much as anybody else.]

What I stated on Monday and I repeat again to-day is this: If your Lordships think that I have not exercised due caution and was negligent in the discharge of my duties as printer, I do offer an unqualified apology with an expression of my regret. My argument, however, is that in truth and fact there is no contempt.

Counsel then cited R. v. Freeman's Journal (15) and said that in the sense in which reflection constitutes an impediment to the due administration of justice, the reference in that case was whether there had been a contempt or suggested contempt to influence the mind of jurors or to intimidate witnesses from coming forward to assist either side.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—That is not an authoritative proposition that there must be an actual impediment. The test is this, whether a matter has a tendency to obstruct the ordinary course of justice, not that there was an actual disturbance of justice.]

That case is not applicable to Judges but to jurors. I draw a logical differentiation between proceedings calculated to influence the minds of jurors and an attempt to influence the minds of learned Judges.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—You mean to say a juror's mind will be more easily influenced?]

Yes. Our contention has always been that we cannot substitute trial by Judges for trial by Jury on the ground that your Lordships are not accessible to influences which we as Counsel can plead before a Jury.

Counsel then cited the case of King v. Dolan (16) and said that that was the case which Sir Lawrence Jenkins followed and quoted in Governor of Bengal v. Moti Lal (4). There the Judges said that the Court should not act unless in fact the contempt was likely to create a tendency, etc.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—It is the same thing, "in fact likely to create." Does the addition of the word "fact" add anything to the principle?]

I submit it does.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—If you say a thing has a tendency to create, is it not the same if you say a thing has, in fact, a tendency to create? You are a master of English. Tell me that? Do you really add anything to the weight of the sentence if you say that has a tendency to create a prejudice, or that has, in fact, a tendency to create a prejudice.]

The difference is this. It is a remote contingency upon a very remote contingency. It is a mere possibility upon a possibility. Whoever wrote those articles was not seeking to influence the minds of jurors. If he was seeking to influence any minds he was seeking to influence your Lordships' minds, not upon the merits of the appeal, but on the constitution of the Bench. How can that have a prejudicial effect upon your Lordships' judicial determination of the merits of the appeal? I submit that cannot have the least influence upon your Lordships' minds. If it was a libel upon the Improvement Trust, the only influence upon your Lordships' minds would probably be to create a bias in favour of the Improvement Trust. It indicated nothing as to what your Lordships ought to do. He asked for the constitution of a Bench which should include one or more Indian Judges. Can it be said there was any danger, real or imaginary, in an application of this kind?

Counsel next cited the case of Costa Rica (Republic) v. Erlanger, Clements, In re (17) and the case of Hunt v. Clarke (18).

(16) (1907) 2 I. R. 260; 9 Ir. L. R. 647.

In the matter of AMRITA BAZAR PATRIKA.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—The test is first whether it tends to prejudice.]

I am willing to apply that test here. No attempt was made by the writer to prejudice your Lordships' minds as to the merits of the appeal. What was there in the nature of urgency in the articles which are now the subject-matter of this enquiry, urgency in the shape of your Lordships' summary interference: Apparently, as far as one can see, they avoided any further comment not in consequence of any order of this Court, but spontaneously? There was nothing really in the nature of any urgency to correct any mischievous chief of that kind, which was likely to spread and create more serious mischief in consequence of that dissemination, to justify the exercise of that jurisdiction which is exercised and which should be resorted to only in cases of extreme urgency.

After citing In the matter of a Special Reference from the Bahama Islands (10) Mr. Norton said that, however wrong it might be, it could not be stated that these articles were an obstruction to public justice. The writer could not have believed that anything he said in these letters would in any way obscure their Lordships' minds or divert them from the proper functions of the Bench and give him any assistance. If the object of these proceedings be to make it quite clear that their Lordships had the power which they were desirous of exercising in this case to hold it was contempt and exercise their control over that contempt by the summary process with which their Lordships were clothed, what would be the outcome of these proceedings? He was only addressing their Lordships on behalf of the printer, who was, comparatively speaking, the least blamable. There was no suggestion whatever that he was aware of the contents of the documents, and he had sworn himself that he had no such knowledge.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—I was looking at his affidavit this morning. Would you mind looking at paragraph 4 where he says, "I did not read the said articles or either of them when they were given to me for publication." Now turn to paragraph 6 where he says, "I further state the said articles were published by myself in good faith and in the public interest." How can he say that if he did not know what was in them?]

A man may in perfect innocence publish a document of which he knows nothing, believing at the time that it is perfectly innocuous. What he means is this, that if he had any notion that those documents contained anything of an objectionable character, he would not have published them. It is true that he did not read them because he believed that no defamatory matter would be given to him for the purpose of publication.

[FLETCHER, J.—How can he say it is in the public interest if he did not read them?]

Publication in a newspaper involves publication of matter seven-tenths of which, I presume, is of public interest.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—He says: "The said articles were published by myself in good faith and in the public interest." That seems to me somewhat inconsistent with his statement that he put in articles without knowing what was in them.]

Then his drafter must be made liable for that. I know what was intended by those responsible for the drafting: Those who drafted that meant to say in paragraph 4 that he never read the articles and in paragraph 6 that although he never read them he published them in good faith and in the public interest. These are the articles with which he stands charged. He did not read them because he bona-fide believed he was asked to publish that which was for the public interest. He is not there for the purpose of printing for private circulation, but for the public. They are not printed to sell to Moti Lal Ghose's children, but to the public.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—They are to sell the paper.]

Who buys it? The public. In paragraph 4, he says: "I never read them." In paragraph 5 he says: "I have now read them and I have ascertained that they contain misstatements of facts." In paragraph 6 he says: "Although I published them without reading them, I acted in good faith and in the interest of the public, because I believed that the authorities in charge of the paper would not ask me to disseminate a libel." If, as a matter of fact, your Lordships' object is to give a warning effective in its character that statements of this character are contempt and are not to be published, then that object has been achieved by this enquiry. There is no reason why punishment should be meted out to the Printer if your Lordships hold that these articles are really contempt. I would entreat your Lordships not to do that. There is an interval of four days between the publication of these two articles. I don't think it is too much to suggest that a man who read the article of the 22nd would necessarily keep in his mind the contents of the article of the 18th. There is nothing to show that the writer intended the two letters to be read conjointly or that the public on reading the second would take into consideration the contents of the first.

Continuing, Mr. Norton said that so far as his client was concerned, he was a subordinate servant who carried out duties more or less of a technical character and he had no interest whatever in the publication of these letters. Further he relied on his superiors not to put him in any jeopardy by publishing articles which were objectionable. He had simply carried out his duties efficiently and loyally to his superiors. He had sworn that he had never read these letters before he published them. If through no act of his own he became an innocent agent in the distribution of that which their Lordships might hold to be a contempt of Court, then that fact would play a very important part in the adjudication of punishment.

[The Chief Justice asked whether it had not always been in the cases Mr. Norton had cited a factor to be taken into consideration by the Court that the printer was willing to disclose the name of the person who brought the matter complained of to him for publication.]

Mr. Norton replied that there was no evidence whatever that his client was aware of who wrote these letters.

Mr. Norton, continuing, said that it was not a fair interpretation to put on these letters by reading them together. There was nothing to show that the writer intended these two letters to be read jointly, or that the publisher intended that the contents of the first letter should be taken into consideration in reading the second.

The printer was entitled to rely on his superior. He simply carried out his duties under the orders of his superior and he never read these letters either then or after the publication. He was at best an unwilling agent in the dissemination of this libel. The whole circumstances showed that he was innocent of complicity on his part. That must be taken into consideration on the question of punishment. There was no evidence to show that this man knew who wrote these letters.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—In the ordinary course of business I suppose he would know from what quarter these letters came. He must have known who was responsible for the publication.]

They came to him in the ordinary course of business from someone in the office.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—This person would be liable for the publication.]

I say I do not know who brought it. Supposing a messenger boy brought it?

[SANDERSON, C. J.—He would know from what quarter the messenger boy came. He would know who would be responsible. I want to reach the man who is responsible for the publication.]

The person responsible for the publication is the editor.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—I suppose your client would know who is the editor.]

Yes, If your Lordship puts me into that position. I say I refuse to say. If the editor has any virtue he ought to have come forward himself. Why should a subordinate on Rs. 200 a month be called upon to appear on this Rule? The other man is in a far higher position. Why don't the editor and proprietor come forward and assume responsibility? Your Lordships will not press me to tell you.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Please understand me, I do not press you to tell. This is one of the facts that must be taken into consideration. He must know who the editor is.]

That is asking me to play the part of Judas.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—I shall bear in mind what you say about the editor not coming forward.]

Mr Norton referred again to the Banks & Fenwick, In the matter of (3) and concluded.

In the matter of AMRITA BAZAR PATRIKA

Mr. B. Chakravarty, for Priyus Kanti Ghosh, a Director of the Company, and for Mainal Kanti Ghosh, who was the Secretary to the Board of Directors, said that after the discussion which had already taken place his own submission would be very short. His first submission was that in a criminal contempt case, where the object of the procedure was to punish a man, the gravamen of the charge was that the comment or publication interfered with, or was likely to interfere with, the due administration of justice. He filed two affidavits, one by each of his clients. With regard to the question of interference with the administration of justice, or tendency to interfere with the administration of justice, his further submission was that this might be mixed up with a reflection upon the Judges or a reflection upon one of the parties to the litigation. If it was merely a reflection upon one of the parties and was in the nature of a libel but did not interfere or tend to interfere with the due administration of justice, then the remedy by a summary process for contempt did not apply. In the same way if it was an attack, however improper, or a reflection upon the Court, and such reflection or attack did not interfere or tend to interfere with the due administration of justice, then again the remedy was not by a summary process of contempt but by criminal information or by action. His next submission was that in a case of an original trial pending, whether it was a criminal proceeding or a civil action, any comment with regard to such pending proceedings or pending action, either on the merits or with regard to the conduct of the parties, was prima facie likely to interfere with the administration of justice, because it might interfere with the witnesses who had to give evidence, or might interfere with the Jury who had to deal with the facts, or might even interfere with the learned Judge dealing with the case. That was to say it might interfere with an impartial trial. If, on the other hand, the litigation had passed out of the hands of the trying Court, and even where an appeal was allowed on facts, the position was different because the record was complete. No comment could interfere with the witnesses because all the evidence was before the Court and the verdict of the Jury was also before the Court. If the case was an appeal on facts and there might be a necessity to investigate the facts, it might be conceivable that one of the parties to the litigation was held up in contempt or pointed to as being unworthy of belief, and then it might affect the mind of the Judge in dealing with the facts of the appeal. In the case where a Judge is concerned matters were not in the same position as in regard to witnesses or jurors. Where it was a matter of the construction of a Statute, then his submission was that even if there was a comment with regard to the conduct of one of the parties it could not possibly interfere with the due decision of the appeal. If these two articles were offensive and, therefore, matters which contained reflections on either of the parties to the appeal or upon the learned Judges, his submission was that, however reprehensible the attack of the writer might be, it could not possibly interfere with the right decision of the appeal. It was not a question of fact. It was one which involved entirely the question of law which was to be determined upon the basis of the construction to be put upon a Statute. He was not defending the writer of the articles, and he was discussing the articles, whether right or wrong, by assuming that they were offensive, and that they were grossly libellous; yet they could not attack the administration of justice, because in point of fact the question involved was of such a character that the decision could not be affected by any comment made in the public press.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—What do you mean by “due administration of justice?” Is it only confined to the right decision of the case? Is it not necessary that this Court should have the confidence of the people in this country? Assuming that the articles are absolutely unjustifiable and are intended to minimise the confidence which the people ought to repose in this Court, is that not a contempt of Court?]

That may be, I will make my submission with regard to that later on, but what I want to clear up at the present moment is that these articles, however offensive they may be, and whatever action it might be necessary to take in regard to them, could not in the present case affect the due administration of justice in the sense of a proper decision in the appeal. Whether it is a mere reflection upon the dignity of the particular Judge or whether it is anything more, the proper remedy is not a summary process. This remedy by a summary process is only to be resorted to if the reflection upon the Judge does in fact interfere with, or had a tendency to interfere with, the due administration of justice.

Counsel then cited the case of Helmors v. Smith (19) and referred to Halsbury's Laws of England; Volume VII.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—That is exactly the point I was putting to you—that it is calculated to undermine or impair the authority of the tribunal.]

Undermined or impaired with regard to a list pending before the Court.

[WOODROFFE, J.—Supposing the list has already come to an end?]

You are entitled to criticise and, in doing so, to point out that the learned Judge is wrong.

[WOODROFFE, J.—Supposing the writer imputes corrupt motives to the Judge after the list is over?]

I have not considered this particular case, but my answer to that would be that such a matter would not be dealt with by a summary process but by a criminal action for libel. The position would be the same if you defame and maliciously or otherwise impute misconduct. I may have stated my proposition too broadly but still my first point remains. In this particular instance my submission is that this is a matter in which these offensive articles could not possibly interfere with the right decision of the case.

Counsel then dealt with the point as to whether it was a libel against the Judges and cited In the matter of a Special Reference from the Bahama Islands (19). The nature of the libel contained in the letters was not of such a character as to undermine and impair generally the dignity of the Court. In that case their Lordships held that it did not constitute contempt.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—That is to say that he did not undermine and impair the authority of the Court. Surely if the Privy Council had come to the conclusion that this letter had impaired and undermined the authority of the tribunal, it must have come to the conclusion that it was contempt of Court.]

Mr. Chakravarty submitted that it was not such a contempt of Court as required that it should be proceeded against by summary process. What he was insisting upon was although it might be contempt of Court, it did not necessarily mean that the remedy was a summary process for contempt.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—That must be a matter of discussion.]

Mr. Chokravarty agreed that it was a matter of discussion, but, even assuming that it was contempt of Court in so far as it cast a reflection on the Court, it was not a proper case in which their Lordships should apply a remedy of a summary procedure.

Counsel then read the affidavit he had put in. One of his clients was a director and the other was secretary of the company, and both said that they had no control over the paper. They did not know who was responsible for the publication of the two letters in question.

[FLETCHER, J.—The director must know. Where you delegate your power to conduct a newspaper you must know who the responsible Editor is.]

Mr. Chakravarty submitted that this being in the nature of a criminal trial, there was no positive proof before their Lordships of any legal offence connecting his clients with these two articles. He cited Odger on Libel and Slander, page 472, Reg. v. Judd (20), Palmer on Company Presiding, First Volume, 11th Edition, page 546.

[WOODROFFE, J.—Is not there against you presumptive publication? Either you bring forward evidence which rebuts presumptior or there must be presumptive publication. Consider this case from this point of view. A director is a person who directs. Then the question is what does he direct? He directs the business. This particular business is the carrying on of a newspaper. Would not there be presumptive publication against your clients? You seek to meet it in two ways—(1) that you had no control over the paper; (2) by saying that you were not present. Apart from your allegations in the affidavits that you have no control over the contents of the paper, and apart from your statement that you were away from Calcutta, would not these facts referred to constitute a case of presumptive publication?]

In law there is no presumption.

[WOODROFFE, J.—Why not?]

The company is the proprietor. Supposing there are 20,000 share-holders in the country. Because I happen to have one share in such a company can you attribute to me knowledge of the publication of the article as proprietor?

[WOODROFFE, J.—There would be inference unless and until you show that you were not concerned with the publication.]

I say that such an inference does not arise. In a criminal trial you have to prove by positive evidence either that I was the writer or that I authorized the publication of it. You cannot attribute to me the liability of the proprietor. In the case of editors and printers, whether they do in fact know or not, the law in fact attributes knowledge to them because it is in fact their business to know. Although they may be ignorant they cannot take shelter in that ignorance.

Counsel cited the case of Reg. v. Judd (20) and went on to say that in the absence of proof of individual complicity his clients could not be indicted. He cited Governor of Bengal v. Moti Lal (4) and Reg. v. South Staffordshire Waterworks Co. (21). Except in the case of editors, proprietors and printers, they could not rely upon any presumption or inference. They must prove it by positive evidence. He then cited Reg. v. Holbrook (22) and Reg. v. Holbrook (23) and O'Gers 470.

Continuing, he said that, with whatever disfavour or disapprobation they viewed the matter, he submitted that there was no evidence for the purpose of establishing the complicity of these two men. It was no doubt very impertinent advice given by ignorant men with regard to the formation of a Bench for the trial of a particular matter.

[FLETCHER, J.—Are the readers equally as ignorant as the writer?]

There is nothing on the record and I should not like to say. If you think that very much importance attaches to newspaper articles, you are very much mistaken. We here do not attach any importance to newspaper articles. We are very fond of talking.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—I beg your pardon. Fond of what?]

Fond of talking.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—I thought you said fond of toffee. (Laughter.)]

Mr. Chakravarty said that it seemed to him to be a very impertinent suggestion made by an ignorant person who knew nothing about how the High Court Benches were formed.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—You can hardly say that. He seems to know what is happening in the High Court. He also knew that Mr. Justice Chitty was to be one of the Judges sitting on that Bench. How he came to know that I do not know. Therefore, he could not have been very ignorant.]

That is the knowledge of a man who goes about eavesdropping. In spite of the Official Secrets Act, it is astonishing how people in the bazar come to know of what is happening in Simla in the matter of frontier wars, loans, etc. You always find everything talked of in the bazar. My submission is that the matter being in appeal at the time and involving a question of law, it could not interfere with the due administration of justice, and there could be no tendency to interfere with the due administration of justice. Notwithstanding my clients' position—one as director and the other as secretary—they have no control over the contents of the paper and have in no way been shown to be liable for these offensive matters.

[WOODROFFE, J.—After the adjournment will you kindly refer to Green, Ex parte; Robbins, In the matter of (24)?]

Continuing, Mr. Chakravarty said that under the Companies Act, section 32, clause (2), the names and addresses of the directors or managers were to be furnished. In the return Mrinal Kanti Ghose was described as the secretary and Golap Lal Ghose as the financial manager.

[CHITTY, J.—Mrinal is both manager and secretary.]

He is only secretary.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—In the exhibit he is described as manager and secretary.]

In his affidavit Mrinal says he is secretary and not manager.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—If he was secretary alone he would not have been put in the category of manager in the return.]

The return was made by Golap and not by Mrinal. Although he is put under the heading of manager he is only secretary.

Counsel next cited a case reported as Green, Ex parte; Robbins, In the matter of (24) in which Mr. Robbins, manager of the Press Association, was prosecuted in connection with the alleged publication of a paragraph in the papers sent by the Press Association. His position was, according to his own showing, that he was in charge of the various departments.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Here we have got the printer. He simply prints what is given to him. The director has no control over the matter that appears in the paper. Then whom are we to hold responsible for the publication?]

Under the law the printer is responsible.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—If we are left in the dark we must draw our own inferences. What are we to assume? The director says he does not exercise any control. Then there must be an editor.

All I can say is that he is not before your Lordships. You can condemn my action for keeping my mouth shut, but you can't punish me for that.

Counsel then gave an illustration. He said there was a dacoity in Barisal and a man was brought up who lived not far from the scene of the dacoity. The Judge told the man that he must know who committed the dacoity. Their Lordships could not draw the inference that his clients were liable because they were connected with the company. The conduct of the director was open to comment but he was not responsible for the offence with which he was charged.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—But they have not suggested that there is an editor.]

We have not made any such suggestion. I am not here to give any information.

Mr. C. R. Das, for Golap Lal Ghose, said that his client was Director and Financial Manager. The first question which must be determined was whether this was a criminal proceeding or not. On their Lordships' decision would rest other questions. He did not like to raise the question of jurisdiction but that was a substantial question in the case. Once he established that it was a criminal proceeding it required evidence to prove the charge. Counsel said there was no evidence against his client. The materials upon which this Rule was granted did not call for an answer from an accused person.

Counsel next proceeded to show that it was a criminal proceeding and cited several cases. He added that once it was admitted to be a criminal proceeding, the next point was, what was the evidence against his client. He pointed out that in a criminal proceeding they must have absolutely clear proof. That which was accepted as prima facie proof in a civil action was no proof in a criminal proceeding.

Mr. Das next cited cases reported as Martin v. Mackonochie (25) and Holt, In re (26) and quoted from Woodroffe's "Evidence" that the question was not whether substantial justice was done but whether justice was done according to law. In accepting evidence they must be satisfied that it was according to law. Then they could not draw an inference in conformity with his guilt but in conformity with his innocence. In a criminal proceeding the inference must be drawn which was mostly in favour of the accused.

Continuing, Mr. Das said that the return filed by the Secretary of the Company giving the names of the directors and managers, being a private document, must be strictly proved as to handwriting and signature. Therefore, the production of a certified copy was of no use. He then read sections 74 and 65 of the Evidence Act and sections 31, 32, 40, 240 and 248 of the Indian Companies Act, and said that that was not a public record. It was a private document. It was sent to the Registrar but that did not make it a public document.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Is it a public record of a private document?]

(25) (1878) 3 Q. B. D. 730.

(26) (1879) 11 Ch. D. 168; 40 L. T. 207; 27 W. R. 485.

In the matter of AMRITA BAZAR PATRIKA.

No. I say that it is a private document, [FLETCHER, J., referred Mr. Das to section 87 of the Companies Act, and asked whether it was not public document.]

How is it a public document? Public record means any record which is concerned with the public.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—The public are entitled to get copies of the document by paying certain fees?] Yes.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Then is it not a public document?]

The whole question is whether it is a public record. What does the expressions "public record" mean? Section 87, as it is worded, does not make this document a public document

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Is this copy, of which this document purports to be a certified copy, made under section 87 of the Companies Act?]

No. Under section 32 of the Companies Act. The affidavit says that.

[FLETCHER, J.—That is Mr. Heehle's view.] These are the materials upon which we have come to answer.

Mr. Das then read clause (1) of sections 32 of the Companies Act and said that they were to send information to the Registrar, who, under the Act, had some power of supervision over Joint Stock Companies. There were many documents of which they could get copies, but those could not be regarded, and never had been regarded, as public documents. If in pursuance of section 32 of the Companies Act, the copies being sent by them to the Registrar's office, the office had to do something and to keep some records of those documents, these copies would be public records of private documents. The mere fact that these copies were sent and that the Registrar's office kept copies of them did not make those copies public documents. The Registrar's office was only the custodian of those documents under the Act.

The hearing being resumed on the following morning, Mr. C. R. Das, continuing his address on behalf of Golap Lal Ghose, Financial Manager of the Amrita Bazar Patrika, said that section 87 of the Indian Companies Act, to which Mr. Justice Fletcher had referred the day before, referred to a totally different document, not the one referred to in section 32 of the Indian Companies Act. The document with which their Lordships were now concerned was a document mentioned in section 32, and not in section 87. That would bear on the next question he would argue as to the presumption that if they were Directors in March they were Directors in May. The certificate filed stated the facts as they stood on March 5th.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Look at the end where it states "filed this 9th day of May."]

I see that. Your Lordship will allow me to deal with it after I have disposed of the first point. The question which your Lordships have got to decide first of all in this connection is whether it comes under clause 2 of section 74, as to whether it is a public document or not. I submit the words "public record" show it must be a record made of private documents when they are sent on to the Registrar's office. What the Legislature contemplated is that unless some record is directed under the law to be kept of these documents it cannot become a public record of private documents. This is the view which Mr. Justice Woodroffe takes in his book on the Law of Evidence at page 517 (reads). Therefore your Lordship's view is that it must be a record kept in the Registrar's office, made in the Registrar's office, and that the record is to be a record of or relating to private documents. Something has got to be done by the public officer with reference to that document—a note or entry or something which will make that document a public document.

[CHITTY, J.—What meaning do you put on the word "record" in that section? Do you mean to say there must be some writing by the public official?]

Yes. I shall show your Lordships that that is the view of eminent authorities in England on public documents.

Counsel then cited Taylor on Evidence, Volume II, 10th Edition, page 1078, Powell on Evidence, 9th Edition, page 271, Lord Blackburn's judgment in the case of Sturla v. Freccia (27) and Mercer v. Denne (28) and said: That is my submission on the point that this is not a public document. If it is not a public document Exhibit F is not admissible in this case, and if it is not admissible there is no evidence of any kind in this case. There is no inference of any kind.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Assume secondary evidence is admissible what is your point?]

I submit the certified copy does not prove the signature. There must be evidence before your Lordships that the signature appearing on the original is the signature of accused before your Lordships, and there is absolutely no evidence of that. Section 77 is not a section which would authorise the reception of this evidence without proof that the signature upon the original is the signature of this man.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—For the purpose of this part of your argument you would take the certified copy as if it were the original?]

Yes. They are entitled to put in the certified copy without proof of the loss of the original. Section 77 merely says it is to be taken as proof of the contents, that is word for word it is the same as the original.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—You would take this objection even if the original was exhibited.]

Yes. There must be evidence that the signature is the signature of this man. I can find no authorities according to which you may take the certified copy not only as proof of the contents of the original but over and above that as proof of the signature of the particular man before your Lordships.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—If we find that is a statutory return, is there not some inference to be drawn from the fact that the man's name appears there as director of the company?]

The furthest you can go is that a man of that name was Director or Financial Manager. In a criminal trial you must prove the identity of the accused.

[WOODROFFE, J.—Why do you come before us?]

Because notice is served upon me. I would have been most happy not to have come.

[WOODROFFE, J.—As what? As Director of the Company?]

No, as Golap Lal Ghose. Suppose I have been served with notice as Director. The fact they served a notice upon me as Director does not prove that I am he. These are technical points no doubt but I submit I am entitled to take them. Your Lordships are exercising very extraordinary jurisdiction, and if I can take any technical point I am entitled to take it on behalf of my client.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—If section 90 applies?]

Then it would be different. I am very much obliged to your Lordship. That strengthens my argument. If a document is 30 years old and is produced from proper custody, then the Court may take it that the signature of the person which it purports to contain is the signature of that person. Then there are various provisions in the Companies Act itself which show that certain documents may be taken as prima facie evidence of their contents, but in this case there is no such provision. If your Lordships accept this as secondary evidence of proof of the original then there is no proof of the signature, and unless there is such proof I cannot be convicted of this offence. Secondly, it shows that on March 5th, 1917—I am assuming your Lordships are against me on the other points—I was a Director and Financial Manager. In a criminal trial you cannot draw an inference from that that because I was Financial Manager or a Director on March 5th, 1917, therefore on the date on which these paragraphs appeared in the Amrita Bazar Patrika I still hold that office. Suppose I was prosecuted for criminal breach of trust as a servant and the prosecution prove that three months before the occurrence I was their servant. I submit no conviction could rest on that evidence. The prosecution must in that case carry further and say that on the date of the offence. I hold that office.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—It will be proved by oral evidence that no change had been notified under section 87.]

That will be. Such returns have got to be made from time to time. If there is a question of presumption your Lordships may draw the inference that those returns were made and if they were made they should be produced. Then you Lordships would have had before you all the documents which would have shown or might have shown that the accused was in that position on the dates on which those paragraphs appeared. That, however, is wanting. Matters which have to be proved by evidence cannot be made the subject of inferences, which must be under these circumstances conjectures. There is nothing in the law to prevent my giving up that appointment the very next day. Before your Lordships can convict me there must be evidence before you that on the dates on which these paragraphs were written or published I was a Director or Financial Manager.

The next point I desire to discuss in this connection is that suppose you take it I was a Director and the Financial Manager on the date when those paragraphs appeared—I am assuming that against me—what does it prove? I take the case of my being the Financial Manager first. The evidence upon which I have been asked to show cause indicates my duties are in the financial line and, therefore, so far as that is any indication, it shows that I have nothing to do with the editing of the paper or the editing of the paragraphs or any work with reference to the publication of these paragraphs. I submit, therefore, that that is in my favour.

I ask your Lordships to consider whether it is not a fact that out of the Directors some are appointed Managers and of the Directors I am appointed Financial Manager. Different duties are cast on different Directors. Your Lordships cannot suppose that in a meeting of the Directors it was discussed that these paragraphs showing contempt of the High Court should be published in the paper. My liability must entirely depend upon how far I was engaged in the work of publishing this paper. That must be alleged. Where is there such an allegation against me except that I am a Director and a Financial Manager? There is no reason to suppose in the face of that certificate that directors—except those holding such a post as Manager or Financial Manager—have anything to do with the editing of articles or the publication of the paper. A reasonable way of reading that document is this,—there are so many Directors that so far as the executive work is concerned with regard to the publication of the paper it has two sides, namely, the editorial side and the financial side. The financial side is not concerned with the editing and publishing of the paper. It is alleged against me that, apart from being a Director who has got a right to attend Directors' meetings and deliberate and discuss matters placed before the Directors there, I am entrusted with the work of financial management. These are the allegations made against me and these are the allegations I have come to meet. I am showing your Lordships that I have nothing to meet. The case for the prosecution—if I may use that expression—is that I am a Director who attends meetings of the Directors, and over and above that I am the Financial Manager. Therefore, in the face of these allegations, I venture to submit that your Lordships cannot draw any inference or conclusion—or even a reasonable conjecture does not arise—that I have anything to do with the publication of the paper. Therefore from that point of view there is no evidence against me. Then I go further than that. As a Director there are sections in the Indian Companies Act which provide for the Memorandum of Association being sent to the Registrar's office as well as the Articles of Association. The duties of Directors so far as the Company is concerned are duties which are defined and circumscribed by the Articles of Association. Why is it that a copy of the Memorandum is before your Lordships and not the Articles of Association?

[SANDERSON, C. J.—We have the Articles of Association.]

It is not part of the affidavit.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—No. It has been put in by one of the respondents. It was read on Tuesday. It is attached to the affidavit of Mrinal.]

I have not put that in and I know nothing about it. I don't know whether that is for me or against me. I put my case on a different footing. There is abundant authority for the proposition that directly the name of the Director of a Company is announced, it would not do to say that a director is he who directs or that a Director is he who manages.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Suppose the Articles say that the Directors are to manage the business and that the business is that of publishing and printing. Is it not prima facie that they do publish and print?]

That would depend on whether the only business indicated in the articles is the conduct of the paper.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Leave out the word “only.” If a Company is formed the main object of which is to carry on the paper and the articles say the Directors are to manage and publish the paper, I would assume prima facie they were managing.]

With regard to every Director?

[SANDERSON, C. J.—I assume that would be their duties.]

Suppose one of the articles was they were to hold meetings of the Directors in which the question of finance, appointment of editor and so on, was to be discussed and the article went further and said Director so and so was to be responsible for finance?

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Of course that would make a difference. Suppose it says, as it says here, the business of the Company shall be managed by the directors who shall pay all expenses and so on?]

I cannot submit my case on documents which are not part of the evidence against me at present. Apart from the question of this man being a Director, as soon as that is done it raises the legitimate proposition that his duties are regulated by the Articles of Association. The Articles of Association are not pleaded against me. It was not one of the grounds on which this Rule was issued.

Counsel then cited the case of Imperial Hydropathic Hotel Co., Blackpool v. Hampson (29) and said that there the matter was discussed as to what were the duties of a Director and his rights and liabilities. He submitted that in this case their Lordships could not arrive at any such conclusion that because this man was a Director he must know this, that because he was a Manager he must know this. For a criminal trial something more definite was necessary, that it was his duty to look after the printing or the publishing of the paper in question. After all, if their Lordships took it as a matter of legitimate inference, they must take it in connection with the usual way in which business was done under these circumstances. If there was a Company for the purpose of publishing a newspaper and other things as well, as the memorandum showed, what would their Lordships expect? Their Lordships would expect in the usual course that for the purpose of editing the paper the Company would appoint an Editor and that it should be in the discretion of the Editor as to the manner in which he edited the paper. They might reasonably infer that probably the general policy of the paper was indicated to the Editor. After all, the question as to which particular articles should or should not be published must be left to the discretion of the Editor. Therefore prima facie a man who was a Director and nothing more than a Director would not look to the printing or publishing of different paragraphs which came in the different issues of the paper. Of course if their Lordships had evidence before them that a particular Director was also entrusted with the duty of looking after the newspaper and doing the work of Editor, then the matter would have stood on a different footing. Their Lordships had not got that evidence, the only evidence they had was that he was a Director. They could not draw the inference from that that because he was a Director, he must be taken to be aware of what articles were published and, therefore, he must have known before the publication of those articles that they were of this character and, therefore, he was liable for a criminal offence. Mr. Das submitted that that conclusion was too remote having regard to the facts which their Lordships had before them.

Then with regard to the matter of these Directors and Managers their Lordships had had the case put before them of Green, Es parte, Robbins, In the matter of (24), from which they would see that in that case the argument was not because he was Manager he was responsible. In that case the Judges had carefully gone into all the circumstances, the previous correspondence and the admission of the Manager and it was upon the admission of the Manager and the contrast between these letters and correspondence and his affidavit filed in Court at the time of the trial that the Judges came to the conclusion that he was responsible. Here their Lordships must have evidence before them to show that this man was responsible for the publication.

Counsel next cited the case of O'Shea v. O'Shea (6) and said it very often happened that even with regard to a paper the editor was responsible for the editorials while the advertisement department was left in somebody else's charge. It would be impossible to manage the publication of a paper unless there was a division of labour like that. Their Lordships were not considering the question of civil liability but the question of criminal liability. The mere fact that these people were Directors or Managers or Financial Managers would not justify their Lordships in coming to the conclusion that they were responsible.

[WOODROFFE, J.—What is the difference between civil and criminal liability? Ordinarily we regard as a civil liability that which results in damages and so forth. A decree is awarded to give reparation to a plaintiff. A criminal liability is that in which the Court puts proceedings in motion for the purpose of punishing a person who does something wrong. If you take this question of civil contempt and criminal contempt you find in both cases the Court awards punishment whether it is civil contempt or criminal contempt.]

Even in civil contempt these proceedings have been described by decisions to be decisions in penum.

[WOODROFFE, J.—They don't come under the ordinary civil and criminal proceedings. Whether you call it civil or criminal they result in punishment. Therefore, it is nothing more than this, that the law has attached certain epithets to certain classes of contempt and they call one class contempt of a criminal nature and the other class contempt of a civil nature.]

It is only for the purpose of deciding the question of jurisdiction, but so far as the offence is concerned it is in both cases criminal. It is a proceeding in penum.

[WOODROFFE, J.—Then how do you say about jurisdiction?]

The one is criminal jurisdiction, the other is civil jurisdiction. I am addressing your Lordships from the point of view that it is a proceeding in penum and, therefore, you must look at the evidence strictly.

[WOODROFFE, J.—All evidence must be looked at strictly.]

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Strict proof is required in criminal cases. Equally strict proof is required in civil cases.]

That is so. I am pleading for the application of strict proof. If your Lordships apply strict proof I have nothing to complain of.

Counsel next cited Statutes 6 and 7 Victoria, the case of Harding v. Greening (30) and the case of Reg. v. Holbrook (22) and Reg. v. Holbrook (23).

[SANDERSON, C. J.—The procedure for civil contempt and criminal contempt is the same?]

Yes. It is a proceeding in penum.

[WOODROFFE, J.—Does it not come to this that both the jurisdiction to commit for contempt and the contempt itself are in sui generis.]

Yes. The point of view from which I am addressing your Lordships is that it is a proceeding in penum. Therefore according to your Lordships' ruling in Governor of Bengal v. Moti Lal (4), the proceedings ought to conform as nearly as possible to the proceedings in criminal cases.

Mr. C. R. Das, continuing, said that the last two cases showed that whether or not the Common Law of England at one time was that the proprietor could be punished even although it was proved that he was not responsible for the particular libellous matter, it certainly was not the law of England now by reason of 6 and 7 Victoria. Be that as it may, there could not be any doubt that it was not the law in India at present and it was impossible to argue that that law applied in this country to convict people who were not directly responsible for the publication of the libel. He referred to section 499 of the Penal Code and also to section 501. He had been described as a Director and Financial Manager. It did not follow from that that he was personally responsible for the publication. That responsibility must be fixed upon him by some evidence, direct or indirect. The only evidence there was here was the statement referred to and that did not establish his responsibility. He next submitted that there was no necessary connection between the two articles of May 18th and May 22nd. In the first place there was no reasonable ground upon which that could be assumed. Then there was nothing to suggest that they were not written by two different persons on two different dates, unless their Lordships by way of inference read into these two matters something which was not there. In the first article the writer did not believe that any official of the Trust would dare to go so far as to approach the Chief Justice or any Judge of this Court. In the next article he said that consternation prevailed, but it was not a fair reading of it to assume that the official did approach the Chief Justice. There were words put in as a sort of protection.

(30) (1817) 8 Taunt. 42; 1 Moore. 477; 129 E. R. 297.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Which words?]

That there was a mischievous rumour which should be contradicted. He also said that "we are sure that every rate-payer is safe in the hands of the Honourable Judges. We are sure that the officials of the Trust will not go so far." He did not intend that the contradiction should come from the Judges of the High Court. He himself contradicted.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—If his object was not to draw attention to the rumour, why publish it?]

Mr. Das said he would deal with this point later on. Supposing there were two views possible the Court was bound to see which was consistent with the writer's innocence. If once they started with the idea that the writer was innocent, then everything pointed to these paragraphs being read absolutely in favour of his innocence. Why should their Lordships put something else into the articles which was not there and draw adverse inferences? The facts according to the rumour were that Mr. Justice Mookerjee and Mr. Justice Cumming, who had decided Chandra Kanta's case (14) against the Trust, were withdrawn and the Bench was altered and was constituted by the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Woodroffe coming in and Mr. Justice Chitty was to join their Lordships. Upon that the writer said, why should that be so? Is not the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Woodroffe quite competent to try the case? As regards their reason for suggesting the addition of two Indian Judges, Mr. Das desired to dissociate himself from the arguments put forward by Mr. Jackson. Mr. Jackson had suggested that the writer wanted two Indian Judges because the Indian Judges were interested as landowners and were affected by the Improvement Trust. That would be the strongest ground for suggesting that Indian Judges should not be on the new Bench.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Is not this a sort of suggestion that the Indian Judges would themselves resent very strongly?]

I should submit so myself.

Continuing he said that the writer was considering the mysterious rumour in the public mind which was strengthened by the unfortunate fact that just after the decision of Chandra Kanta's case (14) Justices Mookerjee and Cumming were removed.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—It is only the withdrawal of Sir Asutosh that is mentioned.]

Before that the writer says that Judges who decided the case were Justices Mookerjee and Cumming. Therefore it did not mean the withdrawal of Sir Asutosh alone but the withdrawal of the Bench. The writer was not drafting a plaint or a written statement. The writer is debating the matter with himself. He is putting forward different reasons and disposing of them one by one. It might be impertinent for him to advise the Chief Justice as to the way in which he should form his Benches, but it is not contempt of Court.

[WOODROFFE, J.—If it only means what you said, why should he say if you are going to have more than two Judges have a Full Bench and have Indian Judges, and why should he say that unless you do what he tells you to do, that will leave an unsavoury impression?]

He says that the rumour is strengthened by these facts. He is putting forward the public view which might be unjust and mischievous, but, at any rate, he is expressing the public view, and he says that the unsavoury impression will be removed because it follows close upon the heels of Chandra Kanta's case (14).

[FLEISCHER, J.—That means that there is

In the matter of AMRITA BAZAR PATRIKA.

some hidden meaning for importing Mr. Justice Chitty on to the Bench.]

That is not the reason. It is to allay the suspicion of the public that a Full Bench is suggested with two Indian Judges. Why should you suppose that there is any hidden attack on Mr. Justice Chitty? It was not only the withdrawal of the Bench which decided against the Trust but close upon it came the formation of a new Bench. He says that this rumour was strengthened in the mind of the public by these events, first, by the withdrawal of Justices Mookerjee and Cuming who decided the case against the Trust, and secondly, that the new Bench was to be strengthened by bringing in Mr. Justice Chitty. Then the writer suggests that these facts would leave a mischievous impression on the mind of the public and the suggestion which the writer makes is this: He says we have perfect faith in the Chief Justice; still to allay public feeling a Full Bench should be formed with two Indian Judges.

[WOODROFFE, J.—Supposing the suggestion is exactly what the writer says, namely, that it has given the unsavoury impression that Sir Asutosh Mookerjee was withdrawn because he had decided against the Trust?]

Not only the withdrawal but the withdrawal following close upon the decision.

[WOODROFFE, J.—Yes, because he had given judgment against the Trust. It was supposed that my learned brother would try the other cases and he was withdrawn because he had given his judgment against the Trust?]

That is the meaning. He says that this was the rumour.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Do I understand you to say that this was the clear meaning of the article that Sir Asutosh Mookerjee had been withdrawn because he had given judgment against the Improvement Trust?]

I beg pardon: What I said is that the two events were following each other closely. He is not giving them as his own ground. He is speaking of the unfortunate chain of events.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—I thought my learned brother had put the question and your answer was that this was a clear meaning of the article.]

If this was so, I did not hear Mr. Justice Woodroffe properly. I do not say that the writer suggests that Justice Mookerjee was withdrawn because he had decided against the Trust.

[WOODROFFE, J.—I put it to you that one of the suggestions made in this article was that the Trust were moving in this matter because Mr. Justice Mookerjee had given his decision against them, and the writer was under the impression that all the cases dealing with the Improvement Trust were to be heard and disposed of by Justices Mookerjee and Cuming, and that in order to aid these manoeuvres of the Trust my learned brother had been withdrawn, and you said that this was clearly the meaning.]

If I said so I did not mean that the writer meant this. He refers to the chain of events and he speaks of the apprehension in the mind of the public.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Do I understand you to say that the meaning was that Sir Asutosh had been withdrawn on account of his judgment against the Trust?]

Not only that but the whole chain of events. It is not the isolated fact but all the things taken together which had caused the impression. The writer does not say that this is well founded but he is giving some sort of excuse for the public feeling.

Counsel then went on to explain the meaning of the second article and submitted that there was nothing in it which showed that there was any contempt.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Who does he suggest as being responsible for the withdrawal of Sir Asutosh?]

He does not suggest that. He says that the public have taken it in that way because of the chain of events. He speaks of his perfect faith in your Lordship. How then could it be contempt of your Lordship? That expression in itself contradicts that idea and is inconsistent with it. He was not saying anything which is insulting or contemptuous. Your Lordship put it to me a little while ago that if it was a mischievous rumour why did he express it? If it, was with reference a private person, of course, he should not have expressed it, but in this case it might be a source of incalculable mischief and if it went uncontradicted, it might gather strength and result in a universal belief that the High Court is no longer to be trusted. That would be a state of affairs which would be a thousand times more mischievous than giving expression to the rumour and trying to combat it.

Counsel went on to say that their Lordships should start with the idea that the writer did not write this article with any intention to insult or annoy or give any offence. What was the good of holding this trial if they started with the idea that there was no such rumour and that the writer's sole object was to attack the High Court, and that as he could not do it on facts, he tried to do it on invented facts? In this case their Lordships were both prosecutors and judges at the same time and they should not start with an idea like this. They must start with the idea that the man was an innocent man. It was only when they found that they could not accept this view that they must take the other view. This was the basic principle of British justice. Where was the contempt in saying that two Indian Judges should be associated with the Bench, unless it was assumed that the mischievous facts were purposely put in that way? The sentence referring to the withdrawal of Mr. Justice Mookerjee giving rise to an unsavoury impression should not be taken by itself. It must be taken in connection with the rumour that the Improvement Trust were taking some steps, that Justices Mookerjee and Cuming had decided the case against the Trust, that following upon it was the so-called withdrawal and it did not rest there. Then the writer referred to the constitution of a new Bench, comprising the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Woodroffe, and the appointment of Mr. Justice Chitty to this Bench. All these facts together had given rise to the impression in the public mind and yet he said that he had perfect faith in the Chief Justice. He submitted that there was nothing which showed any intention of any contempt of Court. There was no circumstance from which their Lordships could gather clearly that the writer had any intention to commit contempt of Court. Unless they came to that conclusion they could not convict. They must convict on a clear case and not upon suspicions or conjectures. It might be impertinent but there was nothing improper in suggesting how a Bench should be formed. The suggestion that the Bench should consist of three European and two Indian Judges could not be called contempt of Court. A suggestion like that might be impertinent, but it was not necessarily improper and was not contempt of Court. From it they could not draw any inference adverse to the accused.

In conclusion Mr. Das submitted that even if their Lordships came to the conclusion that it was contempt, it must according to his argument be a very technical contempt. He then drew attention to a number of cases on this point and following Mr. Chakravarty's argument, submitted that there was no tendency in this case to obstruct the course of justice.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—In this matter the Rule was issued by me as Chief Justice of this Court after consultation with the learned Judges in consequence of two articles which appeared in the "Amrita Bazar Patrika" newspaper on the 18th and 22nd of May 1917, respectively. The Rule was directed to Tarit Kanti Biswas, the printer and publisher of the newspaper, and to Moti Lal Ghose, Golap Lal Ghose and Pijush Kanti Ghose, Directors, and Golap Lal Ghose and Mrinal Kanti Ghose, the Managers of the Company called the "Amrita Bazar Patrika Ltd.," having its registered office at No. 2 Anando Chatterjee's Lane, Calcutta, and the Rule called upon them to show cause why they should not be committed or otherwise dealt with according to law for contempt of Court alleged to have been committed by them by unlawfully publishing the two articles concerning the High Court and the Chief Justice in his administration thereof.

The respondents to the Rule have all appeared by learned Counsel.

The first question which it is necessary to consider is whether these articles or either of them constitute a contempt of Court. The appeals from Mr. Justice Greaves, to which both the articles refer, are the appeals in the three cases mentioned at the head of the Rule. These cases were decided by Greaves, J., sitting on the Original Side, and the appeals in which the Improvement Trust were respondents were about to be heard by the Court hearing appeals from the Original Side at the time of the publication of the two articles in May 1917.

The first article is as follows:—"There is a mischievous rumour afloat which should be contradicted. It is stated that a vigorous attempt is being made to get up a Bench to consider the appeal on the judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves in connection with the acquisition of surplus land by the Calcutta Improvement Trust according to somebody's choice. We do not believe that it is possible for any one, far less the Chairman of the Trust, to secure a Bench after his own heart as a counterpoise to the Mookerjee and Cuming Bench. We are sure the interest of every rate-payer is safe in the hands of the Hon'ble Judges, and we do not think that any official of the Trust can go so far."

The reference to the "Mookerjee and Cuming Bench" is to an appeal which was disposed of by Mookerjee, J., and Mr. Cuming when he was temporarily acting as a Judge of the High Court in August 1916, when the decision was against the Improvement Trust.

The second article is as follows:—"Something like consternation prevails on account of the proposed new constitution of the appellate Bench of the Calcutta High Court before which appeals against the awards of the Improvement Trust are to be heard. It is known to the reader how this Bench was originally composed of Sir Asutosh Mookerjee and the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Cuming, and how latterly it has come to be presided over by the Hon'ble the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Woodroffe. Rumour has it that for purposes of hearing Improvement Trust Appeals the Bench is going to be strengthened by the appointment of Mr. Justice Chitty. Now what neither the public nor ourselves can understand is this special arrangement for such a Special Bench. If it is contended that two Hon'ble Judges of the highest Court in the land are not competent to decide in appeal cases in which the Improvement Trust is concerned, a contention, however, which we do not believe the Chief Justice will care to advance, why should there be a Special Bench of three and not a Full Bench of five, on which at least two Indian Judges could find seats? As a matter of fact, as land-owners in Calcutta are mostly Indians and as Indian Judges are likely to know more of conditions, practices, etc., prevailing here, it is but meet that the Appellate Bench in the present circumstances should be so composed as to associate Indian Judges with their European colleagues. The withdrawal of Sir Asutosh has given rise to rather unsavoury impressions in the public mind, since this proposed arrangement is to follow close upon the heels of his judgment in the case of The Improvement Trust v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (14). Be that as it may, we have perfect faith in the present Chief Justice and believe that as soon as Sir Lancelot Sanderson understands the public feeling in the matter, his Lordship will either form a Full Bench or at least associate an experienced Indian Judge with himself for the hearing of the Improvement Trust appeals."

It was admitted by the learned Counsel for the respondents at the hearing of the Rule that the statements of facts contained in this article were in many material respects untrue. There was not an Appellate Bench constituted to hear appeals "against the awards of the Improvement Trust" as the article assumes. Such Bench was not originally composed of Sir A. Mookerjee and Mr. Justice Cuming as stated in the article: such Bench had not latterly come to be presided over by the Chief Justice and Woodroffe, J., and it is untrue that Sir A. Mookerjee had been withdrawn from the Court.

Though these admissions have been made, it may be advisable to state the real facts.

In August 1916, as already stated, Mookerjee, J., and Mr. Cuming were sitting as a Division Bench on the Appellate Side and an appeal by the Improvement Trust from the Sub-Judge of the 24-Perganas, having come before them in the ordinary course, was disposed of by them. One of the questions was the alleged power of the Improvement Trust to acquire land compulsorily for the purpose of recoupment and the decision was against the Improvement Trust.

In the matter of AMRITA BAZAR PATRIKA.

In July 1916, Greaves, J., sitting on the original side, had decided the same question in three cases in favour of the Improvement Trust, and in May of this year the appeals from Greaves, J.'s judgment in the three cases were about to be heard by Woodroffe, J., and myself, the Judges who were then taking the appeals from the original side. Under these circumstances the articles were published.

As regards the inclusion of Chitty, J., in the Court, no explanation is necessary: it would be sufficient for me to state that I, as Chief Justice, thought it desirable to have three Judges to hear the appeal. But the reason in this case must have been obvious to every one. It was within my knowledge, as it was within every one's knowledge, that Mookerjee, J., had decided one way and Greaves, J., had decided another way on the construction of the Act on which the cases depended. It was obviously, therefore, a matter on which difference of opinion was possible; moreover it was a case of general importance and in order to avoid a further disagreement which might occur if the Court was constituted of two Judges only, and to avoid the further proceedings and delay which would undoubtedly be consequent on such a disagreement, I thought it advisable to have three Judges instead of two, and accordingly I requested Chitty, J., the next Judge in order of seniority who had not already had the matter before him, to sit with Woodroffe, J., and myself, and hear the appeals. I may mention here that in my opinion all appeals from a Judge sitting on the original side, except interlocutory appeals, should be heard by a Court constituted by three Judges, and when I first sat in this Court it was so constituted; but I found that the allocation of three Judges to that Court dislocated the work in other departments of the Court so much that I came to the conclusion with much reluctance that with our present staff of Judges I could not allocate more than two Judges to the original side appeals, except in special cases.

These being the facts, I now proceed to consider whether the articles are a contempt of Court.

I take the definition given by Lord Russell of Killowen in Reg. v. Gray (31):—

"Any act done or writing published calculated to bring a Court or a Judge of the Court into contempt, or to lower his authority, is a contempt of Court. That is one class of contempt. Further, any act done or writing published calculated to obstruct or interfere with the due course of justice, or the lawful process of the Courts, is contempt of Court. The former class belongs to the category which Lord Hardwicke, L. C., characterised as 'scandalising a Court or a Judge.' That description of that class of contempt is to be taken subject to one and an important qualification. Judges and Courts are alike open to criticism, and if reasonable argument or expostulation is offered against any judicial act as contrary to law or the public good, no Court could or would treat that as contempt of Court. The law ought not to be astute in such cases to criticise adversely what under such circumstances and with such an object is published; but it is to be remembered that in this matter the liberty of the press is no greater and no less than the liberty of every subject of the Queen."

With regard to the first article I have no doubt it constitutes a contempt of Court. It was admitted by the learned Counsel appearing for the printer and publisher that it was a gross libel upon the Improvement Trust, one of the litigants. It alleges that it is stated that a vigorous attempt is being made to get up a Bench to consider the appeal on the judgment of Greaves, J., in connection with the acquisition of surplus land by the Calcutta Improvement Trust according to somebody's choice, which Bench is referred to therein after "as a counterpoise to the Mookerjee and Cuming Bench," which, as I have stated, had decided against the Improvement Trust. It was urged that this should not be regarded as a contempt, because the matter which would be argued on the appeals was the construction of an Act, and would be decided by Judges who would not be affected by such remarks.

The question is not whether the article in fact obstructed or interfered with the due course of justice, but whether it is "calculated" to obstruct and interfere with the due course of justice. No matter what the tribunal may be, I am at a loss to understand how it can be seriously argued that such a grave allegation against one of the litigants that he was attempting to get a Bench constituted in such a way as would in his opinion give him a favourable decision, is not calculated to obstruct or interfere with the course of justice. Further, the mere suggestion that such a thing is within the bounds of possibility is a grave reflection upon the Court and the persons responsible for its administration. I am not unmindful of the argument that the article refers to a "mischievous rumour which should be contradicted" and that confidence is alleged in the Hon'ble Judges. The fact that the article is based on a rumour, even if it existed, cannot, in my judgment, excuse the publication of it. It must have been known to the person responsible for the publication that it was absolutely impossible for a litigant to get a Bench constituted according to his own choice. It is, however, a well-known method of spreading a libel for the publisher, who does not wish to take responsibility for it, to say there is a rumour to this or that effect, but that he himself does not believe it. It was admitted by one of the learned Counsel for the respondents that some words may have been inserted in the article by the person responsible therefor in order to protect himself in case of emergency, and having regard to the whole tenor of the article, I have very little doubt that this was the object of the writer in concluding in the manner referred to. If the matter had stopped there, although the paragraph was reprehensible and a clear contempt of Court, it might not have been necessary for the Court to take any steps of its own motion.

The second article, however, appeared four days later on the 22nd May. As already mentioned the facts therein stated are admittedly untrue; and consequently the insinuations based thereon are equally groundless. The only part of the article which is based on an alleged rumour is that Chitty, J., was to be appointed to the Bench, which was to hear the Improvement Trust Appeals. For the rest of the statements in the article the author makes himself responsible.

The statement that "something like consternation prevails on account of the proposed new constitution of the Appellate Bench" taken by itself is a grave allegation. Why should a Bench which is to be composed of the Chief Justice and two of the most experienced Judges of the Court cause consternation? But when it is taken with what follows it assumes a much more serious complexion. After misstating the facts as to the previous constitution of the Bench and referring to the proposed inclusion of Chitty, J., it proceeds "now what neither the public nor ourselves can understand is this special reason for such a Special Bench." It then proceeds to argue that the proper thing would have been to have a Full Bench on which at least two Indian Judges could have seats. Reading so far, there may be some reason for doubt as to the meaning of the article, though the above allegations go the length of alleging that for some reason which no one could understand, the Chief Justice was about to include Chitty, J., in the Bench, and that such constitution of the Bench had caused something like consternation. But I think all doubt is set at rest by what follows when the author makes himself responsible for the statement that Mookerjee, J., has been withdrawn from the Bench and that such withdrawal "has given rise to rather unsavoury impressions in the public mind since this proposed arrangement is to follow close upon the heels of his judgment in the case of the Calcutta Improvement Trust v. Chandra Kant Ghosh (14)." Reading that in the ordinary way, can it mean anything except that Mookerjee, J., has been withdrawn from the Bench, taking the appeals against the awards of the Improvement Trust: that such Bench was originally composed of Mookerjee, J., and Cuming, J., that it is now composed of the Chief Justice and Woodroffe, J., that Chitty, J., is about to be included which is a special arrangement which neither the author of the article nor the public can understand, that if any special arrangement is necessary why should not Indian Judges be included and that the withdrawal of Mookerjee, J., coming as it does so soon after his judgment against the Improvement Trust, has caused an unsavoury impression in the public mind. Consequently something like consternation prevails at the proposed new constitution of the Bench.

I think it is clear that it means that Mookerjee, J., has been withdrawn from the Bench taking the appeals against the award of the Improvement Trust and insinuates that it is because of his judgment against the Trust, and, therefore, an unsavoury impression has arisen. I fail to see any other meaning which can be attributed to it, and I have no doubt that this article, read by itself constitutes a very serious reflection upon the administration of the Court, which everyone knows is in the hands of the Chief Justice. But if it is read in conjunction with the previous article, the above-mentioned meaning is made plain beyond dispute. I think the articles should be read together. They were published with only four days' interval, they refer to the same subject-matter, they are written in the same strain and in the same style, and each article appeared in the columns of the newspaper which are devoted to leading articles. When read together what do they mean? It is obvious to my mind they mean to suggest that a vigorous attempt had been made by the Improvement Trust to secure a Bench composed according to their choice and that the attempt has succeeded; that otherwise the proposed constitution of the Bench is inexplicable and something like consternation prevails. If this be the correct meaning, there is no doubt that it is calculated to bring the Court and the Chief Justice, who is responsible for its administration, into contempt and it is calculated not only to destroy confidence in the tribunal but also to undermine and impair the authority of the Court. If so, there is no doubt that it is a contempt of this Court.

There are two other matters to which I wish to refer. It was argued that the object of the second article was to procure the appointment of two Indian Judges or one Indian Judge to the Bench which was to hear the appeals, and the suggestion contained in the article was that as the land-owners in Calcutta were mostly Indians, and Indian Judges are likely to know more of conditions and practices prevailing, that it was but meet that Indian Judges should be associated with their European colleagues. The question at issue in the appeals depended on the construction of the sections of a certain Act, and had nothing to do with the conditions and practices, etc., relating to Indians. This, however, might be put down to ignorance on the part of the author of the article, though from the references made in the article to such matters as the constitution of the Courts, Full Bench and other matters, the writer appears to be fairly familiar with the proceedings of the Court and the nature of the appeals in question. A further argument, however, was adduced by the learned Counsel for Moti Lal Ghose, viz., that the real object of the article was to get an Indian Judge, who possessed land, appointed to the Bench in question, because Indian Judges would approach the subject from a totally different point of view from that of European Judges, who do not possess land and who do not know where the shoe pinches. This to my mind was an astonishing argument. I was not surprised, therefore, when Mr. C. R. Das, appearing for another of the respondents at a later stage of the hearing, disassociated himself from that argument and stated that in his opinion the above-mentioned argument would be the strongest ground for suggesting that Indian Judges should not be on the Bench in question. Assuming, however, that the learned Counsel for Moti Lal Ghose was correct in his statement as to the meaning and object of the article, it is not only one which would be rightly and strongly resented by my Indian colleagues but it also provides an additional reason for holding the article a contempt of Court: for it involves the suggestion that one of my Indian colleagues should be added to the Bench in question because he possessed land and would approach the question from a different point of view from a Judge who possessed no land and who would, therefore, be entirely independent and it thereby constitutes a very grave and unjustifiable reflection on my Indian colleagues.

It is also to be noted that if this was the object, the author of the articles was endeavouring to obtain the constitution of a Bench after his own heart, the very thing which he had professed to condemn so strongly when attempted, as alleged, by the Improvement Trust. Assuming, however, that the object of the article was to get an Indian Judge appointed, no matter for what reason, that does not justify the publication of the untrue statements of facts and the unworthy and groundless insinuations based thereon.

The other matter to which I refer is the passage at the end of the article in which the author expresses perfect faith in the Chief Justice. This, to my mind, is so inconsistent with the insinuations previously made in the articles, that it is impossible to conceive that it was genuinely intended. It is much in the same style as the conclusion of the previous article, and I do not think there can be any doubt as to the object of the author in using these words, viz., to try and provide a means of escape for himself if he is taken to task for the previous matter contained in his article.

No one has come forward to acknowledge the authorship of the articles or the responsibility of the publication, and we have, therefore, had no opportunity of hearing or considering any explanation from the individual, in person, who was so responsible. Consequently the meaning and the intention of the writer must be gathered from the articles themselves. They must be read as they stand, giving to the words used their natural meaning. We have had many arguments and many commentaries upon the articles addressed to us by all the learned Counsel on behalf of the respondents. I have considered them carefully and though I should like to have come to the conclusion that the articles do not and were not intended to constitute an attack on the Court, I regret to say I am unable to come to that conclusion. It might possibly have been different if the author of the article or the person responsible for its publication had come forward and personally explained what was in his mind; but he has not chosen so to do, and we must construe the articles as they stand, and I have no doubt that any one reading them would come to the conclusion that a very serious aspersion was cast upon the Court and the administration thereof, and that consequently they do constitute a contempt.

If then the articles constitute a contempt the next question is, whether the Court has jurisdiction to deal with it by these proceedings. There can be no doubt as to this: it was held in 1883 in Surendra Nath Banerjee v. Chief Justice of Bengal (32) by the Judicial Committee that the High Courts in the Indian Presidencies are Superior Courts of Record. The offence of contempt of Court and the powers of the High Court to punish it are the same in such Courts as in the Superior Courts in England, and the jurisdiction was exercised by the High Court in that case.

This jurisdiction was affirmed in 1913 in the case of Governor of Bengal v. Moti Lal (4), when Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., said at page 215*: "Now this Court is a Court of Record in all its jurisdictions, and it thus has power to commit for any contempt in relation to any of those jurisdictions."

Then Mookerjee, J., at page 242* said: "Now, it is indisputable that a Court of Record has authority to punish for contempt. Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., observed in Abdool and Mahtab, In re (33) that this Court by the express terms of the Letters Patent is a Court of Record and there can be no doubt that every Court of Record has the power of summarily punishing for contempt", and indeed the learned Counsel appearing for the printer and publisher of the newspaper admitted the jurisdiction of the Court but argued that in this case it should not be exercised. The suggestion that this jurisdiction is obsolete and ought not to be exercised is futile, in view of the fact that it was exercised by this Court in 1883 and affirmed to be in existence in 1913. It was also exercised in England as recently as 1900 in the case of Reg. v. Gray (31) already referred to.

The question remains then whether the Rule should be made absolute against the respondents or any of them.

As regards the case of Tarit Kanti Biswas, the first respondent on the record, there is evidence that he was the printer and publisher of the newspaper. We have before us a certified copy of the return made (32) 10 C. 109; 10 I. A. 171; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 474; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 76. (33) 8 W. R. Cr. 32.

by him under the Act (XXV of 1867), his name appears in the newspaper as printer and publisher and he has himself put in an affidavit admitting that he occupies such position and that he printed and published the articles in question.

As already stated, his learned Counsel admitted the jurisdiction of this Court and further admitted his legal responsibility if the articles constituted a contempt. This responsibility could not be denied, for it has been held in many cases that the printer and publisher is liable for contempt even though he was not aware of the subject constituting such contempt, and the reason for that is given by Lord Morris, in McLeod v. St. Aubyn (5) as follows:—"A printer and publisher intends to publish and so intending cannot plead as a justification that he did not know the contents." Again it was pointed out by Stirling, J., in American Exchange in Europe v. Gillig (34) that the foreman printer (who was the person concerned in that case) is the person who is held out to the public as the publisher, and under these circumstances he is answerable for publishing the article complained of although he is ignorant of its contents. This has been the law since the well-known decision of Lord Hardwicke in the case of St. James Evening Post (35).

I refer to the above-mentioned cases to show that in my judgment the learned Counsel was correct in making the admission that this Court has jurisdiction in these proceedings, and that if the articles constitute a contempt of Court, the printer and publisher is legally liable in respect thereof.

Having held that the articles are a contempt, it remains to be considered whether the Rule should be made absolute. The printer and publisher has put in an affidavit in which he alleges he did not read the articles when they were handed to him for publication, which was done in the ordinary course of his business. He admits that certain statements in the second article are incorrect, and he then proceeds to argue that the publication was in the public interest. Paragraph 6 of his affidavit runs thus:

"That I further state that the said articles were published by myself in good faith and in the public interest and without any intention whatsoever of offending against the dignity or integrity of this Hon'ble Court or of prejudicing the due course and administration of justice in the matter of the appeals referred to in the said articles."

7. "That long before the appeals referred to in the said article came on to be heard by this Hon'ble Court, it was well known among the public of Calcutta how the Calcutta Improvement Trust had objected to the hearing of the appeal in which the question of the powers of the Calcutta Improvement Trust was involved by any of the Indian Judges of this Hon'ble Court and how, as a matter of fact, they through their Counsel, Mr. Langford James, adopted the very unusual course of applying in open Court to the Hon'ble the Chief Justice that the appeal case of Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (14) should not be heard by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Mookerjee, and how after the decision in the last mentioned case by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Mookerjee and the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Cuming they had unsuccessfully applied to the Government for legislation for the purpose of doing away with the effect of the said decision. In the circumstances recited the public were watching with deep interest the action of the Hon'ble the Chief Justice, in constituting the Court which would hear the appeals from Mr. Justice Greaves' decision."

8. "I further state that the said articles were published to give expression to public feeling in Calcutta and, as stated above, without the remotest intention of scandalising this Hon'ble Court or of reflecting on the conduct of the Hon'ble the Chief Justice or of any other Judges of this Hon'ble Court."

If it be true that the public were watching with such deep interest the action of the Chief Justice in constituting the Court, it seems to me that fact enhances the serious nature of the publication of the articles. For the public in the ordinary course might not trouble its head about the constitution of the Court, and might not pay much attention to the articles; but if, on the other hand, the public really was interested in the matter, it would pay attention to them, and it was all the more incumbent upon the author and publisher to abstain from making false statements and groundless insinuations. I may have my doubts as to the "deep interest" alleged in the affidavit, but if it did exist, the seriousness of the publication is greatly increased.

The learned Counsel for the printer and publisher urged that his client would be sufficiently dealt with by the proceedings which had been taken and that the Rule should not be made absolute against him. I take into consideration all the learned Counsel urged and I sympathise with his argument that the editor if there be one, or the person responsible for the publication, ought in common fairness to have come forward and borne the burden in respect thereof; the fact that the printer and publisher does not disclose the name of the person responsible for the publication is a factor to be considered when deciding how the printer and publisher should be dealt with. In this case, the printer and publisher has not disclosed the person responsible for the publication, whom of course he must know, though he may not know the actual writer of the articles. On the contrary he has attempted to justify the publication by the paragraphs of his affidavit to which I have referred. It was said by Lord Hardwicke in the case already cited, "nothing is more incumbent upon Courts of Justice than to preserve their proceedings from being misrepresented;" and the reason for this must be obvious to every one. My attention has been drawn on other occasions to articles criticising the High Court. I have found that many of them were unjustifiable, because they were based on statements of facts which were incorrect: but the Court has not taken any notice of them because they were not worth the time of the Court. But this is a different matter, the allegations contained in the articles exceed the bounds of any legitimate criticism and strike at the very root of the administration of justice.

People who are familiar with the administration of the Court would know how impossible the allegations were, but among people who are not so familiar with the Court's administration, such articles as those in question with their groundless insinuations may be very mischievous and pernicious. They contain grave misrepresentations of the proceedings and administration of this Court, and in my judgment we should be failing in our duty if we did not take such steps as are within our power to counteract the effect of them and to vindicate the Court and its authority.

In my judgment, therefore, the Rule should be made absolute against Tarit Kanti Biswas, the printer and publisher.

As regards the other four respondents, the evidence before us, apart from the question of its admissibility on the technical grounds which were put forward during the argument, raised a strong prima facie case that they were responsible for the publication of the newspaper containing the articles.

The "Amrita Bazar Patrika Co., Ltd.," was incorporated in 1908, the original Directors being Sisir Kumar Ghose, Moti Lal Ghose and Golap Lal Ghose, for the purpose of acquiring and taking over as a going concern the business of newspaper proprietors, printers and publishers then carried on, and in connection therewith the entire rights including the goodwill of the newspaper called the "Amrita Bazar Patrika," then being published from No. 2, Ananda Chatterjee's Lane, in Calcutta and all or any of the assets and liabilities of the proprietors of the business in connection therewith, and with a view thereto to enter into the agreement referred to in clause 3 of the Company's Articles of Association and to carry the same into effect with or without modification, with the usual subsidiary powers contained in the Memorandum of Association.

The Company gave the statutory notices that it intended to carry on its business at No. 2, Ananda Chatterjee's Lane, which was to be deemed its registered office: that it possessed a printing press at 19 and 20, Bagbazar Street, which the Company purchased from Golap Lal Ghose. On the 5th March 1917, the respondents Moti Lal Ghose, Golap Lal Ghose and Pijush Kanti Ghose were the Directors. Golap Lal Ghose and Mrinal Kanti Ghose were the Managers, and it further appeared that Golap Lal Ghose acted as Financial Manager and Mrinal Kanti Ghose as Secretary. The address of all the four was given No. 2, Ananda Chatterjee's Lane. The Articles of Association (which were put in evidence by M. K. Ghose) provided that the business of the Company should be managed by the Directors, who might pay all expenses incurred in getting up and registering the Company and might exercise all such powers as are not by the Indian Companies Act required to be exercised by the Company in general meeting subject to the provisions of the Act and of the Articles, etc.

It was obviously a family business converted into a Limited Company. This is confirmed by the list of persons holding shares exhibited in Mr. Hechle's affidavit. The evidence shows that the Directors and Managers were living at the premises which are the registered office of the Company; that the newspaper was published at those premises; that it was the duty of the Directors to manage the business; there was no editor disclosed or any other person occupying a position similar to that of an editor who would be responsible for the publication and the contents of the newspaper.

From these facts it would naturally be presumed that these respondents were actually engaged in the management of the newspaper and personally responsible for its publication. These Directors were occupying positions very different from those generally occupied by Directors of Companies, whose duties are restricted to attending periodical meetings and directing the policy of the Company.

Two of the respondents, Pijush Kanti Ghose and Mrinal Kanti Ghose, however, have put in affidavits and it appears therefrom that Mrinal Kanti Ghose was away from Calcutta on private business at the time when both the articles in question were published, and that Pijush Kanti Ghose was away on private business when the second article was published and under these circumstances I think that the prima facie case against them may be said to have been met, and I do not think that either of them should be held responsible in these proceedings for the publication and that consequently the Rule should be discharged as against them.

There are, therefore, two Directors left to manage the business of this newspaper at the material times, viz., Mati Lal Ghose and Golap Lal Ghose. Golap Lal Ghose in the evidence is described as Director and Manager and also as Financial Manager. Mrinal Kanti Ghose has sworn that Golap Lal Ghose has only to do with receipts and disbursements of the Company and keeps the accounts thereof.

Under these circumstances, I think the prima facie case made against him may be rebutted, and that he should not be held responsible in these proceedings for the publication of the articles, even though it is not alleged that he was not at the premises when the paper was published at the material times, and in my judgment the Rule should be discharged against him.

With regard to Moti Lal Ghose, the case is different: I think under the circumstances mentioned above, it may not unreasonably be presumed that he was responsible for or privy to the publication. It was the Director's duty to manage the business: such business was the publishing of the newspaper: one of the three Directors was away from Calcutta another, it is sworn, had only the financial matters to attend to; Moti Lal Ghose, therefore, is the only Director to whom the particular duty of editing and publishing the newspaper can be ascribed. As already mentioned, he was not in the position of an ordinary Director, who makes periodical visits to the Company's premises at stated and regular intervals. He was living on the premises where the paper was published and carrying on the family business which had been turned into a Limited Company.

There is no Editor disclosed, and even in the affidavits which have been put in by Pijush Kanti Ghose and Mrinal Kanti Ghose there is no specific reference to any editor. There is a general statement only, e. g., the affidavit by Pijush Kanti Ghose runs as follows:—"Neither I nor my co-Directors exercise any control whatever over the contents of the 'Amrita Bazar Patrika' newspaper, but we perform duties and exercise such powers as are mentioned and defined in the Articles of Association of the Limited Company." This is not a convincing statement. It is to be noted that it does not go the length of saying that the Directors did not know of, or were not privy to, the publication of the articles : if they did know of the inclusion of the articles and allowed the newspaper containing the articles to be published, they would be responsible.

Further the main duty of the Directors "mentioned and defined in the Articles of the Company" is to manage the business of the Company, which business is the publication of the newspaper. Under such circumstances the natural presumption would be, I think, that Moti Lal Ghose, either was responsible for, or at all events, was privy to the publication of the articles. But it has always been held that the jurisdiction which the Court has in respect of a contempt of Court should be exercised with great care and should only be exercised when the case is beyond all reasonable doubt, and this should especially be the case when the proceedings are at the instance of the Court itself. Moti Lal Ghose has made no affidavit nor has he offered any explanation of his position in connection with the newspaper at No. 2, Ananda Chatterjee's Lane, and if the above-mentioned presumption of responsibility were drawn against him, I do not think he could complain. But I think it is just possible that he may not have been responsible for or privy to the publication of the article. Although no reference is made to the existence of an editor, or some person in the position of an editor, it is still possible that there may be one who is not before the Court. For there is the general statement by Pijus Kanti Ghose and Mrinal Kanti Ghose made on oath that the Directors do not exercise control over the contents of the newspaper. Though this general statement be unsatisfactory, it cannot be wholly disregarded and it may be that the general control as to the contents of the newspaper may be vested in the hands of some person who occupies the position of an editor and who, for reasons known only to the respondents, has not been disclosed, and that consequently these articles may have been inserted without the responsibility or knowledge of Moti Lal Ghose. It is not likely that this was so, but still it is just possible and having regard to the principle that in proceedings of this nature we should be scrupulously careful to see that the case is clear beyond all reasonable doubt, I think Moti Lal Ghose should be given the benefit of that doubt and that the Rule should not be made absolute against him.

In view of the attitude taken up by the respondent Directors, we considered whether a Rule should not be issued against the Company itself with respect to which the considerations which affect the positions of the Directors would not arise : but in view of the fact that the object of the proceedings, viz., the vindication of the Court and its authority, had been obtained by the proceedings already instituted, we came to the conclusion that it was not necessary to take up the time of the Court by adding the Company, which would necessitate a further hearing.

Before leaving the case of the Directors, I desire to refer to the attitude adopted by them. If the articles were innocently intended, the natural thing would have been for the person responsible for them, or for their publication, to come forward and declare his intention : on the other hand, even if they were not innocently intended, one would have expected the person really responsible for their publication to come forward and take the responsibility on his own shoulders as was done in the case of two well-known newspapers in Calcutta on previous occasions.* They have chosen not to do so but to leave the printer and publisher to bear the brunt of the matter.

It is further to be noted that, although it was evident that the Court, by issuing the Rule, regarded this as a matter reflecting upon the Court, although it has been admitted that the second article contained statements of fact which were entirely untrue, and consequently that the insinuations based thereon were groundless, although two of the respondents' learned Counsel admitted that the article, to say the least of it, was a piece of great impertinence, not one word of apology has fallen from the Directors of the Company.

As regards the many technical points raised by learned Counsel as to the admission of the evidence, I do not think it is necessary for me to discuss them : none of them affect the case of the printer and publisher. I would only say that I have had the opportunity of reading Woodroffe, J.'s judgment, and I agree with him that most of them were trivial and unsubstantial. The Court was occupied over these proceedings for two and a half days: some part of the time no doubt was taken up by the discussion of the meaning of the articles, but the greater part was devoted to technical objections relating to the evidence and to the question as to who was really responsible for the publication. This fact shows how essential it is that the Legislature should provide for the registration of the editor or the person really responsible for the contents of a newspaper, so that the responsibility might be placed in the proper quarter without any difficulty or delay.

For the above-mentioned reasons, in my judgment, the Rule should be made absolute against Tarit Kanti Biswas, the Printer and Publisher, and it should be discharged as against the other respondents.

WOODROFFE, J.—The arguments before us (other than those of Mr. Norton for the printer) would suggest that the parties regarded this Rule as an opportunity for a legal tamasha, to use an expressive if not judicial term, rather than as a proceeding taken in the public interest to ascertain the true facts. Divorced from the lengthy and unnecessary discussions before us and freed of obstructive tactics the matter is really quite a simple one and might have been decided with but little delay. In that case too our judgments might have been short but the exuberant argument calls for some answer.

The parties before us are the directors, managers, and secretary of the "Amrita Bazar Patrika, Ltd.," a small Company, seemingly a family business, which owns and runs a Calcutta newspaper called the Amrita Bazar Patrika. With them is joined their printer. Ordinarily of course a newspaper has an editor but this Company or some of its members have been very secretive on the question whether there is an editor and if so, who he is. This is not the first time that the editor, if there be one, has been kept in the background. Perhaps it was considered that such secrecy was a convenient policy in defence of proceedings against the paper. Whatever be the object these persons have so far successfully concealed the fact and name of their editor. In the present proceedings it was not unreasonable for the Court to think that a summons to the directors, managers and secretary was sufficient without notice on the company and that the officers of the company would disclose the actual facts. What actually occurred at the trial has shown that no assistance can be expected from the company's officers and on a future occasion it will be necessary to consider whether the Court should not proceed against the company and its property. Such difficulties as we have experienced would be remedied were a law enacted compelling the registration of the names of editors just as the English Newspaper and Registration Act, 1881, (44 and 45 Vic. c. 6) compels the registration of the names of the proprietors. As the Court was not in possession of evidence whether there was an editor or who he was, proceedings were instituted against those persons who are empowered to manage the business of the company and against its printer.

On the 18th and 22 May last two articles appeared in this newspaper which seemed to the Chief Justice in consultation with the Judges of the Court to be a contempt. The writer circulates what he calls "mischievous rumours" and "unsavoury impressions" and makes statements which suggest that a litigant before the Court, namely, the Calcutta Improvement Trust, had been successfully intriguing to get a Bench of its choice to hear an appeal from the decision of Greaves, J. As such an intrigue could not succeed without the connivance of the Court, such a statement was scandalising the Court as it is technically called. Nextly, as the allegation of such an intrigue touches the party said to be carrying on this intrigue the tendency of such writing is to prejudice that party. Thirdly, the articles are calculated to interfere with the administration of justice, for the writer seeks to do, though in his own way, what he complains of in the case of the litigant Trust, namely, to influence the Chief Justice to form a Bench to hear the appeal in question, the Bench to be of such composition as the writer approved. As it seemed to the Court that prima facie a contempt had been committed, a Rule was served upon the persons mentioned to show cause: that is, they were given the opportunity of showing that the articles were not contemptuous, and if they were, that they were not responsible for them.

The parties whom we called for, have come before us. Leaving aside the printer, their substantial contention (to be extracted from the general mass of objections and arguments) is that the business in which they are each engaged has nothing to do with the control of the contents of the paper; that is, their work is not of an editorial character. One of them swears that he was out of Calcutta when both the articles were published and another that he was away from Calcutta when the second and chief article appeared. The printer says that he has no control of the contents of the paper and that he printed what was given him without first reading it. Two parties, Moti Lal Ghose and Golap Lal Ghose, have filed no answer at all. All parties have refused to state whether there is an editor, but they all contend that we are quite mistaken in supposing that the articles are a contempt. On the contrary we are told that the writer of these articles was a man who had perfect faith and confidence in the Chief Justice and Judges; that he was solicitous for their honour and was only seeking to protect and counsel the Court from and in respect of certain "mischievous rumours" and "unsavoury impressions." In short he was the Court's benefactor who thought that if it would but follow his advice as to how it should conduct its business, it would escape the "unsavoury" imputations which the public were making against it. This was said by some of the learned Counsel to be so clear that Mr. Jackson affirmed that no case could be found in all the reports which approached the present one in the weakness of the alleged contempt. If there be anything in all this, what should the parties have done? Each of the directors should have put in an affidavit exculpating themselves from being privy to the publication. The reading and examination of these affidavits might have taken half an hour. If these affidavits were accepted as truthful and the editor had been named, these parties other than the printer would have been discharged within about half an hour of their appearance before us instead of, as now, after a protracted argument for three days. We should have then expected that the parties would have named and produced their editor, the more particularly that the articles for which he would have been responsible are alleged to be of a wholly innocuous character, and their author to be one who cherishes the honour of this Court and would be its adviser and protector. But strange to say, this man of alleged good and disinterested motives is not named or produced. What had he or the parties to fear assuming that their argument as to the meaning of the articles is correct. Can it be said that notwithstanding such excellent intentions he was yet afraid that we might deal with him unjustly? If so, the writer's professions of his perfect faith and confidence in the Court are a pretence. If he had come here and had explained what notwithstanding the form of his expression he actually meant; if he had come here and said (as has been suggested by others in his absence) that he gave no credence to these rumours, that he personally made no suggestion against the Court, which in fact he was seeking to counsel and protect: if, I say, he had satisfied the Court of his innocence, then he too would have been discharged, and necessarily with him the printer. As a fact, the position taken up before us is "we refuse you all information. Prove what you can against us." Such affidavits as have been put in show that they have been elaborately drawn so as to keep out information. If, as in my opinion, there is a case made out, calling for an answer, it is obvious that the non-disclosure and non-production of the editor or writer leads to the inference that he or they are withheld because upon a true construction of the articles they do in fact constitute a contempt and that there is no reality in the argument which would have us hold that there was no contempt at all. If so, why all this secrecy and technical objections as to jurisdiction, procedure, nature of contempt, evidence and so forth?

It is first objected that we have no jurisdiction and if we have and if there was a contempt, the affidavits issued with the Rule do not make any case calling for an answer, and if it did call for an answer on the assumption that the articles constituted a contempt, they are not a contempt in fact, and lastly, if they do constitute a contempt, two of the parties were not in Calcutta at the time of the publication of one or both of the articles.

As regards jurisdiction a number of stale objections were taken. It is not necessary to go into the history and nature of contempt. It is too late now to contend that we have no other jurisdiction than that conferred by the Indian Penal Code or that in exercising this jurisdiction we are judges in our own cause. The jurisdiction has been approved many years ago by, amongst other Judges, their Lordships of the Privy Council. The second observation applies to all cases of contempt, and if it were given effect to, the Court would be deprived of its jurisdiction in every case. In the present one, the Court, as it is entitled to do, issued the Rule of its own motion. The Court, however, in such cases does not seek to vindicate any personal interests of the Judges but the general administration of justice, which is a public concern. It is not a fact that proceedings for contempts by scandalising the Court are obsolete, as Mr. Jackson argued. There are, moreover, special reasons in this country why this jurisdiction should be maintained, which I need not here develop. I may, however, refer in this connection to the observations in McLeod v. Aubyn (5). The point of jurisdiction has been laboured with a view to establish the point that the case before us should be decided as a criminal one. It is what is called a "criminal" contempt, but all proceedings whether in respect of civil or criminal contempts are, in my opinion, of a criminal nature in the sense that they are in penam, that is, when their object is to punish by fine or imprisonment. It does not, however, follow that the procedure in such cases is in all respects the same as an ordinary criminal case. It is obviously not. For if it were, the parties before us would have been in the dock and (not to speak of other matters) no affidavits could have been filed by or against them. In fact both the offences as also the jurisdiction and procedure under which it is tried are sui generis. As regards the question of proof, no case either civil or criminal should be tried and determined otherwise than according to the law governing it. It is not the fact that civil proceedings may be slack and criminal proceedings must be strict. A dereliction of duty may, of course, be of greater or less moment according to the nature of the proceeding in which it happens. As regards the standard of proof I would repeat what was held in Weston v. Peary Mohun Das (36), that there is but one rule of evidence which in India applies to both civil and criminal trials and that is contained in the definition of "proved" and "disproved" in section 3 of the Evidence Act. Whether the case is civil or criminal, a fact is only proved or disproved if it comes within the terms of that section. It may be conceded that the case against the persons before us must be proved strictly, which means according to law. That charge is that the two sets of parties before us, namely, printer and publisher of the newspaper "Amrita Bazar Patrika" and the directors and manager of the "Amrita Bazar Patrika, Ltd.," committed a contempt of Court by publishing and being privy to the publication of the articles of the 18th and 22nd May set out in the affidavit of the Registrar. The first question is whether these articles constitute a contempt of Court, and then if so, who, if any, of the parties before us are responsible for it. Learned Counsel who appeared for the various parties have offered different arguments as to the construction of the articles. The actual facts which are undisputed are that some cases were instituted against the Calcutta Improvement Trust on the original side of this Court before Greaves, J., which failed, that learned Judge holding that the Calcutta Improvement Act gave the Trustees a power to acquire land by way of recoupment. Another case against the same Trust came up for hearing on appeal from the Mofussil. Previous to the hearing by this latter Bench on the appellate side of the Court an application was made by Counsel for the Trust to the Chief Justice for the transfer of the case from the last mentioned Bench on the ground that Mookerjee, J., was a landowner (36) 23 Ind. Cas. 25; 40 C. 598; 18 C. W. N. 185.

and, therefore, personally interested. That application was refused, on the ground that the learned Judge would himself determine whether the circumstances were such that he should hear the case or not. The objection was not repeated before the learned Judge himself and the case was then heard on the appellate side of the Court by Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ., who held that the Trustees had no such powers. After that there was then an appeal to the Privy Council by the Trust against the decision of Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ., and an appeal by the parties suing the Trust against the decision of Greaves, J., to this Court hearing appeals from the original side. The Judges who had been previously taking such appeals were the Chief Justice and myself. On the 18th May 1917, the first of the articles appeared. Its salient points are these:—It alleges the existence of a "mischievous rumour which should be contradicted." The writer does not himself contradict the rumour but gives it further currency. That rumour was stated to be that an attempt was being made by or on behalf of the Calcutta Improvement Trust "to get up" and "secure" a Bench after its "own heart" to deal with the appeal from the decision of Greaves, J., so that that Bench might act "as a counterpoise" to the Bench of Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ. Expressing confidence in the Judges the writer says that he does not think that any official of the Trust "can go so far."

The Benches of this Court are appointed by the Chief Justice, it may be, in some cases, after consultation with the Judges. It is of course plain that a litigant could not "get up" or "secure" a Bench of his own "choice" and after his own heart except with the complicity of the Chief Justice or Judges. Of this the writer of the articles is well aware, for he says that he is "sure the interest of every rate-payer is safe in the hands of the Hon'ble Judges," and he "does not think that any official of the Trust can go so far." As I have said, the original side appeals were then being heard by a Bench of two Judges, namely, the Chief Justice and myself. A hearing of original side appeals by two Judges is not a convenient one nor in conformity with old practice, but it has been in existence for several years since Sir Lawrence

Jenkins' time owing to the great bulk of work and the shortage of Judges to deal with it. It is not convenient, because it is advisable that there should be a third Judge to turn the scale in cases of difference of opinion. As the appeals under consideration involved a question of great public interest and might involve a reference to a Full Bench, the Chief Justice with my concurrence determined to appoint a third Judge to meet the possible case of a difference of opinion and a practically infructuous hearing. A third Judge has been added to the usual Bench of two Judges on previous occasions. The third Judge added was Chitty, J., the next senior Judge to myself excluding Mookerjee, J., who had tried the Improvement appeal which raised the same question as that which the appellate Court hearing the appeal from Greaves, J.'s decision had to determine. Before the constitution of the Bench was actually published, the second article of the 22nd May appeared. That article is based on a number of misstatements. It wrongly assumes that there was an Appellate Bench constituted to hear "appeals against the awards of the Improvement Trust." It wrongly states that this supposed Bench was composed of Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ. It then wrongly states that this Bench had latterly come to be presided over by the Chief Justice and myself. It then says that the "withdrawal" of Mookerjee, J., (which is not true) had "given rise to rather unsavoury impressions in the public mind" since this supposed "withdrawal" and supposed reconstitution of the Bench followed "close upon the heels of his judgment" in the case I have mentioned. The suggestion involved in these alleged impressions is of course that Mookerjee, J., who is supposed to have had charge of Improvement Trust cases, was "withdrawn" because he had decided against the Trust. He could not himself "withdraw" of his own motion, nor can any one else but the Chief Justice who appoints the Benches. But why should he be so "withdrawn?" The first article suggests the reason, namely, that the Improvement Trust was endeavouring to get up and secure a Bench after its own heart as a counterpoise to the decision of Mookerjee and

In the matter of AMRITA BAZAR PATRIKA.

Cuming, JJ. Then it says, "something like consternation prevails on account of the proposed new constitution of the Appellate Bench," that is, by the substitution of the Chief Justice and myself for Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ., the "withdrawal" of Mookerjee, J., which had given rise to rather "unsavoury impressions," the addition of Chitty, J., and the non-selection of any Indian Judge. It suggests that the presence of one or more of these was necessary because of their knowledge of local conditions. I may here observe that the printer sought to prove good faith by, amongst others, the allegation that it was well known that the Trust objected to their case being tried by any Indian Judges. The point before the Court in the Trust cases was a pure question of law equally well triable by either an English or Indian Judge, unless we accept Mr. Jackson's strange argument (from which Mr. C. R. Dass dissented) that that Judge is best qualified to try such cases who is interested therein by reason of his possession of land in Calcutta. Reading this second article in connection with the first, the inference to be drawn from it, in the absence of any explanation from its writer, is that the alleged machinations of the Trust to secure a Bench "according to somebody's choice" had succeeded and that the Bench which was to hear the appeal from the decision of Greaves, J., was packed. Of course, there is no question but that if this was the suggestion, there has been a gross contempt of Court. Mr. Norton who appeared on behalf of the printer and publisher contended that the two articles should not be read together. There is no substance in this. But he frankly conceded that if the two articles be read together then they were capable of the above-mentioned interpretation, though he did not admit that that was meant, and suggested that the writer did not understand the meaning of the word "unsavoury." But how can we say that when the writer and editor are not before us?

Mr. Jackson's argument lends support, though perhaps unconsciously, to the construction I give to these articles. For he has endeavoured to re-construct what he called the atmosphere in which they were written with a view to show that the writer acted in the public interest and in good faith. But when a person has written nothing which is prima facie an offence, a plea of good faith is unnecessary. It is only relevant on the assumption that the articles do on their face appear to be contemptuous. It is then said that the writer was only repeating rumours to which he himself did not give credence. One cannot escape either contempt or libel merely by alleging that there was a rumour. This is a common way in which libels are spread. The existence of a rumour, if there was one in fact, is no justification in itself for its repetition. Moreover, the writer associates himself with these alleged public suspicions. Thus he says, "now what neither the public nor ourselves can understand", and so forth. And in further dealing with the matter he refers to a contention which the Chief Justice will not "care to advance."

Then it is said that the writer was merely stating the existence of these "unsavoury impressions in the public mind" in the interest of the Court so that they might be contradicted. It is said that he has more than once expressed his perfect faith and confidence in the Chief Justice and Judges. That is so. It is an obvious question to ask why, if the writer meant no offence but was only acting for the Court's good, he was not brought forward. What had he to fear? Will it be suggested that the fear is that nevertheless the Court might deal with him unjustly? If so, this is, as I have said, the strongest argument against the sincerity of his professions of faith and confidence in the Judges. In my opinion, it is not possible to accept an argument that the writer meant no offence and was merely acting in protection of the Court from unsavoury public impressions, when he is not even named much less brought forward. Moreover, the article itself does not, in the absence of any explanation from him, support this view. It states certain alleged rumours. It misstates the facts which are supposed to be the cause of these rumours. It does not contradict these rumours and say and show that there is nothing in them. It on the contrary gives them circulation. The writer associates himself with those who are said to entertain these alleged unsavoury impressions. He writes in a way open to the inference that the alleged manoeuvres of the Trust had succeeded. It may be that these expressions of faith and confidence and so forth were inserted, to use an expressive phrase of Counsel, for the "protestation" of the writer. It is possible that if the editor or writer had appeared before us, he might have succeeded in showing that, however apparently unfavourable to him the language of these articles is, yet in fact no offence was intended. But he is not produced and we must give them what seems to us their natural meaning. It has been held that even where the writer knew that proceedings were still pending, the fact that he did not desire or intend to prejudice the case is immaterial (except as to the extent of his punishment) if the Court be satisfied that such was the obvious and necessary result of his words. Daw v. Eley (37), Martindale, In re (38) and Townshend (Marquis), In re (39). In the absence of the editor or writer, I can only and do infer the intent from a consideration of the natural meaning of the words used and the impression which I believe they would convey to the ordinary reader of them.

In the present case the articles not only scandalise the Court but are otherwise a contempt. For it is a contempt to prejudice or attempt to prejudice a litigant and to interfere with the course of justice. Here the Trust is a litigant in this Court and it is suggested that it has been attempting to influence the course of justice by trying to "get up" a Bench of its "choice", of which allegation there is no proof whatever. Nextly, the writer of the article himself seeks to control the formation of the Benches in his own way by putting forward alleged unsavoury impressions in the public mind based on a number of wholly unfounded statements, adding that as soon as the Chief Justice understands the supposed public feeling in this matter, his Lordship would form a Bench of a nature which the writer approved. In my opinion, the articles do constitute a contempt of Court.

I now pass to the question as to which, if any, of the parties before us are responsible for it. Mr. Norton for the printer and publisher Tarit Kanti Biswas has conceded that if we hold that there is a contempt, then his client is liable though he pleads for mitigation of punishment—a matter with which I later deal. This liability is obvious, because scienter is attributable both to printer and editor. Neither can escape liability by alleging that he did not know that the contemptuous words had been inserted in his newspaper. Cheshire v. Strauss (40), Rex v. Parke (41), Rex v. Davies (42), Jones, Ex parte (43). As regards the others, the affidavit of Mr. Hechle the Registrar shows that the paper is, according to the imprint, printed and published at the Patrika Press, 19 and 20, Bagbazar Street, and issued by the Patrika Post Office, Calcutta. This Patrika Press works for the "Amrita Bazar Patrika Company, Ltd.", which was incorporated with the object amongst others of carrying on the business of newspaper proprietors by printing and publishing newspapers and taking over the rights in the previously existing Amrita Bazar Patrika newspaper. The registered office of the company is No. 2 Ananda Chatterjee's Lane, Calcutta. A certified copy of the annual summary shows that Moti Lal Ghose, Golap Lal Ghose and Pijus Kanti Ghose are directors and Golap Lal Ghose above mentioned and Mrinal Kanti Ghose are managers. It will be observed that all these persons are named Ghose and they all give the same address, which happens also to be that of the registered office of the company.

The total number of shares taken up is 766. Of these only 16 were issued for cash, probably for the expenses of incorporation, and 750 for a consideration other than cash. These shares of Rs. 100 each are held by 15 persons. The Ghose directors and managers hold 369 shares, three other persons of the name of Ghose hold 224 shares. There are four lady proprietors holding 112 shares and against the name of the first the father's name is given as Moti Lal Ghose. It is not clear from the summary whether the latter stands in the same relation to the other three ladies. There is one person of the name of Datta who holds 51 shares. The addresses of all these persons (the ladies and N. G. Datta included) is given as No. 2, Ananda Chatterjee's Lane, showing that this is a place of residence as well as being the registered office of the company. It is obvious on this evidence that these persons are related, that they live at the same address which is the registered office, and that the company is merely a small family business incorporated.

All the persons cited except Mrinal Ghose are directors. The latter is described as manager (with Golap Lal Ghose) and also as secretary. That Pijus Ghose and Mrinal Ghose are director and manager respectively, is also admitted in their affidavits. As regards Moti Lal Ghose and Golap Lal Ghose who have filed no affidavits, a number of technical, and in my opinion trivial, objections have been taken. The first objection taken by Mr. C. R. Das is that there is no proof that they are directors, notwithstanding that their co-director and secretary have sworn that they are, and they have themselves declined to give any information on any point to the Court. The argument is based on the contention that the certified copy of the summary filed on the 9th May 1917 of share capital and shares, etc., as they stood on the 5th March 1917, purporting to be signed by Golap Lal Ghose as financial manager, was not admissible. Mrinal Ghose's affidavit states that Golap Ghose is a director and financial manager, but Mr. C. R. Das contended that this is not admissible against him nor (it must follow) against Moti Lal Ghose. It is not necessary to go into this last objection, for I think that the summary was a public record of a private document, of which a certified copy is admissible [Evidence Act, sections 74, 75, 65 (e)]. It has been argued that "record" in section 74, clause 2, refers only to the case where the public office itself makes a copy, that is, record of a private document, and keeps it. If it does, it is certainly a public record. But "record" does not merely mean this. The word record also means a collection of documents. Section 74 (2) refers to private documents made by private persons and kept as a record in public offices to which the public have generally access. If this were not so, how could the public get such documents? The originals being in the custody of a public office the latter would not part with them, and not being a public document no certified copy could be given.

The next objection is that if the certified copy is admissible, there is no proof of the signature of Golap Ghose. Assuming that the mere production of a certified copy is not such proof where proof is necessary, it is not necessary here. Such certified copy is proof that some person giving the name of Golap Lal Ghose and describing himself as financial manager of the company signed such document. As that document was accepted by the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, it is common sense to assume that he was satisfied that it was a return by the financial manager of the company. The objection, therefore, in substance is that the Golap Lal Ghose who purports to sign this document is not or at any rate has not been shown to be the identical Golap Lal Ghose for whom Mr. C. R. Das has pleaded before us. It is admitted that the objection is technical. That is true, but we must see if the alleged technicalities are sound and we must give as much play to common sense as the law permits. The Rule was served on Moti Lal Ghose and Golap Lal Ghose as directors of the company. These are the persons whom we wished to see, not anybody else. The persons so served come here. If they were not the persons described in the summons they need not have come here. They can only be heard in these proceedings on the supposition that they are what the Rule states them to be. It is not open to anybody and everybody to come and show cause against this Rule. Mr. C. R. Das's title to be heard at all is dependent on the assumption that he represents the person described in the Rule. The unreal nature of the objection is enhanced by the fact that the secretary of the company has sworn in these proceedings that Golap Ghose and Moti Lal Ghose are Directors. If it be, as contended, that we cannot refer to this affidavit when dealing with the case of Golap Ghose and Moti Lal Ghose (a matter I do not decide), this does not make the taking of such an objection any the more sensible. Objections should, even when legal, have some relation to reality.

The third legal objection is that assuming that the return is proof of the state of affairs on the 5th March 1917 and shows that these two persons were Directors on that date, it does not follow that they were Directors when the Rule was issued on the 30th May, 1917. It is to be observed, firstly, that apart from any presumption of continuance, the summary was filed on the 9th May, only three weeks before the issue of the Rule, which was not likely to be done had there been any change between the 5th March and that date. Further under section 57 of the Indian Companies Act VII of 1913 changes of directorship are required to be notified by the Company, and had there been any change, it would have appeared in the affidavit of Mr. Hechle, the Registrar, as the result of his recent enquiry in the matter. Nor it is likely that the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies would issue to an enquirer a certified copy of a return which had been changed. This objection is as unreal as the rest. I have no doubt whatever that Moti Lal Ghose and Golap Ghose are Directors apart from the affidavit of the Secretary of the Company who states that they are in fact such.

According to the Articles of Association produced with the affidavit of Mrinal Ghose, the business of the Company is to be managed by the Directors, that business being according to the Memorandum of Association the carrying on of the Amrita Bazar Patrika newspaper. But here again with further luxury of objection it is protested that we cannot look at the Articles of Association of the Company of which these two persons are Directors and which have been actually produced by the Secretary of the Company with his affidavit. It is sufficient to say that the affidavit of the Rule states who are Directors; the nature of the Company and the facts proved indicate that its business must be carried on by them; and the provisions of this article are the same as and are indeed copied from section 75 of Schedule I, Table A of Act VII of 1913, the provisions of which, unless otherwise arranged, apply to all Companies. The table of the earlier Act is on this point substantially the same. It has been, therefore, proved as against the parties named as Directors that they are such.

The question whether persons in the position of Directors are responsible must depend on the facts of each case. In In re Judd (20) the directors of Judd & Co. used to print and deliver a newspaper to another Company who published the same. They did not, it was held, sell or deliver, a fact which would relieve them from even civil liability. In Ex parte Green (24) the manager of a Limited Company which disseminated paragraphs amounting to contempt of Court was held responsible. In that case the manager denied that he had seen the matter before it was published and that, in general, it was no part of his duty to supervise the reading out of news. The affidavit of the party taking proceedings spoke only to his "information and belief" as to the responsibility of the manager. This was held to be, prima facie, sufficient and on the letters and affidavit, he was held guilty. In one case it was held that the individual liability had not been directly established and in another that it had been. Doubtless, in the case of an ordinary large newspaper Company where the Directors meet together once a week to transact business in the Board rooms, the ordinary inference might be (in the absence of direct evidence) that they were not conscious of the publication of a particular article, for in the case supposed they would have appointed an editor.

The facts in the present case are very different and peculiar. In Governor of Bengal v. Moti Lal (4) a statement resting on information and belief that Moti Lal Ghose was editor was ruled out as not being legal evidence and the fact that Moti Lal Ghose did not in that proceeding deny the allegation was held immaterial. No disclosure was made as to whether there was an editor or who he was. Ordinarily, of course, a newspaper has an editor, but we have no legal evidence of that in this case and the affidavits filed by one of the Directors and the Secretary, and the printer, do not even mention the existence of such a person. The Company, as I have said, appears to be a small family affair composed, in the main, of Ghoses, whose address is that of the registered office of the Company which is also given as that of some ladies, one of whom at least is the daughter of Moti Lal Ghose. Three of these Ghoses including Moti Lal Ghose are Directors and another Ghose is Secretary. The Articles of Association direct, not that the business shall be under their control, but that they shall manage the business. That business is shown to be the carrying on of the newspaper Amrita Bazar Patrika, which is "now being published from No. 2, Ananda Chatterjee's Lane." Some one must see to the literary part of this business. In the absence of evidence as to there being a separate editor, prima facie the Directors who are authorised to manage the business are the persons who do so in all its aspects. They must have authorised the circulation of the paper. Had there been reliable evidence that there was an editor who was some person other than the defendants even though his name was not disclosed, prima facie the responsibility for the articles would have lain with the editor, though of course the Directors or other persons would also have been liable who were shown to be privy to the publication. Here there is evidence that the management of this business is entrusted to the Directors. That business includes every department of it, financial, literary and so forth, for there is nothing to prevent one or other of the Directors being also editor. This is the inference which arises on the facts here proved. If the Directors have in fact delegated any of these functions to some other person, it is for them to show that fact. I am of opinion, therefore, that the affidavit in support of the motion disclosed a prima facie case against the Directors as such and calling for an answer from them. As regards the permanent Manager and Secretary, I deal later. Having regard to the facts proved I need not further consider their case here.

But assuming that the affidavit accompanying the Rules does make a case calling for an answer, the matter does not rest there. Pijus Kanti Ghose has put in an affidavit and has sworn that neither he nor his co-director exercise any control over the contents of the newspaper and exercise "only such powers as are mentioned in the article." Who does control the paper is not stated. A similar statement is made in the affidavit of Mrinal Kanti Ghose. Nextly, the affidavit of Pijus Kanti Ghose swears that he was away from Calcutta on the date of the second or chief article. Therefore he is shown not to have been directly privy to it. Similarly, the affidavit of Mrinal Kanti Ghose states that he exercises no control over the contents of the newspaper, that his duties are to keep the minutes, registers and records of the Company, to issue notices and to make returns. Further, he swears that he was absent from Calcutta on both the dates when the articles appeared. He has, therefore, also met the case against him. There remains the cases of Golap Lal Ghose and Moti Lal Ghose, neither of whom have given any answer. The above-mentioned affidavits state that Golap Lal Ghose also has no control over the contents of the paper, and this statement is supported by the fact that the return the latter made to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies shows that he is Financial Manager. Ordinarily, therefore, he would attend to this side of the business and probably to this only. There lastly remains amongst the directors the case of Moti Lal Ghose. He also has not filed an affidavit and we are told less about him than any one else. The affidavits offered to us seem to be of what is called a "tricky" character. The wording is in the present tense. As was pointed out by my brother Fletcher, they might not support a prosecution. They do not deal with the condition of things when the articles were published. They do not state precisely what powers the Directors do exercise, or whether there is an editor. The statement that the Directors have no control over the contents does not show that they were not aware of the articles before they were published and circulated by their authority. Had there been no affidavits, I would have been disposed to adjudge that Moti Lal Ghose was in contempt; even after the reading of these affidavits, my mind has been in doubt, for the affidavits are deliberately drawn to keep all information from the Court and are, as above stated, otherwise unsatisfactory. Moti Lal Ghose has filed no affidavit. Though it has been objected by Counsel (Mr. C. R. Das) for one of the parties that we cannot consider as against any particular party the affidavits offered in defence by other parties (a point I need not consider), still I am unwilling as against Moti Lal Ghose to rest the case on any such technicality. I cannot shut my eyes to the fact that there are three sworn statements before us that neither the Directors, Financial Manager, Secretary or Printer have control over the contents of the newspaper. As I said, I have had my doubts as to the sufficiency of this statement. Moti Lal Ghose (whose case I regard with strong suspicion) is, however, entitled to the benefit of them. As some one must have such control, we must now assume after the reading of these affidavits that there is an unnamed editor who is not before the Court. I conclude then that the affidavits offered in reply to the Court's Rule are such that it should be discharged against the parties to these proceedings other than the printer and publisher, Tarit Kanti Biswas. We might, without all this complex argument, have come to the same conclusion within half an hour if all the parties had sworn that they were not responsible and disclosed the name of the editor who, subject to any explanation he might make, was liable. As already stated, it is conceded by his Counsel, Mr. Norton, that the printer is liable provided that the articles constitute a contempt. He has, however, argued that the case is not of so serious a character as to call for the exercise of this jurisdiction, and if it is, he lastly pleads that the position of his client should excite our pity and that we should discharge him without penalty.

In my opinion, the case does call for the exercise of this jurisdiction by reason of the articles scandalizing the Court having a tendency to prejudice the parties and to interfere with the administration of justice. As regards the action to be taken and penalty to be awarded, each case must depend on its own facts.

As regards the second point, I cannot yield to the suggestion that merely because a man is a printer and publisher he should escape scot-free. Did we hold this, it would be open, as in this case, for the parties to exculpate themselves by affidavit and to suppress all information as to who was in fact responsible. The printer might also be put up to refuse such information and be told, "it is all right, say you are only the printer and ask for pity and then we shall all be excused." Our jurisdiction would thus become largely illusory. I do not say that there may not be cases where the Court will deal leniently with the printer, but this is not one. In the first place, he states in his affidavit that it was known to him that the matter dealt with by these articles was the subject of concern to the public "who were watching with deep interest" the action of the Chief Justice in constituting the Court to hear the appeal from the decision of Greaves, J. He then says that the articles were published to give expression to public feeling in Calcutta and that the "articles were published by myself in good faith and in the public interest." This statement is, on its face, in conflict with paragraph 3 of his affidavit, where he says that he did not read the articles before publication nor did he consider at any time prior to their publication their meaning or purport. If this be true, how could they have been published by him in good faith and in the public interest? According to his own statement, he was aware that the subject was creating public interest, and he is prepared to swear that the articles were published to give expression to public feeling. If there were, in fact, such an interest, there was the greater necessity for caution on his part in seeing what he published with reference to it. His statement that in fact he did not see the articles before publication is weakened by the attempted justification that they were published "by myself in good faith and in the public interest," though it is of course possible that this inconsistency was due to bad drafting.

As, however, the affidavits are in general astutely drawn, we cannot well assume this. He denies that the articles are a contempt and seeks to justify himself. In this he fails. Nextly, he says that he has no control over the contents of the newspaper and that they were handed to him for publication in the usual course of his business. He carefully refrains from saying who gave him the articles, whether it was the editor who did so, or who he was. His Counsel justifies this refusal on the ground of loyalty to his employers. If he esteems that loyalty above his public duty to inform the Court who committed this alleged offence, he cannot complain that we do not show him indulgence. He joins with the others in refusing information and if, apart from such refusal, he is liable, he must take the consequence. The Courts in England have held [as for example in American Exchange in Europe v. Gillig (34)] that this refusal by the printer to give up the name of the editor is a matter which will weigh with it in determining whether a penalty shall be awarded against the printer or not. Mr. Norton has complained (I thought with that moderation which rarely goes with real zeal) that his client should be left to suffer because his employers have not produced their editor. In the Englishman Contempt case [Re Banks and Fenwick (3)] Captain Fenwick, the editor of that paper, came forward to bear the brunt of what was in reality done by him or his order, on which the Rule was withdrawn against the printer. Sir Barnes Peacock observed that in doing that Captain Fenwick had only done "that which every honourable gentleman who fills the editor's chair would do, in not allowing a publisher of a paper to take the consequence of articles written and published by his order by not coming forward to avow the authorship." This was also done by Babu Surendra Nath Banerjee in the well-known Bengalee Contempt case [Surendra Nath Banerjee v. Chief Justice of Bengal (32)], where Garth, C. J., said that Babu Surendra Nath Banerjee had properly done his best to protect his printer. There is no disposition, however, upon the part of any one in this case to adopt this proper and honourable course. But the printer himself does not deny that he is ignorant who the editor is and he himself through his Counsel declines to give his name. There are some cases in which one might sympathise with the printer, but here he has not only declined to give up the editor's name, but has otherwise associated himself with the other parties in the case and has sought to justify both himself and them in what I hold to be a contempt, and he must, therefore, take the consequences such as they are. In, however, adjudging the penalty I have not wholly left out of count the fact that he is the printer, for, had the editor been found guilty of contempt, he would, in my opinion, have been subject to much heavier punishment.

The defence to these proceedings except as to the construction of the articles—a legitimate argument—was ill advised and a waste of time. If the Directors, Managers and Secretary were not personally responsible for the contempt, they had only to frankly state the facts on affidavit and disclose who was so liable. The printer similarly, who in law is liable, might have stated the persons from whom he got the articles he printed and thus have personally freed himself from all further action against him. We should then on the supposed facts have only had to deal with the person primarily liable, namely, the editor. He could, then, if he had wished, have personally put forward the plea here advanced that the articles have been misunderstood and that on the contrary he was moved by a desire to act in the interest of the Court and to protect it from "mischievous" and "unsavoury" rumours. If this were the fact, he would have nothing to fear from Judges who, according to the argument before us, had the complete confidence of the writer of these articles. Even if these articles were ill expressed and capable of a bad interpretation, their effect might have been negatived by the public avowal of their author that for him they had no such meaning. These proceedings might have thus been disposed of within an hour or less, with the result that either all parties might have been freed of penalty or if penalty were awarded it would have fallen on the party primarily liable, namely, the editor. On the contrary, all the parties before us have adopted a hostile attitude to the Court, have refused all information, concealed the name of the editor and put forward every technical objection to defeat an enquiry which has thus been prolonged over three days with unnecessary delay and expense to the public and the parties concerned. For this the parties, by the course they have adopted, are responsible. This course further has strengthened the inference which is to be drawn from the natural language of the articles in the absence of explanation from their writer. It is not in such absence to be supposed that the intentions of the writer and editor of these articles were as innocent as the argument before us suggests and that the name of one who was, it is said, only seeking to protect this Court from unsavoury rumours and to give it what he thought good advice, should be kept concealed. It is absurd also to suppose that the party responsible would himself, if innocent, carefully avoid his presence in the Court, which it is said he honoured and was seeking (however ill-considered his language might be) to counsel and protect.

I, therefore, concur in the order which the Chief Justice has made.

MOOKERJEE, J.—On the 18th May 1917 the following paragraph appeared in the editorial columns of the Amrita Bazar Patrika:—

“There is a mischievous rumour afloat which should be contradicted. It is stated that a vigorous attempt is being made to get up a Bench to consider the appeal on the judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves in connection with the acquisition of surplus land by the Calcutta Improvement Trust according to somebody's choice. We do not believe that it is possible for any one, far less the Chairman of the Trust, to secure a Bench after his own heart, as a counterpoise to the Mookerjee and Cuming Bench. We are sure the interest of every rate-prayer is safe in the hands of the Hon'ble Judges and we do not think that any official of the Trust can go so far.”

Four days later, on the 22nd May, the following paragraph appeared in the editorial columns of the same paper:—

“Something like consternation prevails on account of the proposed new constitution of the Appellate Bench of the Calcutta High Court, before which appeals against the awards of the Improvement Trust are to be heard. It is known to the reader how this Bench was originally composed of Sir Asutosh Mookerjee and the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Cuming, and how latterly it has come to be presided over by the Hon'ble the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Woodroffe. Rumour has it that for purposes of hearing Improvement Trust Appeals, the Bench is going to be strengthened by the appointment of Mr. Justice Chitty. Now, what neither the public nor ourselves can understand is this special arrangement for such a Special Bench. If it is contended that two Hon'ble Judges of the highest Court in the land are not competent to decide in appeal cases in which the Improvement Trust is concerned—a contention, however, which we do not believe the Chief Justice will care to advance—why should there be a Special Bench of three and not a Full Bench of five, on which at least two Indian Judges could find seats? As a matter of fact as land-owners in Calcutta are mostly Indians, and as Indian Judges are likely to know more of conditions, practices, etc., prevailing here, it is but meet that the Appellate Bench in the present circumstances should be so composed as to associate Indian Judges with their European colleagues. The withdrawal of Sir Asutosh has given rise to rather unsavoury impressions in the public mind, since this proposed arrangement is to follow close upon the heels of his judgment in the case of The Improvement Trust v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (14). Be that as it may, we have perfect faith in the present Chief Justice and believe that as soon as Sir Lancelot Sanderson understands the public feeling in the matter, His Lordship will either form a Full Bench or at least associate an experienced Indian Judge with himself for the hearing of Improvement Trust Appeals.”

On the 30th May 1917 the Chief Justice, after previous consultation with the other members of the Court, directed the issue of a Rule on Tarit Kanti Biswas (the printer and publisher of the Amrita Bazar Patrika), Moti Lal Ghose, Golap Lal Ghose and Pijush Kanti Ghose, Directors, and Golap Lal Ghose and Mrinal Kanti Ghose, Managers, of the Company called the Amrita Bazar Patrika, Ltd., to show cause why they should not be committed or otherwise dealt with according to law for contempt of Court committed by the publication of the two articles mentioned concerning the High Court and the Chief Justice in his administration thereof. The materials whereon the Rule was issued were contained in two affidavits sworn by the Registrar on the Original Side and the Registrar on the Appellate Side as to the actual publication of the articles in the paper and the position the opposite parties occupied in relation to the paper and the Company, which were its proprietors. The opposite parties have appeared in Court in person and have been represented by Counsel; three of them, Tarit Kanti Biswas, Pijus Kanti Ghose and Mrinal Kanti Ghose, have filed affidavits which will require examination hereafter. On the elaborate arguments addressed to the Court, the following points emerge for consideration, namely, first, what is the true meaning of the two articles mentioned; do they constitute contempt of Court; secondly, if the articles constitute contempt of Court, has this Court jurisdiction to punish the offenders summarily, and should such authority, if any, be exercised in the present instance; thirdly, what is the true nature of the present proceedings; is it civil or criminal in character, and fourthly, have the opposite parties or any of them been proved to be so connected with the publication of the articles as to render them liable to punishment for contempt of Court.

As regards the first question, namely, the true meaning of the two articles set out above, there can, in my opinion, be little room for doubt, notwithstanding the able and ingenious arguments, which have been addressed to us. The obvious course to pursue in a case of this description is to read the offending articles as they stand and to attach to the words used their natural meaning without the assistance of a laborious commentary. The general rule of interpretation cannot be formulated in more precise terms, because objectionable language may take an infinite variety of forms; this much is clear that it is incumbent on the Court, in all cases, to consider the general tone of the writing. The meaning and intent are to be determined by a fair interpretation of the language used and are matters of law for the Court as to whether or not they constitute contempt. Disclaimer on the part of the publisher as to any intentional disrespect to the Court is consequently not a sufficient defence, when the purpose and meaning of the writing is obviously of a contrary import. No doubt, if the language is fairly capable of an innocent interpretation, the Court will not be astute to read into it a sinister import. [Governor of Bengal v. Moti Lal (4), Townshend (Marquis), In re (39), Martindale, In re (38) and Daw v. Eley (37)]. But, if the intent is fairly clear, liability to punishment for contempt of Court cannot be successfully evaded by the use of a transparent artifice. Tested from this point of view, how do these articles stand? The first article makes reference to an alleged rumour which the writer describes as mischievous and worthy of contradiction. The rumour is stated to have been to the effect that a vigorous attempt was being made to get a Bench constituted according to the choice of somebody to hear the appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves in a suit in connection with the acquisition of surplus land by the Calcutta Improvement Trust. The writer expresses his belief that no official of the Trust, far less the Chairman, could go far as to make an attempt of this character, and that it was not possible for anybody to secure a Bench after his own heart as a counterpoise to what is called the Mookerjee and Cuming Bench. The writer concludes with an assurance that the interest of every citizen is safe in the hands of the Judges. If this article had stood by itself, it might perhaps have been argued with seeming plausibility that, however much open to reproach on the ground of indiscretion and impropriety, the writer had no intention to commit a contempt of Court. But the second article, which is written in a very different tone, shows convincingly the true intent and purpose of the first article. The question, however, was raised before us, whether the two articles should be read together. It was contended that they should not be so read, as there was nothing to indicate that they had emanated from the same individual. In my opinion, the two articles may legitimately be read together to determine their scope and purpose, even though they were proved not to have been written by the same person. They obviously relate to the same topic and were published in the editorial columns of the same newspaper, there was a very brief interval of time between them and the first obviously led up to the second, though not expressly mentioned therein. The first article has, I think, a sinister import, and conveys the insinuation that one of the litigant parties in the appeals about to be heard was endeavouring to have a Bench constituted according to its choice. There is no room for controversy that imputation of this character constitutes a contempt of Court. Contempt by speech or writing may be by scandalising the Court itself or by abusing parties to actions or by prejudicing mankind in favour of or against a party before the cause is heard; as has been said, there is nothing of more pernicious consequence than to prejudice the minds of the public against persons concerned as parties in causes before they are finally heard and thus to attempt to obstruct or interfere with the due course of justice. [St. James Evening Post case (35), Cann v. Cann (44), American Exchange in Europe v. Gillig (34), R. v. Gray (31), Re v. Davies (42) and McLeod v. St. Aubyn (5)]. But, from my point of view, it is really immaterial whether the two articles are considered separately or are regarded as component parts of one aggregate, for even if there were any real doubt as to the purpose of the first, there can be no serious dispute as to the meaning of the second.

The second article, when carefully analysed, may be resolved into the following propositions:—

(1). That the Bench of the Calcutta High Court before which appeals against the awards of the Improvement Trust are to be heard was originally composed of myself and Mr. Justice Cuming.

(2). That I had been withdrawn from this Bench, and that the withdrawal had given rise to rather unsavoury impressions in the public mind, as it followed close upon the heels of the judgment in the case of Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta v. Chandra Kanta Ghosh (14), to which I was a party.

(3). That this Appellate Bench had latterly come to be presided over by the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Woodroffe.

(4). That there was a rumour that the Appellate Bench so constituted was about to be strengthened by the appointment of Mr. Justice Chitty and this proposed new constitution of the Appellate Bench had created something like consternation.

(44) (1754) 2 Ves. (Sen.) 520; 2 Dick. 795; 28 E. R. 382.

(5). That if the Bench was to be composed of more than two Judges, it should consist of not three but five Judges, of whom two at least should be Indian Judges, because land-owners in Calcutta (who were principally affected by the operations of the Calcutta Improvement Trust) were Indians, and Indian Judges were likely to know more of conditions and practices prevailing here than European Judges.

These statements constitute a tissue of falsehoods, and, to my mind, one of the most conspicuous features of this trial is that not only has not even the semblance of an attempt been made to establish the truth of these allegations, it has actually been conceded that they are vitiated by a fundamental error. No Bench composed of myself and Mr. Justice Cuming had, at any time, been constituted to hear appeals against what are inaccurately termed the awards of the Improvement Trust. The plain truth is that last year, when Mr. Justice Cuming and myself were in charge of the Bench which had to take cases of what is called the First group of the Districts, the appeal of the Calcutta Improvement Trust against Chandra Kanta Ghosh came up before us, inasmuch as the appeal had been preferred from the decision of a Subordinate Judge of the 24-Pergannahs. The appeal belonged to our group, was heard by us in due course, and was dismissed. We had at no time been constituted a Special Bench to hear appeals in all cases in which the Improvement Trust was concerned, and there is no foundation whatever for the first proposition that the Appellate Bench, before which appeals against the awards of the Improvement Trust were to be heard, was originally composed of myself and Mr. Justice Cuming. Consequently, the suggestion contained in the second proposition that I had been withdrawn from the Appellate Bench, which in fact had never been constituted, is equally groundless. Here I may observe that as under section 108, sub-section 2 of the Government of India Act, 1915, the duty devolves upon the Chief Justice to determine, from time to time, what Judges of the Court are to constitute the several Division Courts, the second proposition necessarily involves an imputation against the Chief Justice that he had withdrawn me from the Appellate Bench he had previously constituted, composed of myself and Mr. Justice Cuming, to hear appeals in cases in which the Calcutta Improvement Trust was concerned. There is clearly the further imputation that the Chief Justice had taken this action by reason of my judgment in the appeal preferred by the Improvement Trust against Chandra Kanta Ghosh. As the Appellate Bench had never in fact been constituted in the manner stated by the writer, the charge that I had been withdrawn therefrom for the reason assigned was evidently baseless. The third proposition, namely, that the Appellate Bench had been constituted of the Chief Justice himself and Mr. Justice Woodroffe, in supersession of the previously constituted Bench composed of myself and Mr. Justice Cuming, was consequently equally unfounded; as a matter of fact, long before the constitution of the Bench to hear the appeals from the Original Side, Mr. Justice Cuming had ceased to be a member of this Court. The fourth proposition refers to the rumour that the Appellate Bench presided over by the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Woodroffe was about to be strengthened by the appointment of Mr. Justice Chitty, and that something like consternation prevailed on account of the proposed new constitution of the Bench. As I read the article, the consternation was due, not so much to the fact that the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Woodroffe composed the Bench, as to the fact that the Bench was about to be strengthened by the appointment of Mr. Justice Chitty. This implies most unmistakably that a just decision, that is, a decision just in the estimate of this impartial writer, could not be expected from a Bench so constituted. If language has any meaning, this was clearly a libel on Mr. Justice Chitty, if not also upon the other two members of the Bench. The fifth proposition involves a libel upon Indian Judges but in the opposite direction. No doubt, it is very artfully suggested that Indian Judges should be on the Bench to hear this class of cases, because they are likely to know more of conditions and practices prevailing here than European Judges. But, as was well known, the matter in controversy in the appeals had not the remotest connection with a knowledge of local conditions and practices. The point in issue was a dry question of law as to the true interpretation of a legislative enactment. The writer, however, unmistakably insinuates that land-owners in Calcutta (who are principally affected by the operations of the Trust) are mostly Indians, and Indian Judges on the Bench might be expected to give a decision in their favour. I do not appreciate the distinction between an insinuation that a European Judge is likely to decide in favour of the executive, because he is a European, and an insinuation that an Indian Judge is likely to decide in favour of Indian land-owners, because he is an Indian. To my mind, the two statements are equally reprehensible as libels on the Judges of this Court. I cannot, in this connection, pass by in silence the observations of Mr. Jackson as to the constitution of the Bench which actually heard the appeals from the judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves. The Court is called upon, in the present Rule, to consider the true character of the allegations contained in the two articles published in the Amrita Bazar Patrika, and to determine whether they do or do not constitute a contempt of Court. We have no concern whatever with the question, whether the Chief Justice, who alone is charged with the duty to constitute Division Courts, has in this particular instance exercised wisely or otherwise the discretion vested in him by law. The remarks of Mr. Jackson on this subject were absolutely irrelevant for the determination of the question before the Court, and exhibited, I feel constrained with regret to hold, an unusual and unwarranted lapse from that decorum which we are accustomed to associate with the transaction of public business in a Court of Justice. I cannot but deem it significant that the other Counsel engaged in the case expressly dissociated themselves with special care from the comments made by Mr. Jackson in this behalf. Here I may observe that in the judgment just delivered by the Chief Justice he has taken pains to explain the reasons which moved him to constitute the Bench as he did; Mr. Justice Woodroffe also has touched on the subject and expressed his opinion thereon. But, for obvious reasons, which need not be dilated upon, I must respectfully decline to examine the question. Besides, the exercise of discretion by the Chief Justice in the matter of constitution of a Division Court to hear the appeals against the judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves, is, under the law, not liable to be reviewed by this Bench and is not subject to our approbation or disapprobation. I desire, consequently, to guard myself most carefully from the discussion of a question, which, notwithstanding what fell from Mr. Jackson, does not, in my judgment, properly arise even as a side-issue in these proceedings; such a discussion is not likely to advance any useful purpose, because it cannot be of real assistance in the solution of the very narrow issue comprised in the scope of our enquiry, namely. the real import of the two articles published in the Amrita Bazar Patrika and whether, on a fair interpretation, they did or did not constitute a contempt of this Court; upon that matter, which alone it is our function to decide, I feel no reasonable doubt. I desire, however, to repudiate most emphatically the astonishing assertion made by Mr. Jackson that landless Judges, as he called them, were, merely because they were landless, less competent and less trustworthy as interpreters of a statutory enactment than Judges of any other class, and that Indian Judges, because they might possibly be proprietors of land, were for this purpose more capable and reliable as expounders of the law than their European colleagues. But to return to the two articles: it seems to me indisputably plain that the implication of the second article, whether taken along with or independently of the first, is that, at the instance of persons interested in the Calcutta Improvement Trust, the Chief Justice has constituted a Special Bench to ensure a decision favourable to the Trust in the appeals against the judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves. This brings me to the question which is the crux of the whole matter, namely, whether an imputation of this character constitutes a contempt of Court.

It is not necessary for our present purpose to give an exhaustive enumeration of acts which amount to contempts of Court. It is sufficient to state that scandalous attacks upon Judges, calculated to cause an obstruction to public justice, do constitute such contempts. Blackstone, in a celebrated passage of his Commentaries (Volume IV, page 285) which will be found quoted in Governor of Bengal v. Moti Lal (4), specifies, in his description of contempts of Court, contempts which arise "by speaking or writing contemptuously of the Court or Judges, acting in their judicial capacity and which demonstrate a gross want of that regard and respect, which, when once Courts of Justice are deprived of, their authority, so necessary for the good order of the kingdom, is entirely lost amongst the people." Sir John Wilmot, C. J., in Re v. Almon (45) justifies a similar view in a passage which may be usefully recalled here:—

"By our constitution, the King is the fountain of every species of justice, which is administered in this kingdom. The King is de jure to distribute justice to all his subjects; and, because he cannot do it himself to all persons, he delegates his power to his Judges, who have the custody and guard of the King's oath, and sit in the seat of the King 'concerning his justice.' The arraignment of the justice of the Judges, is arraigning the King's justice; it is an impeachment of his wisdom and goodness in the choice of his Judges, and excites in the minds of the people a general dissatisfaction with all judicial determinations, and indisposes their minds to obey them; and whenever men's allegiance to the laws is so fundamentally shaken, it is the most fatal and most dangerous obstruction of justice, and, in my opinion, calls out for a more rapid and immediate redress than any other obstruction whatsoever; not for the sake of the Judges, as private individuals, but because they are the channels by which the King's justice is conveyed to the people. To be impartial, and to be universally thought so, are both absolutely necessary for the giving justice that free, open, and uninterrupted current, which it has, for many ages found all over this kingdom, and which so eminently distinguishes and exalts it above all nations upon the earth."

It is needless to multiply early instances of the application of this doctrine, which will be found collected (45) (1765) Wilm. 243 at p. 255; 97 E. R. 94.

in 3 Howell State Trials, 1074-1080. and 8 Howell State Trials, 50. Amongst modern instances reference may be made to the observations In the matter of a Special Reference from the Bahama Islands (10), Reg. v. Staffordshire County Court Judge (46), Reg. v. Gray (31), Rex v. Davies (42), Surendra Nath Banerjee v. Chief Justice of Bengal (32), Sashi Bhushan Sarbadhicary, In the matter of (47), Taylor's case (1), and Banks and Fenwick, In the matter of (3). The principle deducible from these cases is that punishment is inflicted for attacks of this character upon Judges, not with a view to protect either the Court as a whole or the individual Judges of the Court from a repetition of the attack, but with a view to protect the public, and specially those who, either voluntarily or by compulsion, are subject to the jurisdiction of the Court, from the mischief they will incur, if the authority of the Tribunal be undermined or impaired. The contention has been advanced, however, that if this be the true reason for the rule, it is necessary to establish, as a matter of fact, that the actual effect of the publication has been an obstruction to public justice, and, that, in the absence of such proof, it cannot be held that there has been a contempt of Court. In support of this position, reliance has been placed upon the decisions in R. v. Freeman's Journal (15) and King v. Dolan (16). The cases mentioned do not support this proposition, which is, on the other hand, negatived by the decisions in Reg. v. Gray (31), Hunt v. Clarke (18), In re Pall Mall Gazette Jones Flower (48), Grimwade v. Cheque Bank Ltd. (49), these show that a contempt of Court is committed by libellous attacks on a Judge for what he did judicially, if such attacks are likely, or tend in any way, to interfere with the due administration of justice. As Elliott, J., well puts it in People v. Stapleton (50), it would be as reasonable to require proof of actual hinderance in the administration of justice by reason of a libellous attack on a Judge in his judicial capacity as for a person who has made a violent assault on another to plead that he has committed no offence because he has not succeeded to overcome his victim. It is not only important that the trial of causes shall be impartial and that the decisions of the Courts shall be just; it is equally important that causes shall be tried and judgments rendered without bias, prejudice or improper influence of any kind. He who scandalises the Court or a Judge in relation to a particular litigation, commits an offence, not merely against the rights of those litigants, but also against public justice: In the matter of a Special Reference of the Bahama Islands (10). It is a public wrong, a crime against the State, to undertake, by libel or slander on the Judges, to impair confidence in the administration of justice. That a party indulges in calumny of the gravest character, and, consequently, does not succeed in his endeavour to shake the confidence of the public in the Court, surely does not alter the quality of his act or make it any the less reprehensible. From this standpoint, it is immaterial whether the attack on the Judge is with reference to a cause about to be tried, or actually under trial, or recently adjudged; in each instance, the tendency is to poison the fountain of justice, to create distrust, and to destroy the confidence of the people in the Courts, which are of prime importance to them in the protection of their rights and liberties: Reg. v. Gray (31). Upon my construction of the second article, read with or without reference to the first, I hold that it undoubtedly constitutes a contempt of Court.

As regards the second question, there is no room for controversy that this Court has power to punish summarily a contempt of Court committed by the publication of a libel on the Court or on the Judges, when the Court is not sitting. By clause 1 of the Letters Patent of 1862 and clause 2 of the Letters Patent of 1865, the Court was constituted as a Court of Record; and, as a superior Court of Record, it has summary jurisdiction to punish for contempt of Court. This was affirmed in respect of the Superior Courts at Westminster by Wilmut, C. J., in Rex v. Almon (45) and his opinion has been quoted with approval in a long line of decisions, the most notable whereof is, perhaps, the judgment of Cockburn, C. J., in Reg. v. Lefroy (51). Mr. Jackson contended that this view will not stand scrutiny and may properly be described as "law taken for granted." In this connection, he invited our attention to a celebrated passage from the judgment of Lord Denman, L. C. J., in Reg. v. O'Connell (12): "A large portion of that legal opinion, which has passed current for law, falls within the description of 'law taken for granted'; if a statistical table of legal propositions should be drawn out, and the first column headed 'law by Statute,' and the second, 'law by decision,' a third column, under the heading of 'law taken for granted' would comprise as much matter as both the others combined. But when, in pursuit of truth, we are obliged to investigate the grounds of the law, it is plain, and has often been proved by recent experience, that the mere statement and re-statement of a doctrine,—the mere repetition of the santilena of lawyers, cannot make it law unless it can be traced to some competent authority, and if it be irreconcilable to some clear legal principle." But the question remains, whether the proposition that a Superior Court of Record has power to punish summarily for contempt of Court, can appropriately be treated as "law taken for granted." I am not unmindful that a learned writer (Mr. John Charles Fox in the Law Quarterly Review, Volume XXIV, pages 184, 266) has maintained the view that the opinion expressed by Wilmut, C. J., in Reg. v. Almon (45) is not historically accurate. Let us assume that this criticism is well established on the ancient authorities and that while originally the superior Courts of Common Law had jurisdiction to punish only disobedience to the King's writ summarily by fine and imprisonment upon attachment, they had jurisdiction only on indictment or bill to punish contempts in facto and other obstructions to the administration of justice, such as libelling the Court or the Judge. Let us assume also that the development of the summary jurisdiction to punish contempts has been of slow growth and that the earliest recorded case of libel or slander on the Court or a Judge by a stranger unconnected with the service of process, which was punished summarily by attachment, cannot be traced to a period anterior to 1720. Surely, this cannot but be regarded now as a matter of other than antiquarian interest. We have abundant "competent authority" "not irreconcilable to clear legal principles," in support of the view that a Superior Court of Record does possess the power to punish summarily contempts of Court of the description now before us. Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J., maintained and applied this principle in Abdool and Mahtab, In re (33) and Re William Tayler (1), which, upon a full review of the authorities, was re-affirmed in Governor of Bengal v. Moti Lal (4). We have also the pronouncement of the Judicial Committee to the same effect in Mc Dermott v. Judges of British Guiana (52), where they confirmed the view indicated in the earlier cases of Smith v. Sierra Leone (Justices of) (53) and Rainy v. Sierra Leone (Justices of) (54). As regards the power of Indian High Courts in a case of this character, we have two decisions by the Judicial Committee, namely, Surendra Nath Banerjee v. Chief Justice of Bengal (32) and Sashi Bhushan Sarbadhicary, In the matter of (47). In the former case it was ruled that the High Court had power to punish in a summary manner, by fine or imprisonment or both, a contempt of Court, which in that case, as in the present, consisted in the publication out of Court of a libel on one or more of the Judges. In the latter case, the Judicial Committee held that there was no doubt that the publication of the libel in question constituted a contempt of Court, which might have been dealt with by the High Court in a summary manner, by fine or imprisonment or both. In my opinion, these repeated pronouncements by the Judicial Committee conclude the matter, so far as "competent authority" is concerned, and no useful purpose can be served by an examination of the historical basis of the opinion expressed by Wilmut, C. J.

In the matter of AMRITA BAZAR PATRIKA.

That the possession of this power by a Judicial Tribunal (however cautiously and sparingly it may have to be exercised) is not also "irreconcilable to clear legal principle" is beyond serious controversy; indeed, the summary power to commit and punish for contempts tending to obstruct or degrade the administration of justice, is essential to the preservation of order in judicial proceedings, to the maintenance of the authority of a Court and to the enforcement of its judgments; it is a necessary incident and attribute of a superior Court, without which it could no more exist than without a Judge. [See the cases reviewed in Governor of Bengal v. Mati Lal (4).] It was argued, however, on the authority of the decision of the Judicial Committee in McLeod v. St. Aubyn (5) that committals for contempt of Court by scandalising the Court itself had become obsolete in England. It may be observed here parenthetically that this very decision of the Judicial Committee is an authority for the proposition that, as laid down by Lord Hardwicke in St. James Evening Post case (35), the publication of scandalous matter in respect of the Court itself is a contempt and that power summarily to commit for contempt of Court is considered necessary for the proper administration of justice. I do not read the statement, that committals for contempt of Court by scandalising the Court itself had become obsolete in England, as destructive of the authority of the earlier decisions on the subject. Indeed, the proposition taken literally seems to go too far and it is significant that, in the very next year, proceedings were taken in England for contempt of Court in the case of Reg. v. Gray (31). There can, I think, be no doubt that where the circumstances clearly demand action of this description, the Court will not hesitate to exercise its undoubted power to punish on summary process the contempt of scandalising it and thereby attempting to interfere with the due course of justice. No doubt, as Lord Morris observes in McLeod v. St. Aubyn (5), Courts may be satisfied sometimes to leave to public opinion attacks or comments derogatory or scandalous to them. But I do not accede to the argument that it is invariably prudent for the Court to assume an attitude of indifference or to institute regular criminal proceedings against the offender. In this connection, reference may appropriately be made to the weighty words of Kent, C. J., in Yates v. Lansing (55): "Whenever we subject the established Courts of the land to the degradation of private prosecution, we subdue their importance and destroy their authority. Instead of being venerable before the public, they become contemptible; and we thereby embolden the licentious to trample upon everything sacred in society and to overthrow those institutions which have hitherto been deemed the best guardians of civil liberty." [See also the very pertinent observations of Marshall, J., in State v. Shepherd (56) quoted in Governor of Bengal v. Moti Lal (4).] In my opinion this Court has undoubted jurisdiction to deal summarily with persons who have committed contempt by scandalous attack upon the Judges, and such power should be exercised in the present instance. When I hold this, I do not overlook the assertion of the printer and publisher that the articles before us were published by him in good faith and in the public interest. The sincerity of this plea appears to me to be open to the gravest doubt. But, even on the assumption that this allegation is literally true, I desire to add that, while I do not under-rate in the least degree the importance of the liberty of the press, I cannot hold it expedient that any class of the community should be privileged to attack the Courts as to interfere with the rights of litigants or to embarrass the administration of justice. The publishers of newspapers have the right, but no higher right than others, to bring to public notice the conduct of Courts, and provided the publications are true and fair in spirit, there is no law to restrain the freest expression of the disapprobation that any person may entertain of what is done in or by the Courts. But liberty of the press must not be confounded with license or abuse of that liberty, and though it may be true that where the liberty of the press and freedom of public comments end, there tyranny begins, it is at least equally true that where vituperation begins, there the liberty of the press ends; and the inherent power of the Superior Courts of the Record to punish any publication calculated to interfere with the administration of justice cannot be deemed in any way restricted by considerations of the kind urged by the printer and publisher.

As regards the third question, namely, what is the true nature of the present proceedings, is it civil or criminal in character, the matter is of practical importance from the point of view of the mode of trial to be adopted. In the case of Governor of Bengal v. Moti Lal (4) I had occasion to examine fully the distinction between a criminal and a civil contempt, which is of a fundamental character.

A criminal contempt is conduct that is directed against the dignity and authority of the Court. A civil contempt, on the other hand, is failure to do something ordered to be done by a Court in a civil action for the benefit of the opposing party therein. Consequently, in the case of a criminal contempt, the proceeding is for punishment of an act committed against the majesty of the law, and, as the primary purpose of the punishment is the vindication of the public authority, the proceeding conforms, as nearly as possible, to proceedings in criminal cases. In the case of a civil contempt, on the other hand, the proceeding, in its initial stages at least, when the purpose is merely to secure compliance with a judicial order made for the benefit of a litigant, may be deemed instituted at the instance of the party interested and thus to possess a civil character. But, here also refusal to obey the order of the Court may render it necessary for the Court to adopt punitive measures against the person who has defied its authority: at that stage, at least, the proceedings may assume a criminal character. In this manner, the dividing line between acts which constitute criminal and others which constitute civil contempt may become indistinct in those cases, where the two gradually merge into each other: see St. James Evening Post case (35), Scott v. Scott (57), Lechmere Charlton's case (58), Wallace, In re (59), Davies, In re (8), Onslow's and Whalley's case (60) and Skipworth's case (61). A careful scrutiny of the cases in the books shows, however, that much confusion exists in the reported decisions as to whether or not contempt proceedings are civil or criminal, where the contempt is committed in relation to a civil proceeding, and, it is consequently desirable to investigate briefly the true test for differentiation.

The power to punish for contempt is inherent in the very nature and purpose of Courts of Justice. It subserves at once a double purpose, namely, as an aid to protect the dignity and authority of the tribunal and also as an aid in the enforcement of civil remedies. The power may consequently be exercised in civil or criminal cases or independently of both, and either solely for the preservation of the authority of the Court or in aid of the rights of the litigant or for both these purposes combined. By reason of this two-fold attribute, proceedings in contempt may be regarded as anomalous in their nature, possessed of characteristics which render them more or less difficult of ready or definite classification in the realm of judicial power. Hence, such proceedings have sometimes been styled sui generis. That they are largely of a criminal nature, inasmuch as the Court has power to convict and punish for the wrong committed, cannot be disputed, and yet it must be recognised that, in some respects, by reason of the end subserved, they partake of the nature of a civil remedy. This dual characteristic has given rise to many controversies, specially when questions have arisen as to right of appeal from the order passed [as in Reg. v. Barnard, (62), Barnard v. Ford (63), Helmere v. Smith (64), A. G. v. Kissane (65), Hunt v. Clark (18), Reg. v. Staffordshire County Court Judge (46), O'Shea v. O'Shea (6), Bessette Conkey Co. (66), Christensen Engineering Co., In the matter of (67), Worden v. Searls (68), Gompers v. Buck's Stove Co. (69)], the applicability of rules of evidence [Celluloid Co. v. Chrolithian Co. (70), Bullock Co. v. Westinghouse Co. (71), Ex parte Gould (72)], the finality of the judgment [Fischer v. Hayes (73) and Re Mullee (74)], liability for payment of costs, Cornish, In re (75), Martindale, In re (38) and Day v. Longhurst (76)], right of trial by Jury, [Tinsely v. Anderson (77), Re Debs (78) and Eilenbecker v. District Court of Plymouth County, Iowa (79)] and other like matters. The difficulty in each case is to determine when a particular proceeding assumes the criminal rather than the civil aspect, or when of both, and, if the latter, which feature must control. The question has been repeatedly and elaborately discussed by the Supreme Court of the United States: Kearney Ex parte (80), New Orleans v. New York Mail Steamship Co. (81), Chiles, In re (82), Hayes v. Fischer (83), Warden v. Searls (67), Ex. Debs In re (78), O'Neal v. United States (84), Christensen Engineering Co. In the matter of (67) Bessette v. Conkey Co. (66), Doyle v. London Guarantee Co. (85) and Gompers v. Buck's Stove Co. (69). The view deducible from these decisions is in general agreement with what is indicated above, namely, a proceeding to punish for contempt has the essential qualities of a criminal proceeding, whether the proceeding is initiated primarily to vindicate the Court's authority or solely as a coercive and a remedial measure to enforce the rights of the litigant or for both these purposes combined. This must be so, since it necessarily results from the nature of the power to punish for contempt that whatever the primary purpose of such a proceeding may be, it is always within the power of the Court to make its judgment, in part, at least, punitive or vindictory in character; in other words, where the sole purpose sought by initiating the proceeding is to secure the coercive and remedial action of the Court against a party, the Court may nevertheless, in its discretion, add a punishment, by way of fine or imprisonment, for the failure of the person in contempt to obey its mandate, I think it undeniable that the proceeding must be regarded from its inception to the point of judgment as of a criminal nature, or, at least potentially so, since until the judgment is given, it cannot be known what its character will be. It is the judgment, therefore, which must eventually in any case determine the character of the proceeding, and this leads to the conclusion that logically, perhaps, instead of characterising contempt proceedings as criminal or remedial according to circumstances, it is contempt judgments that should be so classified. In any view, there is no room for controversy that where, as here, the contempt consists in an attack upon the Court, the proceedings, instituted to vindicate its dignity, are of criminal nature, even though the attack has been made in connection with civil suits or appeals, either actually decided or pending or about to be taken up for disposal [Governor of Bengal v. Moti Lal (4)].

As regards the fourth question, we have to consider separately the liability of each of the five persons who have been called upon to show cause why they should not be committed for contempt of Court. Tarit Kanti Biswas has filed an affidavit to the effect that he is the printer and publisher of the Amrita Bazar Patrika and that in such capacity he printed and published the articles mentioned. He states, however, that he exercises no control whatever over the contents of the newspaper, that he did not read the articles when they were handed over to him for publication, that he did not consider, at any time prior to publication, their meaning or purport, that he inserted them in the paper in the usual course of business, that he acted bona fide and was not actuated by a disrespectful or other improper feeling or motives towards the Court or the Chief Justice, and that he did not intend to excite contempt or to reflect in any way upon the integrity or dignity of the Court or of the Chief Justice in his administration thereof. Notwithstanding this defence there can be no doubt as to the liability of the printer and publisher; for as Lord Morris observed in McLeod v. St. Aubyn (5), a printer and publisher intends to publish and so intending cannot plead as a justification that he did not know the contents. Indeed, this has been the settled law ever since the decision of Lord Hardwicke in St. James Evening Post case (35), which was followed by Lord Erskine in Jones, Ex parte (43), and by Stirling, J., in American Exchange in Europe v. Gillig (34), Cheshire v. Strauss (40), Rex v. Parke (41), Emmens v. Pottle (86), Rev. v. Davies (42), Daw v. Eley (37), Tichborne v. Tichborne (87), Cheltenham & Swansea Ry. Carriage and Waggon Co., In re (88) and Little v. Thomson (89). The Rule must consequently be made absolute against the printer and publisher. With regard to his allegation that he had no intention whatever to offend the dignity or integrity of the Court and that in reality he was helpless in the position he occupied as a servant of the Company, one cannot but feel that the value of such assurance is considerably discounted by the fact that he has given no information to the Court. I am not unmindful that as ruled In the matter of a Special Reference from the Bahama Islands (10), he was under no legal obligation to assist the Court in any way, and to disclose the name of the person primarily responsible for the articles; still his conduct serves to throw doubt in a considerable measure on the genuineness of his profession that he had no intention to prejudice the due course of administration of justice or to cast any reflection on the Judges of this Court. He must accordingly take the consequences of his act, and cannot reasonably urge that he has established a claim for specially considerate treatment. See the observations of Stirling J., in American Exchange in Europe v. Gillig (34).

As regards the other four defendants, it is necessary to state that they have not all taken up the same attitude in this matter. Counsel on behalf of Moti Lal Ghose declined to answer, as he was entitled to do, the question put by me, whether he was in reality one of the Directors of the Company as stated in the return of Golap Lal Ghose alleged to have been filed under section 32 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913. Pijush Kanti Ghose has filed an affidavit in which he admits that he is one of the Directors of the Company, but that neither he nor his co-directors exercise any control over the contents of the newspaper and perform such duties and exercise such powers only as are mentioned and defined in the Articles of Association. He further alleges that he was absent from Calcutta from the 21st May to the 4th June and was not here on the date when the second article appeared. Mrinal Kanti Ghose has filed a similar affidavit, in which he admits that he is the Secretary of the Company. He further alleges that Moti Lal Ghose, Gopal Lal Ghose and Pijush Kanti Ghose are Directors of the Company, that Golap Lal Ghose is also the Financial Manager, that neither he nor the Directors nor the Financial Manager exercises any control whatever over the contents of the paper and that the Directors perform such duties and exercise such powers only as are mentioned and defined in the Articles of Association (extracts wherefrom are appended to the affidavit). He enumerates also the duties of the Secretary and of the Financial manager, and finally adds that he was absent from Calcutta from the 4th May to the 22nd May and was not here on either of the two dates when the articles mentioned appeared. Golap Lal Ghose has not filed any affidavit, and on his behalf, Counsel has contended that there is no legal evidence whatever to connect him in any way with the publication of either article. This argument is based on three grounds, namely, first, that secondary evidence of the return alleged to have been filed under section 32 of the Indian Companies Act was not admissible; secondly, that even if secondary evidence were held admissible, evidence was requisite to prove that the original had been filed by Golap Lal Ghose who is Director and Financial Manager of the Company and has been called upon to show cause; and, thirdly, assuming but not admitting that he was a Manager on the 5th March 1917, as stated in the return, there is no evidence that he was Manager on either of the dates when the offending articles were published.

Before I deal with these objections and their effect upon the Rule, I may make the preliminary observation that the materials which were placed before the Court when the Rule was issued amply justified the action then taken, indeed, made it in a manner incumbent upon the Court to follow the course actually adopted. These materials showed that the Amrita Bazar Patrika was the property of a Company called the Amrita Bazar Patrika Limited, incorporated under the Indian Companies Act, 1882, on the 19th November 1908; that one of the objects for which the Company was established was to acquire and take over as a going concern the business of newspaper proprietors, printers and publishers then carried on in connection with the paper; that the registered office of the Company was at No. 2, Ananda Chatterjee's Lane, where the newspaper was published, and where many of the shareholders and Directors who were closely related to each other lived, and that on the 5th March 1917, the Directors and Managers were the persons mentioned in the return filed by the Secretary under the provisions of the Indian Companies Act. In these circumstances, there was a strong prima facie case against the defendants that they were connected with and responsible for the publication of the articles in question. But although these materials were sufficient to justify the issue of a Rule, on careful scrutiny and on examination of the allegations in the affidavits filed in answer to the Rule, I see no escape from the conclusion that an order cannot properly be made against any of the defendants other than the printer and publisher.

With reference to the legal objections just enumerated, I am not prepared to accede to the contention that secondary evidence of the returns in the custody of the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies is not admissible. Section 65, clause (e), of the Indian Evidence Act provides that secondary evidence may be given of the contents of a document when the original is a public document within the meaning of section 74. Section 74, sub-section 2, provides that public records kept in British India of private documents are public documents. The question consequently reduces to this, whether the returns in the custody of the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies constitute public records of private documents. The observation of Lord Blackburn in Sturla v. Freccia (27) is of no assistance in the solution of this question and does not show that a public record of a private document is limited to an entry made in a book by a public officer, which reproduces the contents of the document and thus constitutes a written memorial made by the public officer authorised by law to perform that function. The term "record" as appears from the Oxford Dictionary (Vol. VIII, page 266) has a more comprehensive meaning and includes a collection of documents. When, as in the case of the Indian Companies Act, the Legislature has provided that returns are to be lodged with a public officer, these returns, when transmitted to and filed by him, do constitute public records of private documents within the meaning of section 74, sub-section 2, although they are not copied out by the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies into a volume kept for the purpose; they are undoubtedly intended for reference and used by the public. But though this objection is of no avail, the second exception is well-founded; for although secondary evidence may be admissible, the party who produces the evidence is not relieved of his obligation to prove the execution of the document, just as if the original had been produced, unless the case is covered by section 90 of the Indian Evidence Act or the Legislature has expressly provided that the document or endorsement thereon is receivable in evidence without proof of execution, as, for example, in section 60 of the Indian Registration Act. Consequently, as against Moti Lal Ghose and Golap Lal Ghose there is no legal evidence to establish that the former is a Director and the latter a Manager of the Company. The statements made by Pijush Kanti Ghose and Mrinal Kanti Ghose, in the affidavits filed by them at the hearing, cannot fairly be used to the detriment of other defendants as the proceeding is in the nature of a criminal trial. Besides, as pointed out in the case of Governor of Bengal v. Moti Lal (4) on the authority of the decision in Reg. v. Stanger (11), supplementary evidence cannot be given so as to prejudice the position of the accused. To the same effect are the observations made by Wright, J., Hooley, In re, Hooley, Ex parte (89) when he was asked to grant leave to amend a notice of motion to commit a company for contempt of Court: "That is not the way in which the Court deals with matter of this kind affecting the liberty of the subject. Applicants must come with their machinery ready." The procedure should be at least equally strict and adherence to the forms of the law at least equally scrupulous, when the Court finds itself in the position of Prosecutor and Judge and an unexpected lacuna in the evidence transpires during the trial. The Court must act with great caution in strict conformity with the requirements of the law and avoid a perhaps not unnatural tendency to supplement the evidence [Martin v. Mackenzie (25)]. As regards the third legal objection, however, I am not convinced that there is any substance in the argument. Section 87 of the Indian Companies Act requires that notice of changes among the Directors or Managers shall be filed from time to time. The certified copy of the return furnished by the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies must, therefore, be presumed to embody the latest changes. Consequently, if the return had been duly proved, it would have furnished prima facie evidence of the names of the directors and managers on the day the copy was supplied. But this point is immaterial, as, in my opinion, there is no legal evidence to connect Moti Lal Ghose and Golap Lal Ghose with the publication of the articles.

There remains for examination the cases of Mrinal Kanti Ghose, and Pijush Kanti Ghose who admit that they are directors. But they assert in their respective affidavits that none of the directors nor the financial manager exercises any control whatever over the contents of the paper. There are no materials at the disposal of the Court sufficient to contradict these statements made on oath; consequently, the denial is, in the circumstances, a sufficient answer to the rule. I cannot but observe, however, that the further assertion in the affidavits of these two persons that the directors perform such duties and exercise such powers only as are mentioned and defined in the Articles of Association detracts to some extent at least from the value of the previous statement. The Articles of Association show that the business of the company is required to be managed by the directors, while the Memorandum of Association shows that the object for which the company was established was to acquire and take over as a going concern the business of newspaper proprietors, printers and publishers then carried on in connection with the "Amrita Bazar Patrika." Consequently, the Memorandum and Articles of Association taken together may imply that it was the duty of the directors to manage the publication of the paper, and from this point of view they might be held responsible for the publication of the articles mentioned. This inference might possibly be strengthened by the circumstance that the existence of an editor is not mentioned, not even so much as suggested, in these proceedings. But although the case may, in these circumstances, be one of strong suspicion, it is impossible to hold that, notwithstanding the categorical denial to the contrary, it has been established beyond doubt that the directors were responsible for, or connected with the actual publication of the two articles. We cannot possibly hold as a matter of law that the directors of a limited company which owns a newspaper are liable to be committed for contempt of Court on account of a libel published in the paper [Reg. v. Judd (20)]. The decision in Green, Ex parte, Robbins, In the matter of (24) cannot be treated as an authority for a general proposition of law that where a limited company disseminates amongst newspapers matter amounting to contempt of Court, their manager, merely because he was the manager, was liable to be committed. The decision rested, I think, on the facts admitted or established before the Court, which showed that the manager was in fact responsible for all the paragraphs sent out to newspapers. Nor can we apply to the case before us the presumption which at one time was applied in England as to the responsibility of the proprietor of a newspaper for libels published in his paper. The view that the proprietor of a newspaper was answerable, criminally as well as civilly, for the acts of his servants or agents in misconducting a newspaper, enunciated by Lord Kenyon in R. v. Walter (90), and re-stated by Lord Ellenborough, C. J., in R. v. White (91), and by Lord Tenterden, C. J., in R. v. Cutch (92), has long been obsolete in England [R. v. Holbrook (22)], and should unquestionably not be applied in this country in a case of the description now before us, even though it be held applicable to trials for defamation under the Indian Penal Code: Ramasami v. Lokanada (93) and Harisarvothama Rao v. Emperor (94). After anxious consideration of all the materials on the record, I have thus arrived at the conclusion that the Rule must be discharged also as against Mrinal Kanti Ghose and Pijush Kanti Ghose.

I cannot consider the result of this trial satisfactory from the vital point of view indicated by Lord Hardwicke in St. James Evening Post Case (35), namely, that there cannot be anything of greater consequence than to keep the streams of justice clear and pure so that parties may proceed with security both to themselves and their characters. The persons responsible for the grave contempt of Court which has been committed have not been brought to justice. This is not a matter for legitimate surprise as the Court has not the machinery at its disposal for the discovery of the offenders and the materials available from the public records have proved insufficient for the purpose. At the same time the offenders have preferred to keep themselves in the dark and have not adopted the eminently honourable course which was pursued in two other instances in this Court and which evoked the just commendation of Sir Barnes Peacock and Sir Richard Garth respectively: Banks and Fenwick In the matter of (3) and Surendranath Banerjee v. Chief Justice of Bengal (32). They have nothad the courage to come forward to avow their responsibility and either to justify their action or to express contrition for their misconduct. Even the directors of the company have contented themselves with a disavowal of their responsibility and have expressed no regret whatever for the articles published in a newspaper owned by the company. In these circumstances it is undoubtedly worthy of consideration whether legislative provision should not be made to compel registration of the name of the editor and proprietor of a newspaper precisely in the same way as that of the printer and publisher. (See 44 & 45 Vict. C. 60.) It may finally be observed that, on recurrence of a case of this character, the Court may find it necessary to proceed against the company, as has been done in some recent instances. No doubt, the view was maintained at one time that a corporation could not be held liable for contempt of Court, as by reason of its impersonal nature it could not be attached: Guilford v. Mills (95). But the weight of modern authority is apparently against this doctrine, and the view has been maintained that proceedings by way of contempt would lie against corporations as well as individuals: in the case of individuals, the process is by attachment of the person, followed by fine or imprisonment or both; in the case of corporations, the process is by fine followed by sequestration or distrain: R. v. Birmingham Gloucester Ry. Co., (96) London v. Lynn (97), Spokes v. Banbury Local Board (98). The decision of Wright, J., in Hooley, In re, Hooley, Ex parte (89), is seemingly an authority only for the proposition that a limited company cannot be committed to prison for contempt: it does not decide the question whether such a company may not be fined for contempt of Court and the fine recovered by distraint or sequestration. In the Courts of the United States, the liability of a corporation for contempt of Court has been affirmed by a large preponderance of authority: Bloomington Church v. Muscatine (99), West Jersey Co. v. Board of Public Works (100), U. S. v. Munpluss Ry. Co. (101), Re Westminster Realty Corporation (102), Union v. People (103), Stratton v. Merswether (104), Schreiber v. Garden (105), State v. Baltimore Ry. Co. (106). One of the most recent cases in which the question is examined as one of principle is that of Fiedler v. Banbrick Bros. (107), where, upon an elaborate review of earlier decisions, the conclusion was reached that corporations, though not liable to be imprisoned, were liable to be fined by way of punishment for contempt of Court. (See also Rapaljee on Contempts, section 48, and High on Injunctions, section 1460.) It is not necessary for me to decide finally on this occasion the liability of corporations to be punished for contempt of Court in their corporate capacity; but in view of the turn events have taken in the present proceedings it is desirable to point out that when a grave contempt of Court has been committed by a newspaper owned by a company, the immunity from punishment which the offenders may imagine they enjoy by reason of stolid silence is most probably of an illusory character.

My conclusion on the whole is that the Rule must be made absolute against the printer and publisher, but discharged against all the other defendants.

CHITTY, J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgments just delivered by my Lord the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Woodroffe, and I entirely agree with what they have said generally about the case, and the orders to be passed with regard to the several respondents. I wish, however, to state, with regard to Babu Moti Lal Ghose that I should have been disposed to hold him responsible for the articles in question, as one who has been proved to be a director of this company and who in that capacity has been called upon by this Court to show cause, and has shown none. As the majority of the Bench are in favour of giving him the benefit of the doubt, I do not desire to press my opinion further. I, therefore, concur in the order about to be passed.

Mr. Justice Fletcher, who is unavoidably absent to-day, desires me to say that he too was prepared to hold Babu Moti Lal Ghose responsible, but under the circumstances he also concurs in the order to be passed.

ORDER OF THE COURT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—Tarit Kanti Biswas! The members of the Court are unanimously of opinion that in printing and publishing the two articles in question in the Amrita Bazar Patrika newspaper you were guilty of a contempt of Court.

The serious nature of it has been referred to in the judgments which have been delivered, and it is not necessary, therefore, for me to recapitulate what has already been said.

In the earlier part of your affidavit you state that you did not read the articles when they were handed to you for publication and that you inserted them in the usual course of your business as printer and publisher.

Later, however, in your affidavit you proceeded to try and justify the publication of the articles by alleging that they were published by you in good faith and in the public interest, a position which we consider inconsistent with that of a man who puts forward the case that he printed and published the articles in ignorance of their contents.

We are all of opinion there was not the smallest justification for the publication of such untrue statements and unjustifiable imputations as were contained in the articles.

If the person responsible for the publication of these articles had come forward and had taken the responsibility upon himself, or if you had disclosed to the Court the person who was really responsible for the publication, which must have been within your knowledge, although you might not have known the actual writer of the article, it might have been possible for us to treat the offence in your case with such leniency as your learned Counsel prayed for.

The person really responsible, however, has not been disclosed but you, being the printer and publisher, whose identity could not be concealed and whose legal liability could not be denied, are left by your employers to bear the brunt of this matter.

We have taken all these matters into consideration. The contempt of Court, however, in our judgment was of such a nature that in the interest of the administration of justice it is impossible for us to pass it over without some penalty.

It is essential to vindicate the authority of the Court and to make it clear that articles such as those in question constituting a grave contempt of Court cannot be published with impunity.

Tarit Kanti Biswas! The judgment of the Court is that you Tarit Kanti Biswas do pay to the Accountant-General of this Court a fine of Rs. 300 before 4-30 P. M. to-day, and that you be detained until such hour, or until such time as the fine is paid; and if the fine is not paid as herein directed, you be lodged on the civil side of the Presidency Jail until the said fine is paid or until the further order of this Court.

Bombay District Police Act (Bom. Act IV of 1890), s. 43—District Magistrate, order by, under s. 43—Revision—High Court, power of interference of.

An order passed by a District Magistrate under section 43 of the Bombay District Police Act is an executive order and not the order of an inferior Criminal Court, and consequently cannot be interfered with by the High Court in revision even though it is ultra vires. [p. 397, col. 1.]

The aggrieved party has in such a case a remedy under sections 13 (2) and 50 of the Bombay District Police Act by petition to the Commissioner. [p. 397, col. 1.]

A District Magistrate has no jurisdiction to eject any person from property under section 43 of the Bombay District Police Act without first taking temporary possession himself and his order of ejection or exclusion can only operate for the period of his temporary possession. [p. 397, col. 1.]

Application for revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Larkana.

Mr. Lalchand Hassomal, for the Applicant.

Mr. E. Raymond, Public Prosecutor for Sind, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order made by the District Magistrate, Larkana, under section 43 of the Bombay District Police Act IV of 1890.

The applicant Dharmibai is or claims to be the widow of Bawa Jeramdas, the Bawa of a "Tikana" at Larkana. The Bawa died on the 25th March 1917 and the applicant remained in possession of the premises. Her possession was resented by certain persons who claim to represent the Hindu Panchayat of Larkana; and the District Magistrate, apprehending a disturbance, made orders first on the 6th July 1917 prohibiting her from entering the temple and again on the 18th July 1917 directing her to remove from the premises of the temple and the "Tikana".

A preliminary objection is raised to the jurisdiction of this Court to interfere with the order made by the District Magistrate, and this objection we must uphold.

It has been held in the case of Pandurang Shidrao, In re (1) that a District Magistrate acting under this chapter of the Bombay District Police Act is acting in his executive capacity and not as an inferior Criminal Court and that, therefore, his order is not subject to the revisional jurisdiction of a High Court. This ruling has been approved in the case of Imperator v. Jaro (2). That was a case under the Sind Frontier Regulation. But there, as here, the orders of the Magistrate are made subject to appeal not to this Court but to the Commissioner. It is, however, urged that the order is in excess of the jurisdiction conferred by the section and this Court has the same power of revision as it has in respect of orders purporting to be made under sections 143 and 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code but in excess of the powers conferred by those sections.

Now it must be admitted that the order made by the District Magistrate is not an order which the section empowers him to make. The procedure enjoined by the section is that he should first take temporary possession of the place which is the subject of the dispute, and then by virtue of that possession make orders excluding certain persons or allowing access to certain other persons. He has no jurisdiction to eject any person without first taking temporary possession himself and his order of ejection or exclusion would only operate for the period of his temporary possession. Here the Magistrate has not taken possession and is, therefore, not authorized to eject the applicant, and secondly, he has put no term upon his order of ejection to indicate that it was to operate temporarily. This is a serious prejudice to the applicant, for it casts upon her the onus of resort to the Civil Court. This would not have been the case if the District Magistrate had taken a limited period of possession, say, two months, and excluded her for that period only in order to give the Panchayet an opportunity of recourse to the Civil Court.

This would have been sufficient reason to justify our interference in revision if the order had been made under section 143 or 144, Criminal Procedure Code, for then it would be the order of an inferior Court. But the orders being under section 43 of the Bombay District Police Act are not orders of an inferior Court and we, therefore, are unable to interfere in revision even though we think them to be ultra vires.

The applicant has a remedy under section 13 (2) and section 50 by petition to the Commissioner.

Probably the District Magistrate may think it advisable to amend his order and bring it in accord with the terms of section 43 of the Bombay District Police Act and with this remark we can do nothing further but reject the application.

Application rejected.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act I of 1898), ss. 125, 435, 438—Revision—Concurrent power of High Court with subordinate Courts—Procedure.

In cases where the High Court has concurrent revisional jurisdiction with a subordinate Court, the aggrieved party should in the first instance seek his remedy before the subordinate Court. [p. 398, col. 1.]

There is no ground for holding that the revisional jurisdiction of a Sessions Judge or of a District Magistrate under sections 435 and 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code is in any way trenchanted upon by the provisions of section 125 of the Code. [p. 398, col. 2.]

The jurisdiction of a Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate under section 435 of the Criminal Procedure Code is concurrent with that of the High Court, even where the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate cannot pass a formal order but can only refer the matter to the High Court under section 438 of the Code. Criminal revision from an order of the Deputy Magistrate, Purneah, dated the 3rd October 1917

Mr. Hasan Imam (with him Babu Lal Mohan Ganguly), for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner, Bipin Bihari Mukherji, has been bound down by Mr. E. A. Guest, Deputy Magistrate of Purnea, under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to keep the peace for a period of one year and in default to undergo simple imprisonment for that period.

The learned Assistant Government Advocate has raised a preliminary point objecting to the hearing of this petition by us. The ground of objection taken by him is that the petitioner had a remedy under section 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and should have applied to the District Magistrate of Purnea for cancelling the order passed by Mr. Guest. He relies on two decisions of the Allahabad High Court given by Knox, J. [Emperor v. Abdur Rahim (1) and the case cited therein No. 114 of 1905.]

The learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the petitioner resists this contention, on the ground that the powers exercisable by a District Magistrate under section 125 of the Code are within his original jurisdiction and although this is the section on which the two Allahabad cases have rested, yet there is a point of principle involved in that the Calcutta rulings as well as other rulings of the Allahabad and Bombay High Courts have allowed such a preliminary objection to prevail only in cases where the jurisdiction of the High Court was concurrent with the revisional jurisdiction of subordinate Courts and that, therefore, the rulings of the High Courts of Calcutta, Bombay and Allahabad, except the two rulings given by Knox, J., do not support the view that section 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is a section that can be allowed to stand in the way of the hearing of the petition by this Court. The learned Counsel on behalf of the petitioner also contends that the dictum laid down by Knox, J., is by a single Judge and unless there is a decision of a Divisional Bench holding section 125 of the Code as a ground of objection we should not refuse to entertain the application before us.

In Musan Rai v. Birich Roy (2) a Division Bench of this Court has held that in cases where the High Court has concurrent revisional jurisdiction with a subordinate Court, the aggrieved party should in the first instance seek his remedy before the subordinate Court. In this view it would appear that the High Courts of Patna, Calcutta, Allahabad and Bombay are in full agreement: vide Bhuyan Abdus Sobhan Khan, In re (3), Shafaqatullah v. Wali Ahmad Khan (4), Emperor v. Kali Charan (5), Queen-Empress v. Chagan Dayaram (6). Even if it be conceded that the two decisions given by Knox, J., are in excess of the principle laid down in the other decisions, the preliminary objection taken by the learned Assistant Government Advocate must prevail, inasmuch as the revisional jurisdiction of this Court under section 435 of the Code is shared by the subordinate authorities and there is nothing to show that the Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate of Purnea are precluded from dealing with the present case. The jurisdiction of the Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate is concurrent with that of the High Court, even where they could not pass formal orders but only could refer to the High Court under section 438—(Queen-Empress v. Reolah (7) and Bhuyan Abdus Sobhan Khan, In re (3)).

The learned Counsel on behalf of the petitioner contends that as a matter of practice cases under section 107 of the Code are generally dealt with by the District Magistrate under section 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. This may be so, and probably it is due to the fact that acting under section 125 the District Magistrate may himself deal with a case like this without referring it for orders to the High Court under section 438, but this is no ground for holding that the revisional jurisdiction of a Sessions Judge or a District Magistrate under sections 435 and 438 of the Code is in any way trenching upon by the provisions of section 125. It is evident, therefore, that the application before us is one with reference to which the revisional power of the Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate of Purnea is exercisable. There is nothing, therefore, to distinguish the present case from the principles laid down in the decisions of the four High Courts referred to above.

With these remarks the petition is rejected.

*Workman's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1859),
s. 1—Magistrate of Police, meaning of—Jurisdiction—Interpretation of Statutes.*

The term "a Magistrate of Police" in section 1 of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act must be limited to a Magistrate in the territorial limits of whose jurisdiction the employer resides or carries on business. [p. 400, col. 1.]

There is nothing in section 1 of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act which gives special jurisdiction to a Magistrate, within whose jurisdiction the contract was made or the advance received, to try an offence under the Act committed beyond his jurisdiction. [p. 400, col. 1.]

Both under the Common Law of England and under the Criminal Procedure Code no Court, unless expressly authorised by Statute, can try any offences other than those committed within the area of its jurisdiction. [p. 400, cols. 1 & 2.]

It must always be presumed that the Legislature does not intend to make any alteration in the law beyond what it explicitly declares, either in express terms or by implication, or in other words beyond the immediate scope and object of the Statute. In all general matters beyond, the law remains undisturbed. It is in the highest degree improbable that the Legislature would overthrow fundamental principles or depart from the general system of law without expressing its intention with irresistible clearness. [p. 400, col. 1.]

Revision against the order of the City Magistrate, Sukkur.

Mr. Srikishendas, for the Applicant.

Mr. E. Raymond, Public Prosecutor for Sind, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

CROUCH, A. J. C.—This is an application under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, to revise an order of the City Magistrate, Sukkur, dismissing a complaint filed under the Workman's Breach of Contract Act.

The contract was made and the advance was received in Sukkur; the parties are British Indian subjects residing in the Sukkur district; the work was to be performed in Khairpur. The Magistrate held that he had no jurisdiction as the work was to be performed outside British India.

Mr. Srikishendas has appeared for the applicant and contends that the Magistrate, having jurisdiction in the place where the complainant resided and carried on his business and where the contract was made, could take cognizance of the case even though the work was to be performed outside British India. He relied on Ali Mohamed v. Emperor (1) and Lal Mohan Chowbey v. Hari Charan Das Bairagi (2).

Omitting words that have no importance for our present purpose, section 1 of the Act runs as follows:—

"When any workman shall have received from any employer, resident or carrying on business in any presidency town, an advance of money on account of any work which he shall have contracted to perform, if such workman shall wilfully and without lawful or reasonable excuse neglect or refuse to perform such work, such employer may complain to a Magistrate of Police, and the Magistrate shall thereupon issue a summons or a warrant for bringing before him such workman and shall hear and determine the case."

It is clear that the offence with which the Magistrate is to deal is that of "wilfully neglecting or refusing to perform the work undertaken." This is brought out even more clearly by the preamble to the Act, which recites that "it is just and proper that persons guilty of such fraudulent breach of contract should be subject to punishment." The effect of the Act was to make breach of contract in certain cases punishable as a crime.

By section 3 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, it was declared that in every enactment passed before that Code came into force, the expression "Magistrate of Police" should be deemed to mean "Presidency Magistrate." By section 19 of that Code, and section 20 of Act V of 1898, a Presidency Magistrate exercises jurisdiction in all places within the presidency town for which he is appointed.

Now, it must always be presumed that the Legislature does not intend to make any alteration in the law beyond what it explicitly declares either in express terms or by implication, or in other words, beyond the immediate scope and object of the Statute. In all general matters beyond, the law remains undisturbed. It is in the highest degree improbable that the Legislature would overthrow fundamental principles, or depart from the general system of law, without expressing its intention with irresistible clearness.* Hence we must limit the term "a Magistrate of Police" or "Presidency Magistrate" to a Magistrate in the territorial limits of whose jurisdiction the employer resides or carries on business. For the right of the employer to lodge the complaint is conferred by the fact of his having his residence or place of business in a certain place; and the Magistrate has special jurisdiction because he is appointed for that place. There is nothing in the section which gives special jurisdiction to a Magistrate in the place where the advance was received or the contract was made, and both under the Common Law and under the Criminal Procedure Code, no Court, unless expressly authorised by Statute, can try any crimes other than those committed within the area of its jurisdiction. The offence created by the section could, under the ordinary law, be tried by any Court having jurisdiction in the place where it was committed, that is, where the work had to be carried out.

Under the Common Law of England, the exercise of criminal jurisdiction was limited to crimes committed within the limits of England and its ports and harbours. The punishment of offences is the special province of the Sovereign within whose territory they are committed, and this general principle is recognised in the Indian Penal Code (sections 1—3). It cannot be assumed that the Legislature intended to override this fundamental principle of English criminal procedure in the absence of any indication of such intention. I am of opinion, therefore, that the lower Court acted rightly in acquitting the accused.

The case of Ali Mohamed v. Emperor (1) merely decides that residence and carrying on business within the area to which the Act has been extended confers a right to lodge a complaint before the nearest Magistrate empowered in that area. The decision followed Lal Mohan Choubey v. Hari Charan Das Bairagi (2). In that case, the defendant had entered into a contract with the complainant at Calcutta to do work in the North Western Provinces, and the question for decision was whether a Presidency Magistrate had jurisdiction in view of the fact that the breach had taken place outside his jurisdiction, and the decision was in the affirmative. The judgment reads as if the Court considered that jurisdiction was conferred by the fact that the contract had been made in Calcutta, but it may be inferred from the report that complainant had his place of business in Calcutta. The decision forms no authority whatever for contending that a Magistrate can deal with a breach of contract committed outside British India.

I would reject the application.

HAYWARD, A. J. C.—I concur. The jurisdiction is prima facie local. No authority has been advanced for extending the scope of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act beyond British India. Offences thereunder are not offences within the meaning of sections 4 (1) and 40, Indian Penal Code.

Application rejected.

(Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 62, 63, 73—Contract—Novation—Debt, agreement for payment of, at new place—Cause of action—Jurisdiction—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 21, applicability of—Interest Act (XXXII of 1839)—Money due on accounts—Interest, claim for, as damages, in absence of agreement, legality of.

Plaintiff and 2nd defendant were partners. First defendant received Rs. 2,500 as an advance from 2nd defendant, promising to supply cotton at Palladam within the jurisdiction of the Tirupur Munsif's Court. As the 1st defendant failed to supply the cotton or to return the advance plaintiff and 1st defendant looked into the accounts, and 1st defendant's liability was fixed at Rs. 2,000 and it was agreed that this liability should be discharged by the 1st defendant sending cotton to Virudupatti within the jurisdiction of the Satur Munsif's Court, to be sold by the plaintiff's man who should realize the Rs. 2,000 due by 1st defendant from the sale-proceeds. Plaintiff filed a suit in the Satur District Munsif's Court on 1st defendant's default and also claimed interest by way of damages:

Held, that interest could not be claimed as compensation under section 73 of the Contract Act. [p. 403, col. 2.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—The new agreement to pay the amount due at Virudupatti was a novation of the original contract within the meaning of section 62 of the Contract Act and the Satur Munsif's Court had jurisdiction to try the suit. [p. 402, col. 1.]

Per Phillips, J.—The agreement was itself a new one and in supersession of the old one and was not a mere agreement to pay a debt at a place other than that mentioned in the original agreement and the cause of action, therefore, arose within the jurisdiction of the Court of the District Munsif of Satur. [p. 403, col. 2.]

Quere—Whether, even where the question is one affecting jurisdiction, failure of justice must be shown to justify the interference of an Appellate Court under section 21, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 403, col. 1.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—A new contract changing the place of performance falls under section 62 of the Contract Act and no independent consideration is necessary to validate the same. [p. 402, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The facts are shortly as follows. The 1st defendant obtained Rs. 2,500 at Palladam within the jurisdiction of the District Munsif's Court of Tirupur in the Coimbatore District (1st defendant also residing in that district) promising to supply cotton to the 2nd defendant at Palladam itself. The 2nd defendant had a partner (plaintiff) living at Virudupatti within the jurisdiction of the District Munsif's Court of Satur in the Ramnad District. The 2nd defendant's duty was to advance partnership moneys to customers and receive cotton at Palladam from the customers to whom advances had been made and to send on the cotton to Virudupatti. Towards the Rs. 2,500 advanced, the 1st defendant gave 6 pothies of cotton worth Rs. 525 at Palladam, but the 6 pothies were returned to him at Palladam itself as he himself promised to send it on direct to Virudupatti instead of 2nd defendant sending it on to Virudupatti.

This was on 10th October 1910. A sum of Rs. 1-15-6 besides this Rs. 2,500 seems also to have been due by 1st defendant to the plaintiff's firm.

The 1st defendant did not send the 6 pothies to Virudupatti nor did he supply cotton for the remaining Rs. 1,975. So he owed Rs. 2,501-15-6 on accounts to the partnership firm, out of which he paid to the 2nd defendant Rs. 501-15-6 sometime afterwards and owed a balance of Rs. 2,000 in April 1911.

The plaintiff and the 1st defendant met at Virudupatti on 14th April 1911, looked into accounts and found Rs. 2,000 due by the 1st defendant to the firm of the plaintiff and the 2nd defendant. The 1st defendant then promised to pay the Rs. 2,000 to the plaintiff at Virudupatti through the 1st defendant's customer P. W. No. 2. The suit was brought in the Satur District Munsif's Court on this promise made on 14th April 1911 by the 1st defendant to pay at Virudupatti the Rs. 2,000. A preliminary question of jurisdiction was raised by Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar arguing for the 1st defendant (appellant). The argument was that, because the contract as first entered into was to supply cotton to the 2nd defendant at Palladam, the cause of action arose at Palladam within the jurisdiction of the District Munsif's Court of Tirupur in October 1910 and that therefore no new cause of action could arise at Virudupatti merely by reason of the subsequent promise made at Virudupatti to pay the sum of Rs. 2,000 due under the contract at Virudupatti and hence the Satur District Munsif's Court had no jurisdiction. Reliance is placed for this contention on Bunseedhur v. Government of Bengal (1) and Seshagiri Row v. Nawab Askur Jung Aftal Dowlah Mushral Mulk (2). The case of Bunseedhur v. Government of Bengal (1) was decided in 1871 before the Indian Contract Act came into force. As regards Seshagiri Row v. Nawab Askur Jung Aftal Dowlah Mushral Mulk (2), the Indian Government Act, section 62, has not been referred to in that case. The facts there were that according to the original contract payment was to be made by the defendant living in Hyderabad for work done at Hyderabad for the plaintiff by the plaintiff. The plaintiff alleged that after the work had been done, the defendant agreed to pay in Madras the remuneration due to the plaintiff. A great mass of witnesses whom the Court would have had to examine in that case were residents of Hyderabad and the balance of convenience was in favour of the suit being tried in Hyderabad. Moore, J., dismissed the application under Article 12 of the Letters Patent for leave to institute a suit in the Madras High Court Original Side on account of the above reasons of convenience. The learned Chief Justice and Miller, J., while upholding the order of Moore, J., on that ground also added the dictum that there was no consideration for the promise to pay in Madras, that there was, therefore, no new legal contract to pay at Madras in substitution of the original contract and hence no part of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction. As I said, Contract Act, section 62, is not referred to in the judgment. That section says: "If the parties to a contract agree to substitute a new contract for it, or to rescind or alter it, the original contract need not be performed." Of course this section is subject to the provision of the Indian Evidence Act (section 92) forbidding the admission of oral evidence to contradict or vary written agreements but where the original contract and the subsequent contract are both oral, I do not see that section 62 of the Contract Act requires any further consideration for the validity of the substituted contract than the putting an end to the obligation under the original contract. It has been held that under section 63 of the same Contract Act no consideration is necessary for extending the time for performance or for accepting any satisfaction by the promisee, though under the English Law the question of consideration comes in respect of the matters mentioned in section 63 of the Indian Contract Act (see Leake on Contract, pages 623 24). If there is a new oral contract to have the place of performance changed, I think, it falls under section 62 and no independent consideration is necessary to validate the same. I, therefore, respectfully dissent from the dictum in Seshagiri Row v. Nawab Askur Jung Aftal Dowlah Mushral Mulk (2), the decision in which can be supported on the other grounds mentioned in it. The English case of Baird v. Bell (3) is irrelevant, as we are governed by the Statute Law enacted in the Indian Contract Act. In the above view it is unnecessary for me to consider whether the new section 21 in the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 cures the defect of territorial jurisdiction assuming such a defect to exist. I might, however, shortly state that the argument of Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar that section 21 only applies to cases referred to in section 18, clause 2, is not acceptable to me as at present advised. Section 21 follows sections 16 to 20, of which sections 16, 17, 19 and 20 refer to territorial causes of action generally. There is also an observation in Sethruckerla Rama Chhaddra v. Maharaja of Jeypore (4) upholding my above view. Section 99 (corresponding to old section 578) uses the negative words, "that no decree shall be reversed on account of irregularities not affecting the jurisdiction of the Court," but this cannot, I think, override the plain language of section 21 that even when the question is one affecting the jurisdiction, failure of justice must be shown to justify the interference of an Appellate Court. However, as I said, it is unnecessary for me to express a final opinion on this point in this case.

The next question argued for the appellant was that the defendant was not afforded sufficient opportunity to adduce all his evidence in respect of the discharge by payment to the 2nd defendant, and though there is an affidavit in support of this contention, it is met by a counter-affidavit on the respondent's side. This contention is, therefore, also rejected. On the question of interest the case of Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi (5) quoted for the respondent was a case of dower-debt governed by Muhammadan Law and the equitable principles recognised in the Muhammadan Law were applied by the Privy Council on the question of awarding compensation in the shape of interest. I, therefore, agree with my learned brother that the claim for interest should be disallowed and that in other respects the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

PHILLIPS, J.—The agreement set out in the plaint has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge to be true and is as follows:—It was found that the 1st defendant owed the firm in which plaintiff and 2nd defendant were partners Rs. 1,976-15-6 and had also to supply 6 pothies of cotton. It was then agreed that 1st defendant's total liability should be Rs. 2,500. Plaintiff accepted 1st defendant's contention that he had paid Rs. 500 to 2nd defendant and it was then agreed that the 1st defendant should pay the balance of Rs. 2,000 by sending cotton to Virudupatti to be sold by plaintiff's 2nd witness, who should then pay plaintiff Rs. 2,000. It appears to me that this was a new agreement entered into between 1st defendant and plaintiff on behalf of his firm, and was in supersession of the old agreement between the parties, and was not a mere promise to pay a debt at a place other than that mentioned in the original agreement. In this view the decision in Seshagiri Row v. Nawab Askur Jung Afzal Dowlah Mushral Mulik (2) is inapplicable to this case, nor is it necessary to decide whether section 21, Civil Procedure Code, is applicable as the District Munsif had jurisdiction to try the suit. After considering the affidavits now filed, I do not think that any evidence was shut out by the District Munsif and consequently 1st defendant is not entitled to adduce further evidence.

On the question of interest, I do not think the Subordinate Judge is right. No interest can be claimed under the Interest Act and it was held in Kamalammal v. Peeru Meera Levvai Rowthen (6) that interest in such cases cannot be claimed by way of damages under section 73 of the Contract Act.

In Hamira Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi (5) interest was allowed by way of damages on equitable considerations in that case in which the circumstances were peculiar, and I do not think that the Judicial Committee intended to dissent from their prior decision in Ganesh Bakhsh v. Harihar Bakhsh (7) where it was held that the Interest Act applied, when it was not a case of damages for breach of contract. Following Kamalammal Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res-judicata in execution proceedings—Objection not taken at one stage, whether can be taken at later stage—Bengal Court of Wards Act (IX B. C. of 1879), s. 54—Notice, service of—Procedure.

An objection that a decree is barred by limitation cannot be taken in an execution proceeding if it was not taken in a previous execution proceeding when it could and should have been raised, provided the judgment-debtor had been properly served with notice of execution in the previous proceeding. The objection, for instance, would not be res judicata as against a judgment-debtor who was a Ward of Court and who was not properly served with notice of the previous proceeding as required by section 54 of the Bengal Court of Wards Act.

Section 54 of the Bengal Court of Wards Act requires that notices should be served upon the Manager of a Ward's estate through the Collector and any notice served otherwise is void.

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Chapra, dated the 10th April 1915.

JUDGMENT.—In these two cases the Bettiah Raj and certain ryots of the Bettiah Raj are aggrieved by an order of the Subordinate Judge of Chapra enforcing against them two decrees, which are alleged to be barred by limitation. The decrees are said by the Court below to be enforceable for the reason that the order passed by the Court on the 30th June 1914 was an adjudication that the decrees were capable of execution. The objections now taken by the appellants were not then taken, and, therefore, the application of the law of limitation is res judicata inasmuch as the question should and could have been raised in the prior proceedings. On appeal from this decision a Divisional Bench of this Court remanded the case for findings as to whether certain parties were properly served with notices. It has been found by the lower Court that the notices on the tenants were properly served. It must, therefore, be held that the decision in the previous application for execution is binding upon them and they cannot now raise an objection that the decree is barred by limitation. But with regard to the appellant Maharani, it is clear that the decision of the former application was wrongly made against her. The Maharani is a ward. It must be shown that notice was served upon her in accordance with the provisions of section 54 of Act IX of 1879. The notice was served directly upon Mr. Laurie, the Assistant Manager of the Bettiah Raj, resident in Chapra. We required evidence to be taken as to what authority Mr. Laurie had to receive the notice direct instead of receiving it through the Collector. It has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge that Mr. Laurie had an implied authority to receive notices, the authority apparently being conveyed to him by a careless habit contracted by himself. We cannot substitute for a strict rule of law a careless habit. The law requires that notices be served upon the Manager of the Ward's estate through Collector and any notice served otherwise is void. There was no real service of notice in the previous application against judgment-debtor No. 1. Therefore the decisions in those prior proceedings are not res judicata against her. The proceedings are now obviously barred by limitation. The appeal by the appellant Maharani must be decreed and the application for execution of the decree against her refused as barred by limitation. We make no order as to costs in the appeal of the tenant-appellants. The appellant Maharani will receive the costs of this hearing in this Court and the Courts below. Hearing-fee in this Court four gold mohurs.

Punjab Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1887), s. 111—Partition proceedings—Consent of joint owners—Mortgagee, consent of, necessity of.

A partition effected with the consent of the joint owners of the land is not invalidated by reason of the lack of consent of the mortgagee of an undivided share, and such a mortgagee has no claim to be made a party to the partition proceedings. [p. 406, col. 1.]

A mortgagee with possession of an undivided share in joint property has no right as such to intervene in partition proceedings, or to be a party to them, except when the property to be partitioned is a tenancy of which he is technically the landlord, that is to say, the person under whom the tenants hold land and to whom the tenants are, or would be but for a special contract, liable to pay rent. [p. 405, col. 2.]

A mortgagee of an undivided share in joint property, alleging injury to his interest by the collusive conduct of his mortgagor in partition proceedings, can claim his remedy by regular suit in the Civil Courts. A dispute of this character does not come within the functions of a Revenue Officer dealing with a partition under the Land Revenue Act. [p. 405, col. 2; p. 406 col. 1.]

Revision from the order of the Commissioner, Multan, dated the 19th June 1917.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Durga Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—I have heard Counsel for both the parties. The partition as effected is admittedly not in accordance with the sanctioned mode of partition. On the other hand, it is admitted before me that the allegation in clause (b) of the third ground of revision is not in accordance with fact. The actual mode differs from the sanctioned mode in this, that lots were not cast for the portions assigned to each, but each co-sharer took such land as he agreed to take. The actual partition was in effect a partition authoritatively made in accordance with the consent of the co-sharers. The applicant objects that, as mortgagee, with possession of an undivided share, he was entitled to be treated as a party to the partition proceedings, and that those proceedings are irregular because he did not consent to the departure from the sanctioned mode.

A mortgagee with possession is a landowner within the meaning of the Land Revenue Act, (section 3 (2)). But the Act does not employ the expression "landowner" in determining who are the persons who have a right to apply for partition. The words of section 111 are: "Any joint owner of land, or any joint tenant of a tenancy in which a right of occupancy subsists." In the remainder of the Chapter on partition the expressions "owner," "joint owner," "co-sharer" are in various passages employed, and there is a provision that, on an application for the partition of a tenancy, the objection of the "landlord" (which includes a mortgagee with possession) may be a sufficient reason for absolute disallowance. The word "landowner" only occurs twice in the Chapter; once in section 125, which does not deal with partition but with periodical redistribution of land in an estate which is subject to that custom; and once in section 110, where it is provided that a partition shall not in ordinary course affect the joint liability for the land revenue. There is every indication of the precise and careful use of language throughout the Chapter, and it does not appear to be the intention of the framers of the Act to recognise the claim of a mortgagee with possession, as such, to intervene in partition proceedings, or to be a party to them, except when the property to be partitioned is a tenancy of which he is technically the "landlord," that is to say, the person under whom the tenants hold land and to whom the tenants are, or would be but for a special contract, liable to pay rent.

In the present case it is alleged by the mortgagee that the mortgagors have colluded with the other co-sharers to injure him, and, with this object, have accepted as their share land having inferior advantages in respect to irrigation. It is not alleged that, by reason of this supposed collusion, the land which has fallen to the share of the mortgagors is of less value than the amount of the mortgage debt. But a mortgagee, alleging injury to his interest by the collusive proceedings of his mortgagor, can claim his remedy by regular suit in the Civil Courts. A dispute of this character does not come within the functions of a Revenue Officer dealing with a partition under the Land Revenue Act.

The partition effected in this case with the consent of the joint owners of the land is not invalidated by reason of the lack of the mortgagee's consent and the mortgagee had no claim to be made a party to the partition proceedings.

Revision rejected. The applicant to pay the respondent's costs in these proceedings.

Revision rejected.

SECOND CIVIL APPEALS NOS. 1788 TO 1799 OF 1916.

RESPONDENT.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), s. 26—Madras Rent Recovery Act (VIII of 1865), s. 11—Landlord and tenant—Faisal rate, presumption of, as proper rate of rent—Contract to receive lower rate by prior landholder, whether binds successor—Decision in favour of reduced rate in suit by previous landholder, whether res judicata in suit for faisal rate by successor—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11.

Though the provisions of section 11 of the repealed Madras Act VIII of 1865 are not re-enacted in the Madras Estates Land Act there is a presumption that the faisal rate fixed by Government is the proper rent that can be levied on the land. [p. 406, col. 2; p. 408, col. 1.]

A contract between a landholder and a tenant for payment of a favourable rate of rent will not, except in cases specified in section 26 (1) of the Madras Estates Land Act, bind the successor-in-title of the landholder who can enforce the faisal rate or the rate in force prior to such contract. [p. 407, col. 1.]

Per Phillips, J.—A decision of Court negating a landholder's right to levy faisal rate and upholding a contract between him and his tenant for payment of reduced rent will not be res judicata in a suit by the landholder's successors to enforce the original rate, as under section 26 (3) of the Madras Estates

Land Act, a special privilege is conferred on the successor to a landholder, not possessed by the original landholder himself, i. e., the right to enhance an unduly low rate of rent agreed to by the latter. [p. 407, col. 2.]

Per Bakewell, J.—The prior decision will not operate as res judicata, unless it is shown that the plaintiffs in that suit had an absolute interest in the property, in order that they might be held to be the predecessors-in-title of the landholder seeking to enforce the original rate in the subsequent suit. [p. 408, col. 1.]

Second appeals against the decrees of the Court of the District Judge, Trichinopoly, in Appeal Suits Nos. 431 to 442 of 1915, preferred against decrees of the Court of the Deputy Collector of Namakkal Division, in Original Suits Nos. 5 to 16 of 1915.

JUDGMENT.

PHILLIPS, J.—This is a rent suit and the point for determination is the amount of rent payable by plaintiff to defendant. Prior to 1859 a faisal rate was fixed on the land by Government, but admittedly plaintiff has for many years, certainly for more than 35 and possibly for 40 years, been paying a lower rate called in the muchilika the jamabandi rate. In the muchilika the faisal rate is also mentioned and the road cess payable is calculated on it. It has not been proved that the jamabandi rate was in force prior to 1859 and consequently under section 11 of Act VIII of 1865 the proper rate payable on the land would be the faisal rate. This provision of the Rent Recovery Act (1865) is not reproduced in the Estates Land Act, 1908, and it is contended for the appellant-plaintiff that there is now no presumption that the faisal rate is the proper rate. Although there is no such presumption raised by the Statute, yet I think that the existence of a faisal rate is a very strong piece of evidence as to what the proper rate should be. The faisal rate is fixed by Government as the fair rental of the land, and upon the faisal rates the peshkush and cesses are calculated and consequently the faisal rate should ordinarily be taken as the proper rent that can be levied on the land, and we see that in Palani v.

KARUPPA GOUNDAN v. NARAYANA CHETTIAR.

Paramasiva (1) it was held that a purchaser at a revenue sale was prima facie entitled to demand the faisal rate, although the tenants pleaded a contract with the former landholder at a lower rate. In the present case we find the faisal rate specifically mentioned in the pattas and muchilikas, and the road cess payable by the tenant is calculated upon it. Notwithstanding the omission from the Estates Land Act of the provision in section 11 of Act VIII of 1865, I would hold that the faisal rate is the proper rate of rent for the land. This being so, is defendant entitled to charge that rate in spite of the contract between plaintiff and defendant's predecessor to charge lower rate? Under section 26 (3) of the Estates Land Act "Except as provided by sub-section (1) no rate of rent at which land may have been granted by a landholder shall be binding upon the person entitled to the rent after the lifetime of the landholder if such rate is lower than the lawful rate payable by the ryot before the date of the grant upon the land or upon land of similar description and with similar advantages in the neighbourhood." Unless therefore the lower rate has been granted to the tenant for some reason specified in clause (1) of the section, the lower rate is not binding on defendant. Plaintiff has failed to show that the lower rate was granted for any of the reasons specified in clause (1) and even if any presumption could be drawn that such reasons existed when the rent was originally reduced, plaintiff has failed to show that such reasons still exist. I, therefore, hold that the lower rate is not binding on defendant.

In some of the appeals connected with this one, a question of res judicata arises. There were formerly two mittadars of the suit estate, one of whom died. The surviving mittadar and the heir of the deceased mittadar filed suits in 1889 claiming rent at the faisal rate and in Second Appeal No. 400 of 1891 this Court made the following order:—"The plaintiff does not allege that the coule rates were terminated and that plaintiffs are now entitled under the original agreement to levy the faisal rates. The suit is not framed nor have issues been taken on any such cause of action. The plaintiffs simply claimed the faisal rates. The defendants answered that by contract presumable from uniform payment for 50 years they were entitled to pay other rates.

Both Courts have found that there is an implied contract to that effect.

The appeal fails and we dismiss it with costs."

From this it would appear that the then plaintiffs were not allowed to charge faisal rates, because a contract to pay lower rates had been found to exist by both the lower Courts. The question whether the then plaintiffs were entitled to enhance the existing favourable rate was not considered, because no such claim had been put forward in the plaint. The question is whether this decision as to the rate leviable is binding on the present defendant, and the answer depends upon whether the then plaintiffs were the predecessors-in-interest of the defendant. Undoubtedly, as mittadars, they were predecessors-in-interest of the present mittadar, but under section 23 (3) of the Estates Land Act, a special privilege is conferred on the successor to a landholder, not possessed by the original landholder himself, i. e., the right to enhance an unduly low rate of rent agreed to by the latter. In respect of this right of enhancement, defendant's claim is peculiar to himself and it cannot be said that the prior mittadars are persons 'under whom defendant claims, litigating under the same title.'

It is further contended that the plaintiffs in the suit of 1889 were the successors-in-interest of the landholders who granted the lower rate, and consequently defendant is in the same position as they were. The answer to this is that one of the former plaintiffs was himself a party to the favourable grant, and consequently could not claim the benefit of any privilege conferred by section 26 (3). I would, therefore, hold that the question is not res judicata.

In view of the above I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Second Appeals Nos. 1789 to 1799 follow.

MANINDRA CHANDRA NANDI v. SARABINDU RAY.

BAKEWELL, J.—I agree that the faisal rate must be presumed to be the proper rent and that the appellants have failed to rebut this presumption.

With regard to the question of res judicata I think that the appellant should have shown that the plaintiffs in the previous suit had an absolute interest in the property in order that they might be held to be the predecessors-in-title of the present defendant.

It is quite possible that those persons, the then landholders, had only a limited interest and that under section 26 (3) of the Madras Estates Land Act, a grant by them would not be binding upon the persons entitled to the rents after the lifetime of the landholder. In that case the present defendant would derive title from the successor of the landholders and would not be bound by the grant made by the latter. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Possession, suit for—Boundary dispute—Burden of proof—Appeal—Appellate Court dissatisfied with local enquiry—Procedure.

Where the defendant in a suit for recovery of possession of land, even where the question is a question of boundaries clearly shown, is found to have been in actual possession of the disputed area, the burden will be on the plaintiff to establish his title. [p. 409, col. 2.]

An Appellate Court is not bound in law to direct a fresh local investigation even where it is dissatisfied with the map and report of the Commissioner, appointed by the trial Court for a local enquiry. In such a case though it is open to the Appellate Court to send back the case for further enquiry, it does not commit any error of law if it decides the case on the evidence before it whether the decision thus arrived at is right or wrong (on questions of fact) is a question into which the High Court cannot enter in second appeal. [p. 409, col. 2.]

RICHARDSON, J.—The plaintiff in is the appellant in this appeal. The ^r (Advoc. between the parties relates to the ^r br ^r ar, for between two estates, that on the belonging to the plaintiff and the on the east belonging to the defendants. In the trial Court, the learned Subordinate Judge on a consideration of the evidence came to the conclusion that the bulk of the lands belonged to the plaintiff's estate. The Subordinate Judge made a decree in accordance with that finding. On appeal the learned District Judge took a different view and dismissed the suit.

The principal contention urged before us by Sir Rash Behary Ghose on behalf of the plaintiff, and the only contention with which we are called upon to deal, is that the learned District Judge erred in respect of the mode in which he dealt with the burden of proof. It appears that on behalf of the plaintiff the District Judge was referred to the principles laid down by the Privy Council in the case of Lukhi Narain Jagadeb v. Jodu Nath Deo (1). The principle, as it is stated by their Lordships, appears to be that in those cases where scientific accuracy in regard to boundaries cannot be attained and especially in cases where the disputed line of division runs between waste lands which have not been the subject of definite possession, the ordinary rule in a suit regarding the onus coming on the plaintiff has no application. The parties to the suit are in the position of counter-claimants and it is the duty of the defendant, as much as of the plaintiff, to aid the Court in ascertaining the true boundary. Referring to that case the learned District Judge says that the principle is only laid down in respect of boundaries in large areas of waste lands, and that in the present case the plaintiff has to shoulder the ordinary burden of proving his case. It is not, in my opinion, necessary to consider for the present purpose what, if any, limitation should be placed upon the principle as their Lordships stated it, a principle which when the evidence as to possession is equally balanced or unreliable is of great utility in those parts of the country where expert surveyors are not easily obtainable, and where boundaries may depend on the identification by evidence of trijunction points and so forth. Even if the learned District Judge be wrong in supposing that the principle applies only in regard to large areas of waste lands, his conclusion, though it may rest on a wrong ground, nevertheless seems to be right. It is clear that he had before him on the record the fact that the defendants against whom the suit was brought had been in possession for some years under an order of the Criminal Court made in accordance with the provisions of section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The learned Pleader for the defendants has gone so far as to argue, though the point was not apparently taken before the learned District Judge, that the present suit was brought beyond the period of limitation prescribed by Article 47 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act. Whether that is so or not may perhaps be doubtful and may depend on further questions of fact as to who were the parties who appeared or were represented in the proceedings before the Magistrate. That question not having been considered by the District Judge it would not be argued for us in second appeal to deal with it. It still remains, however, that the defendants were in possession under this order which was made in the year 1904, and they remained in possession till the date when the suit was brought in January 1910. Regard being had to the decision of the Privy Council in Dinomoni Chowdhurani v. Brojo

Mohini Chowdhurani (2) it seems clear that the principle stated in Lukhi Narain Jagadeb v. Jodu Nath Deo (1) must yield to the circumstances of the present case and that the burden of proof was on the plaintiff to show that the person in possession under the order of the Magistrate had no right to possession. Dinomoni Chowdhurani's case suggests that when the defendant in a suit for recovery of possession of land, even where the question is a question of boundaries clearly shown, is found to have been in actual possession of the disputed area, the burden will in that case come on the plaintiff to establish his title. Though, therefore, the learned District Judge may have given a wrong reason for his view that the burden of proof was on the plaintiff, that view seems to be correct in the circumstances of the present case. If the burden of proof is on the plaintiff, no ground exists in second appeal for disturbing the findings of fact at which the learned District Judge has arrived. He was entitled to deal with the report of the Amin appointed to make a local investigation. He was entitled to come to a conclusion on the evidence that the map prepared by the Amin did not represent the true boundary.

A complaint is made that if the District Judge was dissatisfied with the map and report of the Amin, he did not, as it is said he should have done, direct a fresh investigation. As to that, in the first place, it was not compulsory on the learned Judge to direct a fresh investigation and in the words used by the Privy Council in Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Secretary of State (3), while it was no doubt open to the District Judge to take that course of sending back the case for further enquiry, he committed no error of law in deciding, as he did, on the evidence before him whether he was right or wrong in the decision to which he came is not a question into which we can enter in second appeal. Moreover, from an observation to be found in the District Judge's judgment it appears that the plaintiff had an opportunity for further enquiry but he did not take advantage of it. The learned Judge says that the appellants before him, i. e., the defendants, were perfectly willing to abide by the revenue survey line if it were relaid by a competent surveyor but the respondent, that is, the plaintiff, would not accept this offer.

In the circumstances, in my opinion, this appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 25 of the Provincial Small Causes Court Acts.

In December 1912, a large consignment of molasses arrived in Karachi for the applicant, and, on being landed, were deposited in the Import Yard. He commenced to take delivery on the 7th January, but a very large number of the 10,000 odd baskets continued to remain in the Port Trust sheds for a considerable time after the expiration of the five free days allowed. Demurrage, at the ordinary rate, was demanded by the officers of the Trust and on the 13th January applicant paid Rs. 500 on protest. In response to his application for a return of the money the Secretary replied on the 8th March 1913 that he was not prepared to recommend a return of the money, and suggested an appeal to the Chairman. On the 9th May the Chairman wrote refusing to interfere, and mentioned that applicant might refer his grievance to the Board. On the 20th June 1913, the Board affirmed the decision of the Secretary and Chairman. On the 10th September 1913, applicant filed a suit in the Court of Small Causes claiming Rs. 500 and interest.

The only question dealt with in the judgment was, whether the suit was not time-barred under section 87 of the Karachi Port Trust Act. The Court held for reasons orally given that it was time-barred, and dismissed the suit.

Mr. Lobo contends that the word "person" in section 87 does not include the Board, and that the suit is not one for anything done or purporting to have been done in pursuance of the Karachi Port Trust Act, 1886. He suggests that section 88 deals with suits against the Board, and section 87 with those against individuals acting within the scope of the Act, and that the brief period of limitation prescribed by section 87 confers no special privilege on the Board.

Sections 87 and 88 were taken from section 87 of the Bombay Port Trust Act, 1879, the second paragraph of section 87 and the last one of section 88 being new. By section 3(3) of Bombay Act, III of 1886, which was in force when the Karachi Port Trust Act, VI of 1886, was passed, "person" is declared to include "a company or association or body of individuals whether incorporated or not," and there can be no doubt that "person" in section 87 technically includes, and was intended to include, the Board. Sections 87 and 88 do not distinguish suits against private individuals from suits against the Board, but section 87 deals with the limitation of suits against the Board or any servant or officer of the Board, and section 88 defines the responsibility of the Board for acts of their officers and servants. The same question was dealt with in the case of Frag Narain v. Karachi Port Trust (1) by Leggatt, A. J. C., and again by myself in Ralli Bros. v. The Asiatic Steam Navigation Company (2), and in each case it was held that section 87 had application to suits against the Board. No instance has been brought to our notice of the contrary view having been expressed.

The cause of action, if any, arose when the applicant paid the Rs. 500 under threat of having his goods detained. If the officers of the Board refused to deliver the goods without payment of the demurrage incurred, with the bona fide intention of acting in the performance of duties imposed by the Act, they would be entitled to the protection of section 87. It has not been suggested that they acted under improper motives or outside the scope of their duties.

Mr. Lobo has argued that the cause of action should be taken to have arisen in June 1913 when the Board refused to return the Rs. 500, but the refusal to return the money constituted no cause of action unless there was an agreement, express or implied, to return it, and such agreement is not alleged.

I would hold that the six months' limit applies and dismiss the application with costs.

Application dismissed with costs.

RESPONDENT.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 5—Tenure-holder or raiyat, test of—Area exceeding 100 bighas—

Presumption that tenant is tenure-holder—Purpose for which lease is granted—Cultivation by sub-lessee.

Fixity of rent is no criterion for determination of the question whether a person is a tenure-holder or a raiyat, for a tenure may be held at a fixed rent equally with a raiyat holding. [p. 413, col. 1.]

In determining the status of a tenant, viz. whether he is a tenure-holder or a raiyat, two elements have to be borne in mind, first, the purpose for which the land was acquired, and, secondly, the extent of the tenure or holding. [p. 413, col. 1.]

Defendant was assignee of a lease of over 100 bighas of land granted by plaintiff's predecessor for cultivation, without any restriction as to the agency to be employed in such cultivation:

Held, that under the circumstances of the case the presumption arising under sub-section (5) of section 5 of the Bengal Tenancy Act that the tenant was a tenure-holder and not a raiyat, since the area exceeded 100 bighas, was not rebutted by proof of the purpose for which the right of tenancy was originally acquired. [p. 413, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the Calcutta High Court (Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., and Asutosh Mookerjee, J.), dated July 11, 1913, reported as 27 Ind. Cas. 432, reversing a decree of Richardson, J.

FACTS are sufficiently stated in their Lordships' judgment. The sole question involved was whether the defendant-appellant was a "tenureholder" or a "raiya" within the terms of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885). Richardson, J., held he was a Raiyat: the Letters Patent Bench of the High Court, that he was a tenure holder. Hence this appeal.

Mr. De Gruyter, K. C. (with him Sir W. Garth), for the Appellant.—Act VIII of 1885 has a classification into tenure-holders, under-tenure-holders and Raiyats. The purpose for which the land was originally granted is the most important of all tests in determining whether a person is a Raiyat.

Durga Prasunno Ghose v. Kalidas Dut (1).

That case was before Act VIII of 1885, but it was followed in Laidley v. Gour Gobind Sarkar (2).

The primary purpose here was cultivation by hired labour. It is unlikely the tenant meant to become a tenure-holder, because if he were that, any person he put in would be a Raiyat and would have the rights of a Raiyat.

The presumption under section 5, sub-section 5, that a tenant of over 100 standard bighas is a tenure-holder prevailed in Gokul Mandar v. Pudmanund Singh (3), only because there was no evidence in that case that the purpose was to acquire Raiyat tenure.

This suit purports to be brought under section 106 of the Act. The Record of Rights was prepared under sections 101, 102 and 105 and it was decided after due notice to respondent that appellant was a settled Raiyat at a fixed rent. In the draft record he was shown as a tenure-holder, but he lodged an objection, which was decided in his favour. This suit has been brought only after final publication of the Record: it was then no longer maintainable. Section 106 only provides for disputes arising before final publication.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—That point was not taken in the Court below. It is undesirable the Board should entertain it.]

It does not follow that because a point has not been taken below it cannot be raised here.

[Their Lordships intimated that the present contention not being raised by appellant's case was not open.]

Sir Erle Richards, K. C., and Mr. O'Gorman, for the Respondents, were not called on.

JUDGMENT.

MR. AMEER ALI.—The sole question involved in this appeal is whether the defendant-appellant is a "tenure-holder" or raiya as defined in the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885).

The defendant holds over 250 acres of land in the village of Goyalbank, forming part of the plaintiff's Zemindari in the district of Cuttack, under a lease granted by the predecessor of the plaintiff in 1901 to one Gokulananda Chowdhury. In 1907 Gokulananda assigned the lease to the defendant.

The land covered by the lease became about the same time the subject of "Record of Rights" proceedings instituted by Government under Chapter X of the Act.

These proceedings are taken by the Revenue Authorities before special officers for the ascertainment and record of all rights connected with the land within the ambit of the enquiry. At the initial stage of the proceedings the defendant was entered as a "tenure-holder," but subsequently on his objection the Assistant Settlement Officer recorded him as "a settled raiya at a fixed rent."

The present suit has been brought under the provisions of section 106 on behalf of the Zemindar for rectification of the entry by recording the defendant as a "tenure-holder." The suit was first heard by the Settlement Officer, who upheld the plaintiff's contention as to the status of the defendant, and his decision was confirmed on appeal by the Special Judge of Cuttack. The defendant then preferred a second appeal to the High Court of Calcutta, which came for hearing before Richardson, J. The defendant renewed before that learned Judge his contention that under the terms of his lease he was entitled to be classed as a raiya. Richardson, J., accepted his contention and reversed the order of the Special Judge, the effect of which was that the entry in the Record of Rights remained as made by the Assistant Settlement Officer.

An appeal was thereupon preferred by the respondent under section 15 of the Letters Patent, which came on for hearing before two Judges of the High Court, Jenkins, C. J., and Mookerjee, J., who, differing from Richardson, J., held, in concurrence with the Settlement Officer and the Special Judge, that the defendant was a tenure-holder. They accordingly reversed the order of that learned Judge, and restored the decree of the lower Courts for the rectification of the entry in the Record of Rights.

The present appeal to His Majesty in Council, which forms the sixth stage of this litigation, is an indication not merely of the persistency of the defendant, but also of the valuable rights that are attached to his claim, for, if he be a tenure-holder, persons holding under him would have the status of *raiya*s and would be entitled to acquire, after a certain efflux of time, the right of occupancy under the Act. Whereas, if he be a raiya, those persons would only be *under-raiya*s, without the privileges or security afforded by the Act to *raiya*s.

For the purposes of the Tenancy Act, tenants are classed under three heads, viz., tenure-holders, *raiya*ts and *under-raiya*ts, that is to say, tenants holding, whether mediately or immediately, under *raiya*ts. *Raiya*ts, again, are divided into three sub-classes, i. e., (a) *raiya*ts holding at fixed rates, (b) occupancy *raiya*ts, and (c) non-occupancy *raiya*ts. The defendant has been entered as a settled *raiya*t at a fixed rent, evidently on the ground that under the lease the rent payable by him is permanently fixed. But it is to be observed that fixity of rent is no criterion for the determination of the point at issue, for a tenure may be held at a fixed rent equally with a *raiya*t holding. The question must, therefore, be decided on other considerations.

Sub-section (1) of section 5 defines a tenure-holder to mean:—

"Primarily a person who has acquired from a proprietor or from another tenure-holder a right to hold land for the purpose of collecting rents or bringing it under cultivation by establishing tenants on it, and includes also the successors-in-interest of persons who have acquired such a right."

And a *raiya*t is defined to mean:—

"Primarily a person who has acquired a right to hold land for the purpose of cultivating it by himself, or by members of his family or by hired servants, or with the aid of partners, and includes also the successors-in-interest of persons who have acquired such a right."

Sub-section (4) provides certain rules for determining whether a tenant is a "tenure-holder" or "*raiya*t." Clause (b) is important: it says: "The Court shall have regard to the purpose for which the right of tenancy was originally acquired." Sub-section (5) is equally important. It provides that where the area held by a tenant exceeds 100 standard bighas (a little over 33 acres) "the tenant shall be presumed to be a tenure-holder until the contrary is proved." In determining the status, therefore, of a tenant, viz., whether he is a tenure-holder or a *raiya*t, two elements have to be borne in mind, firstly, the purpose for which the land was acquired, and, secondly, the extent of the tenure or holding. A close examination of the definition clauses makes it quite obvious that both these elements are closely interrelated. The law assumes the *raiya*t to be the actual cultivator of the soil, either by his own labour or the labour of members of his family or by hired labourers and it assumes also that ordinarily a larger area than 100 bighas would make cultivation by the personal agency of the tenant improbable. The presumption provided in sub-section (5) of section 5 is founded on that hypothesis.

In the present case, the land held by the defendant amounts to more than 250 acres; the statutory presumption certainly applies to him. He seeks to rebut it by referring to the purpose for which the lease was granted. The terms of the document have been carefully examined by the Settlement Officer, the Special Judge, and the High Court. Their Lordships will, therefore, confine their remarks to its general features. It is an ordinary reclamation lease; it leases the land permanently to the lessee at a fixed rent to cultivate the same, after making it fit for cultivation at his own expense and by his own efforts. In other words, he is to reclaim the land at his own expense and bring it under cultivation. The sixth clause makes this quite clear. It says:—

"You shall, by reserving water and raising bundhs (on the land leased), make it fit for cultivation according to your will, and shall hold the same by cultivating it or having it cultivated, and you shall be competent to make such other arrangement or adopt such other convenient steps as you consider necessary for cultivating the same."

The employment of the agency for the cultivation is left entirely to the option of the lessee; the land was leased for cultivation, that is, for agricultural purposes, but the agency to be employed is to be determined by the lessee; he has the power to establish *raiya*ts or under-lease it to others or cultivate it himself, if he can. It cannot be said that the purpose is, primarily or otherwise, that the demised land should be cultivated by his personal agency. At the best, the lease may be said to be equivocal. In their Lordships' opinion, the High Court and the lower Courts were perfectly right to look to the attendant circumstances to judge of the purpose for which the lease was acquired and to determine the status of the defendant. Apart from the facts appearing in the lease to which the learned Judges of the High Court have referred as indicating that the land was being taken for purposes other than that of personal and direct cultivation as a raiyat, there is the outstanding circumstance that the land was leased to a man of means, who appears to be a resident of another place, for the purpose of reclamation and rendering fit for cultivation, the agency to be employed for carrying on the cultivation being left to his discretion.

Their Lordships think that the presumption under section 103B, on which the defendant relies, that an entry in a Record of Rights finally published "shall be presumed to be correct until it is proved by evidence to be incorrect," is fully rebutted by the circumstances to which the Courts in India have referred in arriving at the conclusion that the defendant was a tenure-holder and not a raiyat.

Their Lordships are of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed with costs and that they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.
